I welcome Industry Year 1986. I spent nearly 20 years in manufacturing industry and I have the honour to be associated with the industrial anti-counterfeiting group, as its adviser. I trained as an engineer and I worked on the drawing board for some years as a designer. Many of the problems which Industry Year 1986 is setting out to tackle are part of the cultural ethic of the United Kingdom. Wealth creators—for example, engineers and those who manage manufacturing and other industries — are somehow seen as lesser beings than those in the professions. That is sad. In Germany, I was called Herr Doktor Mills, in Italy, Ingegnere Mills, and in France, Ingenieur Mills. Those who knew of my profession in my home country thought that I was using spanners and hammers instead of drawingboard skills with my pen, which I hope brought some benefits to the company for which I worked.

Until we change that — my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science has tried in his committees with the Engineering Council to upgrade the wealth-creators — Industry Year 1986 will not be successful. This part of the multi-disciplinary or multi-occupation base is an ideal one in which to advance industry's role and society's attitude to it. I wish that more colleagues had come from the roots of manufacturing industry. Perhaps the House of Commons is too attractive to those in the professions. We can but hope—I think that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State who comes from industry agrees with me — for future Parliaments containing more manufacturing men and women.

We need a vast shift in the attitude of the country and the Opposition to profit. If Industry Year 1986 is to be successful in promoting understanding in society of industry's role, it must be genuinely accepted that profit is a good and honest motive so long as the profit is honest and good and cleanly and properly made. The creation of an enterprise culture demands the motive of profit. Companies that aim to profit properly and wholesomely will ensure our future in the manufacturing enterprises that we need. We need also a much higher standard of management. I deplore the way in which management standards declined in the 1960s. It is only in the past five years that British management has started to become sharp and professional. Marketing and professional skills are emerging to match those of the Americans and Japanese. This is matched by marvellous achievements in productivity by our companies, not the least of which is the Austin Rover group which covers the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Northfield and supplies much employment to my constituency of Meriden. The company's achievements in the car group and in the Land Rover group, which is partly in my constituency, have been an excellent example. To those companies which, in Industry Year 1986, would see the high interest rates policy employed by the Government as limiting, I say that wage settlements must be low as part of the macro-arguments aimed at achieving the right level of the pound, low inflation and success for Land Rover, Austin Rover, Talbot and the other companies that provide many jobs in my constituency.

I congratulate the Government on the extension of regional aid to the west midlands. So far, many thousands of pounds have been spent in my constituency, and I hope that that will continue during Industry Year 1986. I welcome the credit that my colleagues gave to those institutions in my constituency such as the national exhibition centre and the airport. I very much regret the redundancies that have been announced in my constituency at Castle Bromwich by the Austin Rover group and SP Tyres, which was formerly Dunlop. I am concerned about these redundancies and shall closely look into them.

Locally we have a striving and thriving promotion of Industry Year. Mr. Glover, who works for Massey-Ferguson as a senior director, is chairman of the Coventry and Warwickshire sub-region group which is planning excellent activities to promote the year, including video films and school and industry links. The Government have already established, through their technical and vocational initiatives in schools, the type of links that we used to see in technical schools and that which are important if our young people are to understand the joys and challenges of working in industry.

I welcome the extension of the young enterprise programme and the provision of a panel of speakers who can promote and talk knowledgeably about industry. This will further links not only with schools and industry but with higher education. This is imoportant for those at universities and polytechnics, such as the Lanchester polytechnic in Coventry, to establish the delights of working for industry.

[Mr. Mills]

During Industry Year 1986, there will be a commitment, which will continue, for major companies to provide specialist assistance and advice to smaller companies. There will be displays in Coventry, which my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State — the hon. Member for Coventry, South-West (Mr. Butcher)—and I represent. These proposals show that Coventry has done its bit under the chairmanship of Mr. Glover to ensure that Industry Year is well promoted. I hope that he does not forget the pressures that there are on the green belt around Coventry. My hon. Friend the Minister would not expect me to make a speech without mentioning briefly how appalling it would be in Industry Year 1986 if the many hundreds of acres of derelict land in the west midlands were not developed but, instead, the green fields between Coventry and Birmingham were unneccesarily despoiled. I hope that he will encourage the present initiative, and new initiatives, which will enable derelict land to be brought back into use.

We in the United Kingdom suffer from the cultural identity problem whereby we see wealth creators as less imoportant than others. That is partly because we had our industrial revolution last century. We struggled through the cycle of good economic fortune and recess to build our industrial foundation. We have had time, unfortunately, to forget how important wealth creators—engineers and others in industry—are. Newly developed countries are straight into their industrial revolution. With instant access to western technology their engineers suddenly become the most important people in the country. Their whole thrust in national economic terms is through the developing new industries. Their place in society, their role and their rewards are high.

We are competing with those countries on the basis of a relatively small domestic market which is why the establishement of the European Community is the single most important step towards establishing a large domestic market. We must foster that link. Part of the fostering of that link must be cross-European action against the illicit trade in counterfeit goods.

That is a subject upon which I have become knowledgeable because of my fascination with the many hundreds of thousands of jobs that our industry is losing. During Industry Year 1986 we must encourage the Government to act. I ask my hon. Friend to speak to the Minister of State at the Department of Trade and Industry about the points that I shall make briefly. We wish to see an end to the loss of those jobs from illicit counterfeit goods. They are identical in brand name, packaging and every other aspect except for quality to good British goods produced by big British names.

I want to see the Government introduce criminal penalties for industrial counterfeiting similar to those that exist in the United States. In a recent case, some counterfeiters of £7 million of perfume were arrested. They were acquitted because the law did not allow their conviction. I shall be happy to write to my hon. Friend because the time is short. It was a conspiracy under the Criminal Law Act 1977. The Government are reviewing the matter and it is most important that they introduce penalties that are sufficiently severe to deter that illicit trade.

The United States Counterfeit Act 1984 is a good model. It provides for five years' imprisonment for a second or subsequent offence of counterfeiting and fines of up to $5 million for a company. I should like to see such a measure introduced in the United Kingdom. I hope that the Government will soon respond to the recommendations in the Nicholson report.

In Industry Year 1986 it would be splendid if the European trade mark office were located in London. It is the last and most important European institution to be established. It will be talked about in Europe for many decades. It is vital to achieve that objective. I chair a committee that has been set up to promote the country's interest in that office. It has reported and identified a splendid site at the old boy's school at Blackfriar's bridge or, alternatively, in the borough of Harrow, should an outer London location be required.

I must apologise to my constituency interests in Coventry and Birmingham, but London is the Government's proposal. It is in the national interest that we shold have that most important European institution. In 1986, it will help to bring jobs and prosperity to our nation. The knock-on effect on jobs dependent upon that office will be considerable. I shall be grateful if the Minister will mention the matter to the Minister of State and to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to ensure that our bids against Munich, Paris and The Hague are successful.

It is about time that the world achieved, through GATT, a far better approach to the prevention of barriers to trade, the production and sale of illicit and counterfeit goods, and other matters. It will require a degree of determination that has not been shown, unfortunately, since 1979. It would be a superb initiative in 1986, as well as ensuring that we quickened the change in cultural attitudes towards industry in Britain, if we were to achieve better controls internationally on British trade—the furnace of trade—and better opportunities for our goods and our manufacturers throughout the world.

I hope that the debate will be taken seriously and that it will be given wide circulation, with great publicity for my hon. Friend the Member for Northfield in the national press. Unless Britain can re-establish the identity of the industry man—the engineer and the creator of wealth—as holding a desirable position in society, aspired to by young people in our schools and universities, the achievement of an industrial base, such as we had in the past, will be much slower. I wish Industry year 1986 every success.

2.6 pm

Mr. John Ryman (Blyth Valley): I congratulate the mover of the motion, the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King), on initiating what has been a good debate, although I was somewhat appalled at the nonchalant complacency of the Minister in dealing with certain aspects of the subject. I want to deal briefly with two specific matters. The first is the role of women in industry. The second is the disgraceful misuse by various companies, particularly international companies, of industrial grants and regional aid in the north-east of England.

I share the views expressed by other hon. Members that women have not been sufficiently encouraged to go into industry. The problem starts at school. The teaching in girls' schools of subjects such as science, which are of use in industry, lags far behind the teaching of science in boys' schools.

The daughter of a family that I know wanted to be an electronics engineer. She was very bright, with all the necessary O-levels and A-levels. When she applied for a university place she was told that there were only two universities at which she could study the subject — Churchill college, Cambridge, and another university — subject first to being accepted for sponsorship by a company. She was lucky enough to get sponsorship and to get a place at Cambridge, but many girls of that age are not able to do so, because the opportunities are very slight.

Women are the greatest untapped source of manpower in Britain, and it ill becomes us not to encourage them to enter industry and take a leading role. The Government have tremendous responsibility for the lack of provision of nursery places because of their asinine policy of squeezing local authorities and putting many obstacles in the way of women who wish to have useful and successful careers in industry.

With regard to regional grants, until the Government were elected in 1979, we had a fairly intelligent policy of special development area status for certain parts of the north east where, because of high unemployment, it was necessary to offer a 22·5 per cent. capital grant for moving new industries into the area to create jobs.

As soon as the Conservative Government were elected in 1979 — indeed, by July of that year — the then Secretary of State for Industry, who is now the Secretary of State for Education and Science—Heaven help us—announced the abolition of special development area status for Blyth valley in my constituency and various other parts of Northumberland and the north east. The result of that was chaotic. As notice was given when the facts had not been examined carefully, much of manufacturing industry in the north east was suddenly without the regional aid programme which it had been budgeting on for several years. Several companies had to reduce their apprenticeship programmes drastically because they relied on the regional aid programme for funding.

It is worse than that, because experience has shown that firms such as Ronson, Courtaulds and Dunlop, before it was taken over, accept and seek large regional grants. When they are in difficulty in other parts of the country, the money from the regional grant is then taken out of the north east to other parts of the country where there is no development area. That is clearly an abuse of public funds.

I have referred that to the Department of Trade and Industry on several occasions, but I have never had a satisfactory explanation or investigation. I have given the Secretary of State and the previous Secretary of State detailed facts about companies in the north east that are doing that. Courtaulds is one of the biggest culprits. It had a factory called Exquisite Knitwear in Cramlington and Ashington. It closed that factory, making many people redundant, and it took the machinery, that had been bought with regional aid money, to the south east of England and the Channel Islands. It was clearly not intended that that money should be spent on machinery in the south east or the Channel Islands.

Before Dunlop was taken over fairly recently, causing massive redundancies in the north east, it shipped some of its machinery bought with the regional aid money to South Africa. That is scandalous. When the facts are drawn to the attention of the Department of Trade and Industry I do not receive satisfactory replies. On one occasion, the Minister and the civil servant concerned asked me if I expected them to sit on the M1 watching to see if machinery was brought from the north east of England to the south.

There is insufficient monitoring by the Department of money spent for regional development. Grants and loans should be checked carefully. Courtaulds and Dunlop are two of the worst offenders, but a company called English Numbering Machines and various car component companies are also involved. The majority of those are international companies which are American-based. When they get into trouble, they throw hundreds, if not thousands, of men and women out of work in the north east, close factories and take the machinery out of the north east and ship it elsewhere.

There is a very strong case for an inquiry. The Government have pursued an asinine policy of regional aid in the teeth of the opposition and sensible advice that they have received from industrialists, the regional TUC and their own Department in Newcastle. The Department of Trade and Industry has a good regional office in Newcastle staffed by very experienced and able people. The Department in London has ignored its regional advice. That is a serious matter.

Time is short, and I do not wish to prolong my contribution because I know that other hon. Members wish to speak. But it is a scandal, among a wealth of pompous platitudes coming from the Minister, for him to ignore the serious problem of an abuse of regional aid by international companies that come to the north east for the money. They rape the area, and when there is the slightest difficulty in one of their factories in another part of England or abroad, they get out of the north east, throw hundreds of men and women out of jobs, and keep the money that has been advanced to them by the Government because they were working in the north east.

2.18 pm

Mr. Kenneth Warren (Hastings and Rye): I declare an interest as an aerospace engineer. I shall try to speak at a pace that will be applauded by those who also wish to take part in the debate, without being supersonic and not heard at all.

I welcome Industry Year and hope that the Government will commit themselves to it wholeheartedly. My experience of industry is that we must operate as a team. I hope that the Government will join the team because, without their help, industry will not get the success that it deserves if it can restore its competitiveness.

I know how difficult it is to carve out a share in the market, hold on to it, make a profit and maintain competitiveness. When I started on the shop floor as an apprentice, I wasted a couple of years of my life, which is often done in the House as well. It took a long time to convince those in charge that we were all in the game together and it's a case not of "them and us", but of all of us working together to try to achieve the competitiveness which, so far, has eluded too much of industry.

It is not a new problem — it has been going on throughout the 20th century. In the past 80 years we have lost over half the share of world exports of manufactured goods that we had originally to people who are not employing better technology or better management but who are looking after the competitiveness of their products. That competitiveness is a factor for the Government as well as for industry.

[Mr. Kenneth Warren]

In Industry Year 1986, I hope that the problems will be tackled by management. It is right and proper that those in industry should expect to receive good wages and salaries for the work that they do. It is not right and proper that management should pay workers for greater output than they achieve, because that leads to job losses and the unemployment that we have. We merely destroy our competitiveness by management's ineffectiveness and inaction. Neither is it right and proper that managers and directors should pay for increases far beyond the progress that they have achieved in the companies where they are responsible not only to their shareholders but to the workers whom they employ.

In Industry Year, the Government have a substantial part to play, rather than just mouthing words. These may be facts that I have tried to tell Ministers before, but I hope that in Industry Year the Government will pay attention once and for all, and do something about it. I refer first to public purchasing policy. There is no policy. The Government are the largest single customer in the whole of the United Kingdom for goods and services. Surely they can draw up a purchasing policy to give specifications not only to stimulate home production but to benefit exports overseas.

Secondly, I refer to the cost of industrial operations. The Government must not just say that rates and taxes are there to finance social services, which we all need. I hope that the Government will constantly and ruthlessly examine their costs of operating in the way that industry has to day-by-day to survive.

I welcome the substantial progress made by the nationalised industries, and I hope that they will play their part in Industry Year. I am delighted at the way in which Rolls-Royce and the twins in Northern Ireland—Short Brothers and Harland and Wolff—the British Steel Corporation and British Shipbuilders have made substantial progress over the past few years on a world competitive scale.

However, the Department of Trade and Industry should not just rest on the laurels of stimulating that achievement and getting in the right management at the top, but try to stimulate new technology. I know that my hon. Friend the Minister is deeply involved in that in his day-to-day work. Will he look at the timing and the way in which the stimulation takes place? The way in which new businesses should be stimulated changes as time goes by. It is no good putting cash into prosperous companies. In government, we must be more entrepreneurial and take the risk with the cash, putting it into companies that deserve the chance, which they would not get unless the Government were there to help.

I ask the Government to re-examine the real values of regional policy. The hon. Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Ryman) drew attention to asinine regional policy. It is asinine in my part of the country, in Hastings and Rye, where we have difficult employment problems. We cannot get regional aid, yet our enterprises that are struggling to make a profit are taxed to help competitors in other parts of the country. That is nonsense. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Bexhill and Battle (Mr. Wardle) would agree with that entirely. Some of the Government's regional policies are encouraging inward investment. For example, a foreign company in Scotland is to receive £180,000 for every job that it creates. That is also nonsense.

I hope that the debate will not just set the scene but begin the discussions that will take place in Industry Year, at a time when not enough people in the House are involved in wealth creation. With respect, there is an imbalance of those who are used to the consumption of wealth and how to distribute other people's money to other people.

I have the honour to be Chairman of the Select Committee on Trade and Industry. I hope that, in its report on tourism to be published in January, it will be able to identify new service industry opportunities. That is a nice trailer, but I hope that the Government will not hide behind the growth of the service sector and fail to recognise that it requires only energy and determination on their part to stimulate manufacturing.

The hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) talked about the Westland saga. I hope that the Government will examine how they participate in industrial restructuring. I understand that the Department of Trade and Industry is the sponsor Department for aerospace, but that the Ministry of Defence has invited Westland's competitors to restructure the company. Such an argument should not be going on in government and I hope that those in government who play Monopoly with companies understand that companies such as Westland are a major British engineering resource that deserve every assistance to survive.

That takes me back to public purchasing policy. Two thirds of the products of a company such as Westland come from a wide range of other companies in Britain such as Racal Electronics, General Electric Company, Ferranti and Smiths Industries. It is not just Yeovil but the whole country that is involved. I am a loyal supporter of the Government, but I do not think that they have got it right when it comes to understanding their role in restructuring.

We have had an interesting debate—it is especially interesting how speeches have got faster and shorter. We are welcoming the start of Industry Year. I hope that it will turn the tide of fortune for Britain's manufacturing industry.

2.21 pm

Mr. Mark Wolfson (Sevenoaks): I am mindful of the lack of time and the courteous brevity of my hon. Friend the Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Warren) and of the hon. Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Ryman). I shall try to follow their example.

I welcome Industry Year and the opportunity to speak today. I shall confine myself to that part of the motion which says:

"that the most talented people are again attracted to work in industry to secure its future".

The debate has been wide-ranging but I shall talk only about this matter, of which I have some experience.

It has already been said that Britain has to live by manufactured goods. There are no two ways about that. I do not buy the proposition that our manufacturing base will inevitably decline. I was delighted that my hon. Friend the Member for Hastings and Rye ended on that note.

There is an increasing divide between industries that are modern in outlook and those that are not. The gap between industries that are standing still and those that are moving forward is growing ever wider, and companies that believe in the future must accept that there is a divide which must be crossed. Making the leap takes real commitment. Change can sometimes be the responsibility of one person —a catalyst—but more often it is the responsibility of a whole team.

I worked for some years in the youth services department of the Industrial Society. One of my responsibilities was to run "challenge of industry" conferences in a wide range of sixth forms. Those conferences have since been developed and similar activities are carried out by other organisations. Their idea was to bring home to sixth formers the challenge presented by the management of people in industry and to combat reluctance to regard industry as an attractive career.

Why are the most talented youngsters uninterested in entering industry? First, there is a lack of understanding of what is involved. Secondly, they fear getting lost in large companies and believe that success will not be rewarded early. Thirdly, it still takes too long to attain major responsibility in many industrial careers. Fourthly, salaries are not good enough. That is especially relevant in terms of attracting people of the calibre of production engineers. It is also tied up with the problem of the status of those who work in industry. Yet those youngsters will be crucial to the future success of British industry.

As some hon. Members have said, industry is still regarded as culturally not necessarily the highest status career to pursue. That attitude must be changed. Above all, the picture of industry as not the most effective driving force in Britain, or the most successful part of British life, must be changed.

During Industry Year I hope that industry will do everything it can to publicise its successes and the difference between companies that are successful and those that are not. A recent survey conducted by the CBI revealed three extremely interesting points. In the 1980s, profitability, productivity and growth have moved forward dramatically in successful companies. The key factor perceived by the industrial managers who replied to the questionnaire was that successful management is the management of people. That ties in closely with attracting the most talented youngsters to the challenge which, in any industry, is the management of people. Those managers who replied rated people attributes as the key factor in whether management would be successful or unsuccessful.

The survey highlighted four essentials to good management: the ability to control costs; the ability to devolve responsibility; the need to pay more attention to customers, products and the motivation of staff; and communication within the company, which is vital if the challenges of foreign competition are ever to be met. Sometimes good communication networks arise from crises, but it is essential that managers continually explain to their workers what is going on, not merely in terms of organisation within the company but in terms of the problems faced by the company in the outside market. Workers should also be told about the financial position of the company. As many hon. Members said, teamwork is vital to effective management in any industry.

What are good managers required to be? The senior industrial managers who replied to the survey said that good managers are professional, that they maintain high standards, that they can delegate and give employees a clear idea of what is expected of them, that they are friendly, open and seem to be fair. They communicate easily and inspire confidence, they deal with queries and make decisions quickly. They have a "can do" attitude; they show imagination and intelligence and are realistic about strengths and weaknesses.

During Industry Year, industry will put itself across most effectively and will encourage the most talented people in the country to commit themselves to industrial careers, by demonstrating that those are the attributes required from people in industry. They must be effective managers who will ensure that our industry is more competitive than it has been in the past, and that it is in a position to improve our trade, exports and services so that through wealth creation, we can provide the social and educational services that all of us agree are necessary and important. My hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) has given us the opportunity today to pay attention to wealth creation. I am grateful to him for providing the House with that opportunity.

2.29 pm

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley (Surrey, South-West): The aim of Industry Year is to improve the attitude of the general public towards industry. I agree with those right hon. and hon. Members who have emphasised the disadvantages for so long——

It being half past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

St. Andrew's Hospital, Billericay

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Lennox-Boyd.]

2.30 pm

Mr. K. Harvey Proctor (Billericay): This is the first occasion upon which I have sought to raise a matter on the Adjournment of the House. I do so now because of its importance and significance to my constituents. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Health replied on 3 December to the Adjournment debate of my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess). Both debates have their origin in the decision of the Basildon and Thurrock health authority to reorganise health services in its district. As my right hon. Friend indicated in his reply on 3 December, the health authority's proposed changes form a wide-ranging package of proposals and are largely interdependent, one upon the other.

The proposals are contained in a document from the health authority that is entitled

> "Consultative document for the reorganisation of hospital services, particularly involving the maternity, gynaecology, paediatric, regional plastic surgery/burns and some geriatric services and thereby the closure of in-patient facilities at St. Andrew's hospital Billericay and changes to Orsett and Basildon hospitals."

The previous Adjournment debate revolved around the proposal that, for clinical reasons, inpatient maternity services should be centralised on one site, namely Orsett hospital in my constituency. That decision has met with the approval of my constituents in the Thurrock part of my constituency, but understandably it has met with the disapproval of my constituents who live further away from Orsett hospital—in Laindon, Wickford and Billericay.

However, I wish to concentrate today on the proposal of the health authority, contained in its option 5, to close St. Andrew's hospital in Billericay and transfer the regional specialty units of plastic surgery and burns to Basildon hospital. It is this proposal that has met with universal condemnation not only from my constituents in Billericay but from across Essex and the country.

Several of my colleagues have generously given their support to opposing these proposals. My right hon. Friend will have seen the terms of early-day motion 99. It has been signed by eight other right hon. and hon. Members, including the right hon. Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine), who I am glad to see has joined our debate and who, with the agreement of the Minister and you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, will say a few words in support.

I have received over 600 personal, individual letters opposing the proposals. That is an enormous mailbag on any one subject. I have received nine petitions, including one from the Federation of Essex Women's Institutes that is signed by 4,200 people. More than 20 separate organisations have registered their opposition with me. The consultants' staff committee for the district is also opposed to the recommendations. On Monday I shall help to deliver a petition to the health authority that contains over 80,000 signatures. In total, that represents locally the strongest, unified body of opinion placed before me since first becoming a Member of Parliament in 1979. To that body of opinion I wish to add my support and hence this Adjournment debate.

I have had three separate meetings with county councillor Mrs. Joan Martin and Mr. Richard Taylor, the chairman and the administrator of the health authority. I thank them for their courtesy and frankness. I plan to meet them again after the consultation ends on 21 December —on 13 January. I urge all my constituents who have not already done so to let the health authority know their feelings before the 21 December deadline.

Let me try to explain briefly to my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health why we all feel so strongly, although I appreciate that he will not be able to comment in any detail. St. Andrew's hospital is old. The oldest part of the site dates back to 1840 and some accommodation is contained in temporary huts erected during the second world war. But it is a well-loved local hospital with a deservedly high reputation and, with the plastic surgery and burns unit, a reputation far beyond the bounds of my constituency. However, most of the buildings on the site are in good condition, with the exception of the emergency medical services wards, and a considerable amount of money has been spent on the site and the hospital in recent years.

The hospital is well sited geographically. It is convenient. A recent survey shows that if the services are transferred to Basildon, 57 per cent. of current patients would experience an increase in return travelling time of an extra one hour and 26 minutes every time they visited the hospital. Basildon would be only marginally faster for only 23 per cent. of current patients.

Inevitably, a move will risk the break up of the team of specialists in various disciplines so important to the super specialties which operate at St. Andrew's. The team includes not just the consultants and surgeons but the physiotherapists, speech therapists, occupational therapists and nurses, all of whom have pooled their expertise. A move will inevitably loosen up that team for no good purpose.

On 3 December my right hon. Friend said that we have to achieve a proper balanced judgment which will ensure > "efficient use of resources to the benefit of everyone concerned."

However, a central plank of the current proposals is the move of a purpose-built burns unit which was opened only three years ago. It is the ideal burns unit format, separate and isolated from other services. I am afraid that my right hon. Friend was wrong on 3 December when he inferred that burns patients would be rehoused

> "in modern buildings more suitable for the practice of modern medicine."—[Official Report, 3 December 1985; Vol. 81, c. 279-80.]

Option 5 of the health authority report clearly envisages that the burns unit will be placed in existing ward accommodation vacated by the maternity unit. That is completely unacceptable. Cross-infection would be much more difficult to prevent and it would be a wholly backward step.

My right hon. Friend knows well the problems of recruitment for the NHS. Yet the Billericay site, I am pleased and not at all surprised to say, is the easiest site in the district for which to recruit. I am told that Basildon is not good and that the difficulties at Orsett are appalling. That is a fact which must weigh heavily with my right hon. Friend.

Remarkably, option 5 did not take into account another hospital in Billericay, the Mayflower. The 75 long-stay geriatric beds there in an old building must sensibly be considered as must the question of whether the 35 acute geriatric beds at St. Andrew's hospital should not be placed at an acute hospital as best medical experience advises.

All the consultants at St. Andrew's hospital have supported an alternative proposal involving the closure of the Mayflower hospital for long-stay geriatric patients, as envisaged in the district strategic plan for 1983-93, the transfer of those beds to a redeveloped St. Andrew's and the switch of the acute geriatric beds to Basildon hospital, where there is no geriatric provision. The alternative has been submitted to the district health authority for consideration and I believe it to be a well-argued document.

If the proposals go through unamended, there will be a threat to voluntary endeavour. Building the burns unit cost £1·2 million, of which £400,000 was raised by the spectacularly successful burns unit appeal. I pay tribute to my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point for all that he did to get the burns unit established and for his help with that spectacular appeal.

Is that endeavour to be wasted? Not only will those who gave their time, effort and money feel hurt, offended and angry, but the goodwill that was generated will disappear. People in Billericay and Essex generally will never again respond to help the NHS and I, for one, would not blame them.

I have said outside the House, and I should repeat for the record, that we are not talking about cuts, although our political opponents will muddy the waters by suggesting that we are. In fact, we are talking about how sensibly to spend increased sums of money on the Health Service locally. We must remember that there is no limit to the amount of money that could be spent. The level is an arbitrary one and a matter of political judgment. Locally, we must get the best deal in the best interests of the patients. They must come first.

As a Government, nationally we have done well. We have 58,000 more nurses and midwives, over 5,000 more hospital doctors and dentists, 3,000 more family doctors and over 13,000 more radiologists, laboratory technicians and other professional staff than were in place in 1978. They are all caring for patients. Government spending on health services has increased by 23 per cent. in real terms. This year, the NHS will receive over double the amount provided by the Labour Government in 1978-79.

We must ensure that the money spent locally by our health authority is well spent. I know that my right hon. Friend the Minister will realise that I mean no disrespect when I say that I hope that these local matters do not come to him for his decision. I hope that cold logic and rational argument will win the day with the health authority. However, the Minister now knows the strength of feeling on the issue; that feeling will not abate until St. Andrew's hospital and the burns unit are saved.

2.43 pm

Sir Bernard Braine (Castle Point): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mr. Proctor) for raising this matter. I think that I speak for many Essex Members when I say that it is high time that the subject was ventilated in the House.

My hon. Friend kindly said that I had an interest in the matter. When I was elected as the first hon. Member for Billericay 35 years ago, St. Andrew's hospital was dear to the heart of all the town's citizens, and I believe that it still is.

I intervene to support my hon. Friend, who deployed the case superbly, and to say something on my own account. I was involved from the beginning in the campaign to provide a regional burns unit. There was a powerful reason for my interest. As the House knows, I represent a constituency where 30,000 or 40,000 people are exposed to the largest concentration of gas, chemical and oil storage in this country, where there have been four public inquiries and where the Health and Safety Executive carried out its first environmental survey into those hazards and concluded that they were considerable. Canvey island is safer than it was, but the possibility of burns resulting from an industrial accident is high.

I lent all the enthusiasm that I could to a public appeal. The National Health Service was not concerned with providing a regional burns unit. Our region was the only one in the country at that time without a regional burns unit. If children were seriously burned at home or a man was burned at work they had to go either to a hospital on the west side of Middlesex or to East Grinstead. As anyone with any knowledge knows, in the treatment of burns it is essential to take the patient quickly to the right place with the right skills.

My task was to try to persuade the public to demonstrate an interest. By golly, they did demonstrate that interest. They raised substantial sums. I conducted the first negotiations, helped by Mr. Moonman, then the Labour Member for Billericay, to persuade the regional health authority and the Department of Health and Social Security to match pound for pound the money that we raised. So it was that after many years of struggle, led by the public, a magnificent regional burns unit was established at St. Andrew's hospital.

The reorganisation of other hospital matters in my hon. Friend's constituency is a matter for him. My interest is that this first-class, purpose-built unit should not be moved in defiance of the wishes of its medical staff, of the local authorities and of many people. I too have received many letters from former patients and people whose relatives have been patients there. They are deeply grateful for the magnificent treatment that they have received and for the lives saved. No risks should be taken with it. It should not be moved to Basildon.

Our purpose is to ensure that the Minister understands the deep sense of anxiety and anguish in our part of Essex that such a plan should be contemplated. I hope that the Minister will persuade the regional and district health authorities to scrap the plan, to clear it out and to start thinking again. Whatever is done about hospital reorganisation generally, they must leave the burns unit alone. It admirably serves the whole region, not just the people of Basildon. Staff morale and public confidence are high. Leave it alone!

2.48 pm

The Minister for Health (Mr. Barney Hayhoe): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mr. Proctor) on his "maiden" Adjournment debate. He has chosen a subject of considerable local and regional importance. He has had the spoken support of my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine), who intervened with his usual passion. My hon. Friend also has the unspoken support of my right hon. Friend the Chief Whip who, unusually, is present during an Adjournment debate. That is a sign of my right hon. Friend's close interest in an issue which goes wider than my right hon. Friend's constituency.

[Mr. Barney Hayhoe]

I am left in no doubt about the strength of local feeling that the proposal arouses. As my hon. Friend kindly and courteously made clear, the proposal to relocate the regional plastic surgery and burns unit at St. Andrew's hospital, Billericay, at Basildon hospital and to close St. Andrew's hospital is part of a package of measures which may ultimately — if the community health council, which formally represents the views of the community, objects—come to me for a final decision. The only way in which that happens is if the district health authority wishes to go ahead with the proposal and the community health council objects to it. If the regional health authority endorses the proposal, it will be submitted to Ministers for a final decision.

As my hon. Friend acknowledged — he has been following these matters with care — it would not be appropriate for me to comment now in detail on the arguments one way or the other. My hon. Friend has concentrated on the transfer of the burns unit from St. Andrew's hospital, as he did in his recent early-day motion, which he said was signed by my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point and a number of other local Members who have a particular interest.

It must be borne in mind—this was reflected in the speeches of my hon. Friend my and right hon. Friend—that we are dealing wth one facet of a wider proposed reorganisation involving the maternity, gynaecological, paediatric and geriatric services in the area. A number of hospitals are involved and the proposed reorganisation involves the closure of St. Andrew's hospital in Billericay.

As my hon. Friend acknowledged, this is the second debate on these matters that we have had during the past few days. On 3 December my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) spoke powerfully and eloquently on another part of the proposals. He directed his remarks to the proposed centralisation of the district's maternity services at Orsett hospital. Much of what I said in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon is relevant today to the subject of my hon. Friend and right hon. Friend's concern, which is the effect of the proposals on the burns unit at Billericay and the future of St. Andrew's hospital.

The proposals are wide-ranging and they intermesh. I am advised that they are largely interdependent. In considering the proposals, the overall interests of the many types of patient needs must be kept in mind. As the debate has shown the proposal to relocate the plastic surgery and burns unit is clearly a matter of considerable local interest and concern. St. Andrew's hospital is, I gather, a well-loved local hospital that offers a high standard of care. As my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay recognises, there is provision for consultation and comments must be submitted by 21 December. I have little doubt that the two debates that have taken place in the House, one on 3 December and one today, will encourage local people to make their views known. It is an important part of our democratic process that individual matters of this sort can be raised in the House. They attract attention, and proper account will have to be taken of the views which have been expressed.

I said on 3 December that I understood that the district health authority believes that the move to Basildon would improve facilities for burns and plastic surgery cases by rehousing them in a modern building more suitable for the practice of modern medicine. My hon. Friend the Member for Billericay has commented upon that and my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point referred to the purpose-built character of the unit and the special consideration that should apply to it. I would not wish to go further than merely to note their comments and to reiterate that I am sure that they, along with the many other relevant factors, must be taken into account when decisions on this matter are made, whether at district, region or, if the matter reaches Ministers, national level.

I am told that the general condition of St. Andrew's hospital is not good and that considerable capital investment would be necessary to get it into a proper state of repair. I recognise the points made by my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay, which I am sure are well known to the health authority, about the travelling that some patients will have to undertake if the unit is moved. My hon. Friend commented with considerable precision on the extra time needed for travel. The health authority recognises that local people who have recently contributed to improvements in facilities—£400,000 was raised by local efforts, in which my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point played an important role — should be taken into account.

Sir Bernard Braine: I think that my hon. Friend made a slip of the tongue. In talking about contributions from local people, he used the word "recently". The point that we are trying to establish is that, from the beginning contributions came from local people—from all over the regions, but principally from Essex — and it was not until they had made a substantial showing that there was the slightest interest in NHS money being found. Our interests is not recent—we have been demanding this facility for a long time. We have only just got it, and now it is to be moved away. That is unacceptable to us.

Mr. Hayhoe: I am grateful to my right hon. Friend for that clarification. In trying to scramble through in the limited time available, I may have over simplified the point which my right hon. Friend made tellingly earlier. It is not appropriate for me to comment, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point recognises as well as any other hon. Member because he has served here for so long with such distinction. I face the difficulty of having to respond by saying that I have no substantive comment to make because of the procedures that have been set up to allow the committees in the Health Service at district and regional level to bring their consideration to bear on the problems and to provide opportunities for the expression of local views.

I want to emphasise what my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay said about the purposes of the review. There is a considerable difference of opinion between what we have heard today and the views of some of those who have brought these proposals forward as to what is right in terms of patient care. I am glad that my hon. Friend made it absolutely clear that the purpose of the proposals is not to save money but to meet clinical service needs. If any financial benefit arises, those resources will be used to improve patient care. This is not a cost-cutting exercise, although I recognise that local people, motivated by party political considerations, may seek to misrepresent the position. I hope that the debate has gone a long way towards discrediting such comments.

Resistance to change in Health Service matters is often deep seated. When the proposed change is for the worse, one has total sympathy with that resistance. Over the years I have found that sometimes—I make no comment on this specific proposal—resistance to change is expressed even when the change is for the better and in the long-term interests of all concerned. I hope that we all want a more effective deployment of resources to provide better patient care and that proper account is taken of local wishes and desires in arriving at those judgments. I insist that the test —I hope that I carry my colleagues with me—is that of better patient care. That is what we are about.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute to Three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Palace of Westminster (Statistics)

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the numbers of individuals who were working in the Palace of Westminster and associated buildings in 1970, 1975 and 1980; and how many of those were hon. Members, peers, secretaries, research assistants, Officers of either House and employees of either House.

Mr. Biffen: The table gives the information requested in respect of Peers, Members, and Officers and employees of either House. Central records are not held for the other categories mentioned in my hon. Friend's question.

SOCIAL SERVICES

AIDS

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further plans he has to help in the fight against acquired immune deficiency syndrome; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: The Government regard reduction of the rate of spread of this serious virus infection as a matter of very high priority. We have already taken important steps. First, we have improved the safety of blood and blood products supplied through the blood transfusion service. All Factor VIII and IX clotting agents derived from pooled plasma used by haemophiliacs are heat treated; all donations of whole blood are screened for antibodies to the AIDS virus. Second, detailed advice on the disease, how to help those infected, and how to avoid infection has gone to health professionals. Third, counselling and testing services have been introduced in the National Health Service. Fourth, information is being provided to those at risk by the Government — funded Health Education Council, and by the key voluntary organisations — the Terrence Higgins trust and the Haemophilia Society. Both of those organisations receive Government grants. Fifth, this year we have provided an extra £1·8 million for the development and use of a test for the AIDS virus, a special allocation to the three Thames regions and haemophilia centres, additional money for voluntary organisations and for the training of councillors.

I am now announcing an allocation of an additional £6·3 million to support a package of measures to help those already infected and to reduce the number who become infected.

First £2½ million for a national information campaign to begin next Spring and run throughout the year. The campaign will be directed at the public in general and this will be coupled with a series of targetted campaigns for those known to be at special risk. The aim is to improve understanding of the disease and the ways in which its spread can be controlled. The necessary preliminary research and testing is already under way.

Second £2·5 million to help the three Thames regional health authorities, who will still next year carry the heaviest burden of the disease, to provide the necessary treatment and counselling services,

Third £270,000 for the six haemophiliac reference centres in England to continue support for the specialist counselling services which they have set up.

Fourth £100,000 for training health professionals in the counselling of AIDS sufferers. Courses have already been set up at St. Mary's hospital, Paddington, and these will continue along with new ones in Birmingham and Newcastle.

Fifth £750,000 for the public health laboratory service to continue its work in testing blood samples provided by the national blood transfusion service or the NHS for the presence of the AIDS virus.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Bolton Magisterial Panel

Mr. David Young asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of the Bolton magisterial panel is currently not in full-time employment; what percentage is unemployed; what percentage is retired; what percentage is of independent status or means; and if he will list the panel by occupation.

Mr. Tebbit: Of the Bolton magistrates' bench, 46 per cent. are not in full employment, three per cent. are unemployed, and 16 per cent. have retired. I have no means of knowing—and do not wish to have any means of knowing — which members of the bench are of independent means.

At the last review of the bench, the occupations were:

Directors and professionals	49
Landowners and farmers	2
Wholesale and retail proprietors and managers	15
Managers in industry and commerce or service	16
Teachers, nurses and other medical, social and artistic workers	25

PRIME MINISTER

UNESCO

Mr. Lester asked the Prime Minister what are the implications for the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards United Kingdom membership of UNESCO of her agreement to the Nassau declaration of world order.

The Prime Minister: Our decision to withdraw from membership of UNESCO, unless major reforms are secured, is entirely consistent with our commitment under the Nassau declaration to play a full part in revitalising international co-operation for development.

Mr. Lester asked the Prime Minister if she will list by major programme the changes sought by Her Majesty's Government in UNESCO's programme and the extent to which each objective was met at the Sofia congress; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government are still considering the outcome of the UNESCO conference in Sofia.

Industrial Air Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to transfer Her Majesty's industrial air pollution inspectorate to the Department of the Environment; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No; but working arrangements in this and related areas are under review.

Asset Sales

Mr. Best asked the Prime Minister if she will explain the criteria used to define capital receipts from the sales of public assets such as British Telecom and British Gas as negative public expenditure.

The Prime Minister: In accordance with the international convention on national accounting, purchases and sales of company shares are classified as "financial transactions" and, as such, are treated on a net basis. Unlike many other financial transactions they represent a direct expression of public policy and are therefore public expenditure (and government expenditure in the national accounts). It follows that, given the net treatment, when the Government buy shares, public expenditure is increased and when the Government sell shares, public expenditure is reduced. Since the Government incurred expenditure in acquiring the shares and assets of organisations being privatised, it is symmetrical and logical that expenditure should decrease when they are sold.

Mr. Best asked the Prime Minister if she will explain the criteria used to determine the definition and status of local authorities' capital from asset sales for the purposes of Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the control of public expenditure.

The Prime Minister: Capital receipts score as negative public expenditure in the year in which they are received. Local authorities may, in any one year, spend a prescribed proportion of receipts, new and accumulated.

The Government take account of the various sources of spending power local authorities enjoy, including capital receipts, when setting allocations designed to hold net expenditure to the relevant cash limit.

Rating Reform

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with co-ordination between the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for the Environment regarding the presentation of Her Majesty's Government's policy towards reform of the rating system in different parts of the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: Yes. My right hon. Friends, together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, intend to publish a consultative document early in the new year.

The right hon. Harry West

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report the text of letters exchanged in the last three months between her and the right hon. Harry West.

The Prime Minister: It is not my practice to publish correspondence between myself and a third party.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Sheerman asked the Prime Minister on what evidence she bases her statement in the Official Report, 6 November, column 22, that 675,000 new jobs have been created in the past two years; if she will give a breakdown in numbers and percentages according to (a) region, (b) industrial sector, (c) gender, (d) full or part time and (e) employed or self-employed; and if she will indicate which figures are estimated and which are based on recorded information.

The Prime Minister: There was an estimated increase of 675,000 in the employed labour force in Great Britain between March 1983 and June 1985 as published in the October issue of Employment Gazette. I have asked my right hon. and learned Friend the Paymaster General to provide the hon. Member with the latest available breakdowns of the estimate, which has since been slightly revised. All these estimates will be further revised when the results of the 1984 census of employment and the 1985 labour force survey become available in the spring of next year.

Fraud

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Prime Minister (1) what representations she has received from the Governor of the Bank of England relating to City frauds (a) by letter and (b) in person; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will place in the Library copies of correspondence between the Governor of the Bank of England and herself relating to fraud in the City of London.

The Prime Minister: It is not my practice to make public exchanges of this kind.

Hillsborough Summit

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Prime Minister what is her best estimate of the cost of the Hillsborough summit on 15 November including the wages costs of security forces.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 21 November 1985, c. 271]: The best estimate of the costs of my meeting with the Taoiseach at Hillsborough castle on 15 November is £241,000. The greater part of this is accounted for by security. There were, in addition, costs of travel, communications equipment, press facilities, catering, staff and other services.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Pahoomal Family

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch on 25 November, Official Report, column 362, if any warrant for the arrest of any member of the Pahoomal family has been issued.

The Solicitor-General: Yes. Warrants for the arrest of Mohan and Narender Pahoomal were issued on 11 November 1983 for forgery offences.

PCW Syndicate

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Attorney-General if, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 362, warrants have been issued for the arrest of Mr. Peter Cameron Webb, Mr. T. Dixon or any other person in connection with the PCW syndicate and Alexander Howden case.

The Solicitor-General: No.

Mr. Arnold asked the Attorney-General what have been the costs to date of the investigations into the affairs of the Peter Cameron Webb syndicate and Alexander Howden, referred to in his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 362.

The Solicitor-General: Because of the diverse nature of the work undertaken it is impossible to estimate with any degree of accuracy the total costs involved to date. Much of the work cannot be separated out from the ordinary running costs of the Police Service and the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Fraud Investigation Group

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 362, what further progress has been made as a result of the Solicitor-General's meeting with the fraud investigation group.

The Solicitor-General: Further inquiries are being made here and overseas and the case remains under vigorous investigation.

Johnson Matthey Bank

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Attorney-General if the Director of Public Prosecutions received any representations in 1983, 1984 and 1985 to the present day in relation to alleged fraud at Johnson Matthey Bank in respect of any person other than members of the Pahoomal family.

The Solicitor-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has considered police reports concerning three cases in which it is alleged that forged certificates purporting to be clean reports of finding issued by Societé Générale Surveillance were used.

Societé Générale Surveillance Certificates

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Attorney-General if the Director of Public Prosecutions received any representations in 1983, 1984 and 1985 to the present day in relation to alleged forged Societé Générale Surveillance certificates or was made aware of the existence of any such certificates in respect of any cases other than the case of the Pahoomal family.

The Solicitor-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions received such a report concerning one Ranjendra Sethia who is at present the subject of an application for extradition from India. That application remains in abeyance pending resolution of criminal proceedings in India.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General has passed to the Director of Public Prosecutions particulars of representations made by the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch to him and to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. In addition, the Director of Public Prosecutions has discussed with the City of London police the progress of the investigation commenced in July this year at the present Johnson Matthey Bank Limited.

ENERGY

Global Warming

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment the Government have carried out of the implications of global warming for future energy policy.

Mr. Peter Walker: As the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution pointed out in its tenth report, the effect on the world climate of global warming through increased atmospheric concentrations of certain substances, including CO2, has yet to be established. The implications for energy policy cannot therefore yet be assessed.

Redundant Mineworkers

Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he will respond to representations made by the hon. Member for Jarrow concerning the benefit entitlements of National Coal Board employees who became redundant after 1 January 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy has made it clear that no decisions have yet been made about the details of any scheme to succeed the current redundant mineworkers' payments scheme. As my right hon. Friend advised the House on 25 November, a statement will be made as soon as conclusions have been reached.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many persons were made redundant from collieries and other National Coal Board owned industries, prior to their eventual closure, in the 12 months prior to the implementation of the redundant mineworkers scheme order.

Mr. David Hunt: The present redundant mineworkers payments scheme was introduced in The Redundant Mineworkers and Concessionary Coal (Payments Schemes) Order 1984, which came into operation on 1 April 1984. During the preceeding financial year 1983-84 some 20,400 men left the coal industry on RMPS terms.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he is now able to reveal a framework of legislation which is designed to assist those coalminers who may lose the redundant mineworkers scheme benefits as a result of their 12-month long strike; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have made it clear that no decisions have yet been made about the details of any scheme to succeed the current redundant mineworkers' payments scheme. As I advised the right hon. Member during oral answers on 25 November, I will make a statement as soon as conclusions have been reached.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total cost of the National Coal Board's publicity campaign associated with the miners' strike.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for the National Coal Board.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the pupil-teacher ratios for primary, secondary and all maintained schools in January of each year since 1975; and if he will give the same figures for Leicestershire.

Mr. Dunn: The pupil-teacher ratios within maintained primary and secondary schools and the overall pupil-teacher ratio for maintained schools in England and in Leicestershire for each year since 1975 are as follows:

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish figures to show, aggregated for education authorities in London, for each year since 1978-79 (a) the number of pupils in nursery, primary and secondary schools, (b) the expenditure per pupil, in total and by sector, in cash and real terms, and (c) the total expenditure in cash and real terms; and if he will give the same information for Leicestershire.

Mr. Dunn: The information is as follows:

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing (a) the average salary for a teacher in April for each year from 1974 to 1985, (b) the average salary for a teacher during each year had the levels of pay recommended by the Houghton committee been maintained and (c) the loss of pay during each year for that teacher, and the total loss over the period expressed for each at cash and April 1985 prices.

Sir Keith Joseph: The table gives estimated average salaries (excluding allowances) for all full-time teachers in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England and Wales from April 1974 to April 1984 (the date from which the last settlement applied). The table also sets out the percentage pay settlements for each year, movement in the retail prices index for the same period, and indices showing cumulative year-on-year increases in average salaries and pay settlements from April 1974 and April 1979.

The table demonstrates the following movement in teachers' average salaries relative to RPI:

	Percentage
from April 1974 to April 1979	−14
from April 1979 to April 1984	+10
from April 1974 to April 1984	−6

All salary and index figures are rounded and the results should be construed accordingly. With that caveat these figures replace any previously given.

It is not possible to estimate what average salary levels would have been

"had the levels of pay recommended by the Houghton Committee been maintained".

The Houghton committee did not set teachers' pay levels for all time nor establish a settled formula by which they should be updated, though it did suggest certain factors which might be taken into account.

Polytechnics (Grants)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps his Department takes to check whether its grant payments to polytechnics are received in full by the institution concerned; what instances there have been in the current and last financial year of grant payments not having been received in total or in part; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The only grant payments made direct to polytechnics are in respect of research projects commissioned by my right hon. Friend. All claims that accord with the terms and conditions of the contracts concluded with the researcher or institution are met in full.

My right hon. Friend also determines, on the advice of the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Education (NAB)

i. allocations from the advanced further education pool to local education authorities in respect of recurrent expenditure by polytechnics and other institutions on advanced further education. These allocations are then reflected in the calculation of block grant paid to local authorities by the Department of the Environment as part of the annual rate support grant entitlement. Block grant is not hypothecated and it is for authorities to decide how to deploy between services, including the provision of advanced further education, the expenditure in support of which block grant is paid.

ii. allocations of prescribed expenditure (ie expenditure of a capital nature) to be incurred by local education authorities in respect of polytechnics and other colleges. Such allocations are not earmarked and within the terms of the Local Government Land and Planning Act 1980 authorities are free to vire between service allocations and, subject to certain rules, to use capital receipts to supplement allocations.

Lunchtime Supervision

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how he decided on the figure of £40 million for lunchtime supervision for a full year.

Sir Keith Joseph: The figure of £40 million was fixed following careful consideration of the likely range of costs of employing sufficient supervisory staff necessary to secure the reliable and adequate supervision of pupils at midday. Account was taken of the number of supervisors who might be required in schools of different sizes having regard to the substantial number of people already employed by local education authorities to assist with midday supervision.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report those organisations consulted by his Department on the question of the cost of lunchtime supervision.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Government's new initiative for providing adequate and reliable supervision of pupils at midday has been the subject of detailed discussion between the Department and the Association of County Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities.

Occupational Therapists

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of training places for occupational therapists available on 1 January 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Walden: Information about the places on courses for the training of occupational therapists is not collected centrally. The numbers of students attending such courses in maintained and assisted colleges of further education in England from November 1979 to 1984 are as follows. I understand that similar courses are also run in establishments maintained by the Department of Health and Social Security, and in institutions in the private sector.

Full-time & sandwich	210	459	462	502	536	557
Part-time	58	63	81	32	31	113
Total	268	522	543	534	567	670

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the number of occupational therapy places in educational institutions.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. He will shortly be receiving the advice of the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education both on applications for advanced course approvals and on the distribution of the AFE pool for 1986-87.

Open University

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science by how much Open University summer school and tuition fees rose between 1971 and 1986 against a 1971 index of 100; and how the retail prices index rose over the same period against the same base.

Mr. Walden: The Open university has not yet taken a final decision on summer school fees for 1986; neither is the retail price index known for 1986. 1985 is therefore given as the final year for the information requested. Using 1971 = 100 as a base, the increases are:

Summer school fees	376
Tuition fees	705
Retail price index	470

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the average number of new undergraduate applications to the Open University between 1975 and 1979 and 1980 and 1986.

Mr. Walden: The information for new applicants in 1975 is not available. The average figure for the years 1976-79 was 32,677 and the average figure for the years 1980-86* is 38, 255.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the basis upon which his Department calculated the numbers and proportion of children statemented under the Education Act 1981 as having special educational needs in each local education authority, as published in his reply to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East on 13 June, Official Report, columns 514-8.

Mr. Dunn: The numbers and proportions of children statemented under the Education Act 1981 as having special educational needs, in each local authority in England in 1984, were derived from returns submitted by schools to the Department in January 1984 as part of the annual census of schools.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

National Weights and Measures Laboratory

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what new steps he is taking to expedite the approving of new patterns at the National Weights and Measures Laboratory.

Mr. Howard: The Department is continually striving to reduce delays in pattern examination to the minimum possible. It is hoped that a special pay addition, which has recently been agreed for pattern examiners, will enable several vacancies at the national weights and measures laboratory to be filled in the near future. The vacancies are currently being advertised at the new rates.

The committee, on metrological control, which reported earlier this year, made several recommendations relating to pattern examination procedures. The Department is giving serious consideration both to the committee's recommendations and to any comments on them that arise during the consultation process which is currently taking place.

Citizens Band Radio

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether it is the Government's intention to seek to obtain a European standard for citizens band radio; and if he will list the alternative systems which could form the basis of such a European standard, indicating which is the Government's preferred option.

Mr. Butcher: The Government's preferred option, and indeed the often stated intention, for CB is to adopt the CEPT recommendation which provides for common European frequencies at 26·96 MHz—27·40 MHz for an FM only service. My Department has been consulting existing users of the band about appropriate transitional arrangements and I have already announced that 1987 is the earliest realistic target date for the start of the new CB service.

Bankruptcies and Company Liquidations

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) bankruptcies and (b) company liquidations took place in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and to the nearest available date in 1985.

Mr. Howard: The information requested for the years 1979 to 1984 was published in British business on 1 November 1985, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Provisional estimates show that there were 5,708 bankruptcies and 12,328 company liquidations in the first ten months of 1985.

South Africa

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the total amount of exports from the United Kingdom to South Africa (a) in 1984 and (b) to the nearest available date in 1985;

(2) what was the total amount of imports to the United Kingdom from South Africa in 1984 and to the nearest available date in 1985.

Mr. Channon: The information can be found in table IB of the relevant issues of the Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom, copies of which are in the Library.

Channel Fixed Link

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made, or has requested to be made, of the long-term impact of a Channel fixed link on each of the main industrial areas of Britain and that of north-eastern France, in as far as it will affect those areas in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Morrison: An assessment of the proposals for the Channel fixed link is being carried out jointly by the British and French Governments. The assessment will take account of all aspects of the proposals, including their economic impact.

Johnson Matthey Bank

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has asked for an inspector's report into the affairs of Johnson Matthey Bank under section 432 of the Companies Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: No. A section 432 investigation at this stage would add little to the extensive enquiries that have already taken place and the police enquiries now in train.

A fraud investigation group has been established. I am ready to help it and the police at any time through the use of section 447 powers to examine the company's records if this would be helpful.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 404, he will estimate the amount of money involved in the deferment of payments from Nigeria between the date when moneys were due and 1989 in relation to guarantees by the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Channon: It is estimated that the total amount involved will be about £500 million.

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 404, he will state the reasons for the agreement entered into between Her Majesty's Government and the Nigerian Government over deferred payments between the date when moneys were due and 1989 and when the agreement was entered into.

Mr. Channon: There is no formal agreement between Her Majesty's Government and the Nigerian Government concerning the trade debts for which the Nigerian authorities have sought relief from their international creditors. Formal agreement covering officially insured debts will be negotiated multilaterally once the Nigerian authorities have reached an agreement with the IMF. Meanwhile, Her Majesty's Government and the other creditor Governments have taken note of the Nigerian Government's expressed intention to bring deferred payments in general up to date by the end of 1989, and to pay interest meantime.

Textile and Clothing

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the value added to the national economy by the textile and clothing industry in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and how this figure compares with that for the motor manufacturing industry and for the computer manufacturing industry in each of those years.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested for the textile and clothing industry is as follows:

† Results of the annual census of production for 1978 and earlier years are available only for industries defined in terms of the Standard Industrial Classification (Revised 1968). For 1980 and later years results are available only for industries defined in terms of the Standard Industrial Classification (Revised 1980). To provide a link between the two classifications results for 1979 are available on both bases. For the textile industry a major difference between the two classifications is the exclusion of the production of man-made fibres from the latter.

‡ The latest year for which results are available.

Mr. Fox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if in view of the current discussions between the European Commission and the Turkish textile industry, he will make representations to the Commission about the implications of the Turkish export potential of cotton velvet at subsidised prices for the markets available to United Kingdom manufacturers.

Mr. Channon: The Commission is well aware of United Kingdom concerns over such competition, both in the United Kingdom and in other markets.

Manufacturing Industry (Exports)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all those manufacturing industries whose exports in the latest year for which figures are available exceeded £4 billion in value.

Mr. Channon: I will reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Departmental Appointments

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those bodies to which his Department makes appointments, the number of appointees and the number of these who are women.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested is contained in the MPO publication "Public Bodies 1984", available in the Library of the House of Commons. The 1985 edition of this is to be published on 17 December and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Advancement of Women

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has had any meetings with the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss the implementation of those parts of the conclusions of the Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women relevant to his Department; and if he has any future plans for such meetings.

Mr. Butcher: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to implement those parts of the conclusions of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women which apply to his Department; what resources he has allocated to this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My Department is already working to encourage and facilitate the participation of women in areas of industry where women have not played a significant role in the past.

Specific schemes include WISE (Women into Science and Engineering) Year 1984, a women's working group to ensure that women take a full and active part in the Industry Year Initiative, and the recently announced national work shadowing project which is giving many girls the opportunity to experience industrial management at the highest levels. My Department has supported a number of other projects including:

i A grant to the National Electronics Council to promote activities including publicity to encourage schoolgirls to consider a career in electronics.

ii £9,000 for the Sheffield local education authority information technology project to produce computer software to appeal equally to boys and girls.

iii The Cambridge women's resource centre in receiving £22,000 towards the purchase of computer software.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for implementing paragraph 58 of the conclusions of the Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women, on the collection of statistics on the situation of women.

Mr. Butcher: The statistics collected by my Department do not in general lend themselves to being categorised by gender. Relevant statistics on the employment of women are, however, collected by the Department of Employment. I would therefore refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Paymaster General to a question from the Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) today.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will establish a special office within his Department to monitor periodically and accelerate the process towards the equitable representation of women along the lines proposed in paragraph 88 of the Nairobi United Nations conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mr. Butcher: My Department has embarked upon a nationally agreed programme of action for the development of employment opportunities for women. This applies to the employment of women within the Department and the nomination of suitably qualified women for public appointments for which it is responsible.

Esal (Commodities) Ltd.

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about progress by the Official Receiver in the liquidation of Esal (Commodities) Ltd.; and what information he has as to the amount of that company's debts.

Mr. Howard: The winding-up order was made against Esal (Commodities) Limited on 7 November 1984 under which the official receiver is investigating the affairs of the company. The realisation and distribution of the assets is in the hands of the joint liquidators Mr. G. A. Weiss and Mr. M. A. Jordon. The liabilities are estimated to be in the region of £245 million but it is not yet possible to say what the assets will realise nor the likelihood of a distribution to creditors.

Grants (Yorkshire and Humberside)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the amount of regional grants paid to Yorkshire and Humberside in the financial years 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83 and 1983-84.

Mr. Brittan: Details are as follows:

Grants (Job Creation)

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the figures for grants related directly to jobs, as referred to in his letter to the right hon. Member for Swansea, West dated 27 November, for every constituency, giving in each case the number of related jobs and the time span over which they will arise; and if he will give the average grant for the United Kingdom, for Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and each administrative region, respectively.

Mr. Brittan: I regret that the information requested could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Grants and Loans (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of the grants and loans under the regional and industrial policy in the last year within the Cumbernauld and Kilsyth constituency referred to in his letter to the hon. Member for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth dated 27 November.

Mr. Brittan: The amount and number of offers for regional selective assistance and of approvals for new regional development grant in the Cumbernauld and Kilsyth constituency were as follows in the period 29 November 1984 to 31 October 1985:

	Number	Value £000
RSA	6	9,339

I regret that details of other assistance is not available on a constituency basis.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the total amounts offered to firms in the Cumbernauld and Kilsyth constituency under regional and industrial grants for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Brittan: I regret that information is not available for all regional and industrial grans because it would be too costly to transfer the historic records to the computer data base. However, the new Regional Development Grants are being recorded and regional selective assistance (RSA) under section 7 of the Industry Act is available for past years. The details for RSA are set out below:

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Students

53. Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken to increase the availability of scholarships to overseas students.

Mr. Raison: I announced last June a new shared scholarship scheme as part of the Government's targeted support for overseas students. The scholarships are for students of high academic ability from developing Commonwealth countries who are outside the scope of existing Government support schemes and who would not otherwise be able to study here. Costs will be shared jointly between ODA and the higher education institutions.

My initial target was 50 awards to commence next autumn. Owing to the excellent response to the scheme I have decided to double that to 100. The scheme will initially run for five years.

United Nations Relief and Works Agency

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the direct United Kingdom contribution to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (a) in sterling and dollars at the prevailing rate of exchange for each year from 1979 to date and (b) as a percentage of the total budget from 1979 to date; and what will be the sterling contribution, and as anticipated in dollars, for 1986.

Mr. Raison: The Government's direct contributions to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency since 1979 were as follows:

	British Contribution		Percentage of total budget
	£ million	$ million
1979	4·4	9·34	5·61
1980	4·5	10·47	4·96
1981	5·0	10·14	4·25
1982	4·0	7·00	2·64
1983	5·0	7·58	3·65
1984	6·0	8·02	3·96
1985	5·0	6·53	3·47

At the United Nations pledging conference earlier this month we announced a pledge of £5 million to UNRWA for 1986. This is subject to parliamentary approval. It is not possible to forecast the 1986 sterling-dollar exchange rate.

World Bank Loans (Environmental Damage)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will take steps to seek to ensure that the World Bank does not make loans for projects which, if carried out, would be likely to cause environmental or rain forest damage.

Mr. Raison: I think the World Bank has an increasing awareness of the environmental implications of its projects, particularly involving tropical rain forests. We are in constant touch with the bank on its policies in this area.

The World Bank was a co-sponsor, with the United Nations development programme and others, of a study on rain forests published in October. We expect the bank to take full account of the findings of this study.

Falkland Islands (Hospital)

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the number of beds which will be provided in the new Falkland Islands hospital and the cost per bed as compared with cost per bed for an equivalent hospital in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Raison: The new hospital in Stanley will have 28 beds including a two-bed intensive care unit. This figure excludes sheltered housing which will provide accommodation for up to 15 elderly people who would formerly have been accommodated in a residential wing of the old hospital.

The hospital has been designed to cater for the needs of the civilian and military communities in the Falkland Islands and includes such facilities as an operating theatre which would not be found in a hospital of similar size in this country. Direct comparisons with the cost of health care facilities in this country are therefore not possible. Standards in the new hospital conform to DHSS standards.

Bilateral Aid

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will undertake a major re-evaluation of bilateral aid and its effect upon British visible and invisible earnings and in particular a rationalisation of aid and trade provision procedures.

Mr. Raison: While the basic objective of the bilateral aid programme is to promote economic and social progress in developing countries, we bear British commercial and industrial interests fully in mind. Bilateral aid funds are tied to the purchase of British goods and services except for the provision of local costs in some of the poorer countries. The aid and trade provision (ATP) procedures have recently been reviewed. The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced to the House the introduction of a new soft loan facility as part of the ATP on 12 November. By these means we hope to double the business supported by the ATP each year by 1988-89. In the light of this I do not believe a re-evaluation necessary.

Advancement of Women

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to seek to ensure that the British aid programme places emphasis on strategies designed to assist women in generating and creating income as called for in paragraph 115 of the United Nations Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mr. Raison: We support the objectives contained in paragraph 115 of the United Nations forward looking strategies for the advancement of women. Procedures were introduced in the ODA in 1984 to ensure that project work took better account of the role and needs of women.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will, as set out in paragraph 122 of the United Nations Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women, take steps to strengthen the evaluation of the effect of Britain's aid programme on women.

Mr. Raison: Assessment of how aid projects affect women is already an integral part of our evaluation studies. With our partners in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, we are considering how to improve the information in this respect, particularly governing statistics at our disposal.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to seek to implement paragraph 177 of the United Nations Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women which calls for urgent measures to enhance the role of African women as food producers.

Mr. Raison: We support the recommendations in paragraph 177 of the United Nations Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women, and fully appreciate the importance of African women as food producers. We should be happy to consider requests from African Governments for help in enhancing their role in this respect.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his Department is doing to seek to ensure that women are given access to training programmes to widen their skills and widen the range of methods and technologies used for agricultural production, as called for in paragraph 186 of the United Nations Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mr. Raison: We should be happy to consider requests from developing countries, to which paragraph 186 of forward looking strategies for the advancement of women was directed, to help with the activities there specified, including, where appropriate, training in Britain.

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to implement paragraph 299 of the conclusions of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women relating to the establishment of special relief programmes.

Mr. Raison: We fully recognise the problems of refugees and displaced women and children, and have responded generously to special appeals from such international agencies as the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, the International Committee of the Red Cross and the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies. In the calendar year 1985 our total refugee assistance is expected to exceed £27 million. In addition we are providing £5 million in the period 1984-89 in response to the second international conference for assistance to refugees in Africa, held in July 1984.

Britain has also ratified the 1951 convention relating to the status of refugees and takes every opportunity to encourage other governments to do likewise.

Colombia

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance has been given by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of Colombia following the recent landslip disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: Her Majesty's Government responded immediately to this disaster by providing two RAF Puma helicopters and one Hercules aircraft from Belize to help with rescue operations. The British ambassador in Bogota was authorised to purchase locally such essential items as electric generators. In addition, medicines, food, tents and other urgently needed relief items were sent.

Crown Agents

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the total of advances during each of the last five years by the Crown Agents for Property development in Scotland, England and Wales; and if he will include within the figures for England a separate estimate for London.

Mr. Raison: The Crown Agents have made no advances for property development during the last five years.

Homeless Persons

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that the special needs of women are recognised in the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless.

Mr. Raison: We attach importance to the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, and will do our best to ensure that the special needs of women are taken into account in this respect.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Tottenham (Disturbances)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in how many cases in relation to investigations in connection with the recent disturbances in Tottenham the police have refused access to solicitors on the grounds that representing a particular client would create a conflict of interest or where in the opinion of the police it would be professionally improper for them to act;

(2) in how many cases of persons being interviewed in relation to investigations in connection with the recent disturbances in the Tottenham area a solicitor instructed by a third party asked to see the person being interviewed; in how many of these cases the request was denied; and what reasons were given for refusing the request in each such case;

(3) how many persons interviewed by the police in relation to investigations into the recent disturbances in the Tottenham area asked to see a solicitor; in how many cases the request was denied; and what reasons were given when the request was denied.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is not held centrally. On the basis of the information which is currently available, and whose accuracy cannot be completely guaranteed, we believe that six people were denied access to a solicitor for less than 24 hours, 14 for between 24 and 48 hours, and five for more than 48 hours. Access was denied because, in the opinion of the police, granting it would have caused unreasonable delay or hindrance to the conduct of the investigation. No further information is available.

Police and Criminal Evidence Act (Police Practice)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in how many cases of persons being interviewed in Metropolitan police districts where the police are operating as if the provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act are in force a solicitor instructed by a third party, such as a relative, asked to see the person interviewed; in how many cases this request was denied; and what reason was given for refusing the request;

(2) how many people interviewed by police officers in Metropolitan police districts where the police are operating as if the provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act are in force have asked to see a solicitor; in how many of these cases the request was denied; and what reasons were given.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police districts in the Metropolitan police area are operating as if the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and the codes of practice are in force; and on what dates they started operating in this manner.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Metropolitan police have introduced those provisions of the 1984 Act and the codes of practice which do not require statutory powers on the basis of trial runs. These were brought into operation in all Metropolitan police districts on 1 April 1985 in resepct of stop and search and road check powers, on 1 May 1985 in respect of the searching of premises, and on 1 July 1985 in respect of the detention, treatment, and questioning of persons by police officers.

Immigration

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provisions exist to repay from public funds the cost of return air tickets held by intending visitors to the United Kingdom who are refused even temporary admission and subsequently appeal successfully against the immigration officers' decisions in their country of departure.

Mr. Waddington: There is no statutory provision to make such payments.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on what dates meetings have taken place between Ministers in his Department and officials of the Immigration Service Union in the past year; what have been the main issues discussed; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether at meetings between Ministers in his Department and officials of the Immigration Service Union, officials of that union have indicated that the Immigration Service Union intended to instruct its members not to deal with correspondence from hon. or right hon. Members concerning immigration matters; and on what basis Immigration Service Union officials have passed correspondence from hon. and right hon. Members on immigration matters to Ministers in his Department.

Mr. Waddington: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Dubs) on 20 November at columns 168-69. At my meeting with officials of the ISU on 17 October, they did not indicate that they intended to instruct their members not to deal with correspondence from hon. Members on immigration matters, but they did express their concern at the increase in the number of cases attracting representations from hon. and right hon. Members.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fiancées have been granted admission to the United Kingdom since the change in August of the immigration rules requiring fiancées to have entry clearance; how many fiancées have been granted admission although they had not been granted entry clearance; and if the passports of such fiancées have been suitably endorsed in all cases.

Mr. Waddington: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Drug-related Offences

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of people who have been convicted of drug-related offences each year since 1979 and the range of prison sentences which were imposed for those offences during the same period.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the numbers of persons found guilty of drugs offences in each year since 1979 is given in table 8 of "Statistics of the Misuse of Drugs in the United Kingdom, 1984" (Home Office Statistical Bulletin 23/85). Details about the lengths of sentences of imprisonment for such offences are published annually in "Statistics of the Misuse of Drugs, United Kingdom, Supplementary Tables" (table 2.12 in the issues for 1983 and 1984 and table 3.3 in earlier issues). The published table for 1984 inadvertently excluded sentences of youth custody and so revised figures, including them, are given in the following table:

Persons sentenced to unsuspected imprisonment, including youth custody, for drugs offences by length of sentence, 1984—United Kingdom

Length of sentence given for principal drugs offence	Number of persons
Up to and including one month	501
Over one month up to and including three months	529
Over three months up to and including six months	436
Over six months up to and including one year	464
Over one year up to and including two years	682
Over two years up to and including five years	579
Over five years up to and including seven years	123

Category A Prisoners

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of category A prisoners at present held in Her Majesty's prisons; and how many of those prisoners have been convicted of offences connected with the present troubles in Northern Ireland both as an absolute figure and as a percentage, indicating those so convicted who give their place of origin as the Republic of Ireland, the six counties of Northern Ireland, England and Wales, Scotland or elsewhere, respectively, for the current year and each year since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: As at 12 November 1985 there were 315 convicted prisoners held in prison custody in England and Wales confirmed in category 'A'. Of these, 45, or 14·28 per cent. were convicted of terrorist offences relating to the present situation in Northern Ireland; 29 were born in Northern Ireland, 12 in the Republic of Ireland, three in England and one in Scotland. Similar information for earlier years is not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the number of prisoners in category A who have been held in single cellular confinement in each year since 1979, indicating those who have been convicted of offences connected with the present troubles in Northern Ireland;

(2) what has been the average time spent by category A prisoners in single cellular confinement for each year since 1979; and what is the longest time and what is the shortest time so spent;

(3) what is the average time spent by category A prisoners convicted of offences associated with the present troubles in Northern Ireland in single cellular confinement; how many such prisoners have been so confined; and what has been the shortest and longest time of such detention.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what offences category A prisoners are placed in single cellular confinement.

Mr. Mellor: The prison rules provide that an award of cellular confinement may be made if a prisoner is found guilty of an offence against discipline. No distinctions are made on the grounds of a prisoner's security category.

Criminal Statistics

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of unlawful killing were (a) investigated by the police and (b) led to convictions for (i) murder and (ii) manslaughter, between 1955 and 1965, between 1965 and 1975 and between 1975 and 1985, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: In the absence of a court decision, it is not possible to distinguish between offences of murder, manslaughter and infanticide; they are, collectively homicide. The information available is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales"; chapter 4 of the latest volume for 1984 (Cmnd. 9621) gives statistics for the period 1974-1984. The figures for 1955 to 1984 are summarised in the following table. Corresponding information for 1985 is not yet available.

Persons convicted of homicide by outcome of proceedings

England and Wales Number

Year	Offences initially recorded as homicide	Persons convicted of
		Murder	Section† Manslaughter	Other Manslaughter	Infanticide

‡ For offences recorded in 1984, there were 144 persons who had been committed for trial for homicide and for whom the outcome of proceedings was not yet known.

Fraud

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable as to the number of new investigations started by the City of London police company fraud squad for each year since 1979; how many of those investigations have been completed since 1979; how many of these investigations have led to prosecutions; and how many of these investigations have been referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable as to how many of the investigations commenced by the City of London's police company fraud department have been referred to the Department of Trade and Industry or to the City Solicitor for assistance; of these how many have been completed; and how many led to prosecution.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the commissioner of the City of London police that it may not be practicable to provide information in exactly the form requested, but the information that can be made available will be provided as soon as possible.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable as to the number of new investigations into city fraud started by the Metropolitan police for each year since 1979 and how many of these investigations have led to prosecutions since 1979; how many of these investigations have been referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions; and of the latter, how many have led to prosecutions; and how many have been completed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that it is most unlikely, because of the geographical boundaries of his force, that any new investigations into city fraud were started by his force during the period specified. Such frauds are normally investigated by the City of London police.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prisoners in prison on 31 October.

Mr. Mellor: On 31 October 1985 about 46,900 persons were held in prison department establishments in England and Wales.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers there were on 31 October.

Mr. Mellor: On 1 November 1985 — the nearest convenient date for which figures are available — there were 18,527 full-time and 49 part-time members of the prison officer class employed in prison department establishments in England and Wales.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons have more than the certified number of prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: On 22 November 1985, 53 establishments had a population greater than their certified normal accommodation.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff other than warden staff or prison officers are employed in prisons in England and Wales; and what is the ratio of such staff to prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: On 1 November 1985 there were 6,577 members of staff, other than governor and prison officer grades, employed full or part-time in prison department establishments in England and Wales: a ratio of approximately one member of staff to seven prisoners.

Records of staff employed locally on a sessional basis are not kept centrally: this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average weekly cost of keeping a convicted prisoner in each of the various categories of prison.

Mr. Mellor: In the financial year 1984-85 the average weekly cost of keeping a person in each of the various types of penal establishment was as follows:

Type of establishment	£
Local prisons and adult remand centres	241
Dispersal prisons	482
Category B training prisons	255
Category C training prisons	196
Open adult prisons	164
Closed youth establishments	269
Open youth establishments	294
Female establishments	363

It is not possible to distinguish between the costs of keeping convicted and unconvicted persons in custody.

Civil Defence

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which local authorities have applied for grant aid for the purpose of establishing, equipping or maintaining emergency centres, pursuant to regulation 4(1)(a) of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983, since 11 July;

(2) which local authorities have applied for grant aid for the purpose of establishing, equipping or maintaining emergency centres, pursuant to regulation 5(1)(c) of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Function) Regulations 1983 since 11 July.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Listed below are those county councils and district councils which have applied for grant aid under regulations 4(1)(b) and 5(1)(c) respectively of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983 since 11 July to establish, equip or maintain emergency centres.

Satellite Broadcasting

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to seek further powers of control over the operation of satellites, satellite transmissions and the content of programmes broadcast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: A full regulatory regime for United Kingdom direct broadcasting by satellite is contained in part II of the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984, although no such service exists at the present time. It is expected that services transmitted from low-powered satellites in the United Kingdom will continue to be aimed primarily at cable head ends and so their content will fall to be regulated by the Cable Authority under the powers of part I of the 1984 Act. However, as my hon. Friend the Minister of State Department of Trade and Industry explained in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 23 May at columns 489-90, if future services develop in this country which are intended exclusively for direct reception in the United Kingdom and clearly demonstrate the need for additional regulatory powers, the Government will consider what steps might be necessary to provide the appropriate regulation.

Satellite services transmitted from abroad fall under the regulatory control of the transmitting country. Services transmitted from member states of the Council of Europe will be subject to the general rules on advertising and programme content set out in Council of Europe recommendations No. R(84)3 and No. R(84)22, copies of which will be available shortly.

Rape (Anonymity of Defendants)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on his Department's review of the anonymity of defendants in rape cases;

(2) if he has any plans to bring forward legislation to remove the anonymity of defendants in rape cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: In its report on sexual offences, published last year, the Criminal Law Revision Committee recommended that anonymity should be removed from defendants in rape cases. The Government will announce their conclusions on this matter in due course.

Public Houses (Flexible Licensing)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has recently received concerning flexible licensing hours for public houses.

Mr. Mellor: Since 24 October, we have received five letters from hon. Members on behalf of constituents, one letter from an organisation, and 10 letters from members of the public about permitted opening hours for on-licensed premises. Of the 16, 13 supported relaxations in the law and three were opposed.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to allow more flexible licensing of public houses.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Test (Mr. Hill) on 26 November at column 516.

Stansted Hijacking

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what undertaking Her Majesty's Government gave to the Tanzanian hijackers in consideration of their surrendering during the Stansted hijacking incident in 1982; what intermediaries were involved; and in what way.

Mr. Hurd: The hijackers were told that, if they surrendered, they would not be returned to Tanzania, but would be arrested and charged with criminal offences. They were told that they would be tried by a British court and that any sentence passed by the court would be served in this country. Direct negotiations with the hijackers were carried out by the police. These undertakings were confirmed in writing on 29 April 1982 after the hijack was over to my hon. Friend the Member of Beverley (Sir P. Wall).

Dealings between Ministers and Members of this House rest on the assumption that undertakings between them will be honoured.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost of keeping in prison Mr. Yassin Membar and Mr. Mohammed Tahir Ahmed of Tanzania, convicted following the Stansted hijacking incident in 1982.

Mr. Mellor: It is not possible to determine the costs of keeping individual persons in custody. Mr. Yassin Membar and Mr. Mohammed Tahir Ahmed were held in a number of local prisons between 1982 and 1984. In the corresponding financial years, the average weekly costs of keeping a person in an establishment of this type were as follows:

1982-83	200
1984-85	241

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now take steps to deport Mr. Yassin Membar and Mr. Mohammed Tahir Ahmed following their recent release from prison.

Mr. Waddington: No. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. Dicks) on 27 November.

Advancement of Women

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those paragraphs of the conclusions of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women which Her Majesty's Government have already implemented.

Mr. Waddington: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that by the year 2000, Her Majesty's Government have comprehensive policies for the implementation of paragraph 78 of the conclusion of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women, relating to the full and equal participation of women in society;

(2) what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to seek to implement paragraph 77 of the conclusion of the Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women relating to the removal of discriminatory attitudes and practices.

Mr. Waddington: The Government are committed to the elimination of sex discrimination by all appropriate means. These will include sensible and effective enforcement of the relevant legislation and support for the Equal Opportunities Commission in the pursuit of its statutory duties to work towards the elimination of discrimination, to promote equality of opportunity between men and women generally and to keep under review the working of the Sex Discrimination and Equal Pay Acts.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the action which the Equal Opportunities Commission proposes to take in pursuance of the aims of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women; and what funds will be made available for this purpose.

Mr. Waddington: It is for the Equal Opportunities Commission to determine how best to discharge its statutory duties under the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 within the resources available to the commission.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often he has met the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss the implementation of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women; and what future plans he has for such meetings.

Mr. Waddington: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission in London on 28 October and he intends to visit the commission in Manchester early in 1986. As is usual in the case of meetings with the commission he expects that they shall be discussing a wide range of matters of common concern.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up an inter-departmental working group to discuss and plan the implementation of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mr. Waddington: We have at present no plans to do so.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for implementing paragraph 58 of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women, in relation to the collection of statistics on the situation of women.

Mr. Waddington: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question by the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Deakins) on 29 November 1985 at column 696.

Sexual Offences Act 1985

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received (a) about the law of rape generally and (b) about the operation of the Sexual Offences Act 1985 from (i) the city of Liverpool and (ii) the Liverpool, Riverside constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We are not aware of having received any such representations within the last six months.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Liverpool as to his arrangements for interviewing and examining alleged rape victims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constable of the Merseyside police that interviews of rape victims are conducted by experienced and specially trained women police officers. Medical examinations are conducted with the victim's consent, by police surgeons, usually in the surgeon's room at a police station. The examination is carried out by a female surgeon if the victim so requests.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis as to his arrangements for interviewing and examining alleged rape victims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that statements by rape victims are taken at the police station by women police officers who are specially trained for this purpose. Medical examinations are carried out, with the victim's consent, either at a doctor's surgery or in a divisonal surgeon's room at a police station. If the victim so requests, the examination is conducted by a woman doctor. The Metropolitan police plan to open a number of special victim examination suites for the victims of rape and serious sexual assaults, comprising an interview room, an examination room and shower facilities.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the working of the Sexual Offences Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Sexual Offences Act 1985 came into force only on 16 September. It is too soon to form any reliable impression of its effectiveness.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many persons have been arrested under the Sexual Offences Act 1985 in England and Wales to the latest date.

Mr. Mellor: There is no power of arrest under the Sexual Offences Act 1985 and no information is yet available centrally on the numbers of offences under this Act.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Merseyside as to how many persons have been arrested in (a) the Liverpool, Riverside constituency and (b) the city of Liverpool under the Sexual Offences Act 1985 to the latest date.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Sexual Offences Act 1985 does not contain a power of arrest. Details of offences to date under the Act in the Merseyside police area are not available. From 1 January 1985 such offences will be recorded by the Merseyside police on a force-wide basis.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many rapes have been reported in (a) the city of Liverpool and (b) the metropolitan county of Merseyside in each of the past five years.

Mr. Mellor: The information available centrally is for police force areas and is published annually in table S.3.1 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", supplementary tables, volume 3.

Rape Crisis Centres

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much funding was made to rape crisis centres in England and Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: The rape counselling and research project receives a grant from the Department of Health and Social Security. The amount of that grant in each of the last five financial years, including supplementary payments, was as follows:

1982-83	20,000
1983-84	26,000
1984-85	23,953
1985-86	22,000

Local rape crises centres are not provided with direct Government funding, but can apply in the same way as other voluntary organisations for financial assistance under various general Government programmes, such as the urban programme. The Department has no information about the funding obtained by rape crises centres under general Government programmes or from local authorities.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now make a grant to the Liverpool rape crisis centre.

Mr. Mellor: Financial assistance from the Home Office to the victim support movement is confined to a grant made to the National Association of Victim Support Schemes for the purpose of its headquarters operations. My right hon. Friend is considering the possibility of making some limited provision for assisting local schemes which help the victims of crime in general, but we regret that we can offer no prospect of a Home Office grant being made specifically to the Liverpool rape crisis centre.

Rape Victims (Compensation)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board has any plans to increase the general level of compensation to victims of rape; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Under the terms of the criminal injuries compensation scheme, compensation is assessed in each individual case by the board on the basis of the damages to which the applicant would be entitled in a civil action. It is not open to the board to revise the general level of awards except in recognition of changes in the level of civil damages.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Equal Opportunities Commission's budget for the current financial year; and for what purposes this money is allocated.

Mr. Waddington: The Equal Opportunities Commission's budget for 1985-86 is £3·434 million. Within this total £1·933 million is allocated to salaries and commissioners' fees, and £1·501 million to administrative expenses, including legal costs and provision for the commission's own grant-aiding activities.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are employed by the Equal Opportunities Commission; and in what capacities.

Mr. Waddington: I understand that on 31 October 1985 the Equal Opportunities Commission employed 180 persons, of whom 39 were part-time. The commission's staff are available for duties appropriate to their grade in relation to any of the work of the commission.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Midlothian can expect a final reply to his most recent letter concerning a constituent about whom the hon. Member first wrote to him on 24 April.

Mr. Waddington: The necessary inquiries have now been completed and I shall be writing to the hon. Member very shortly.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Monetary System

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amendments are currently proposed to the Treaty of Rome in respect of the European monetary system; what is the attitude of Her Majesty's Government to each; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Commission and Belgium have proposed a number of amendments to the monetary provisions of the treaty. In the Government's view, the key to progress in the monetary field lies not in treaty amendment but in practical steps, and in particular the liberalisation of capital movements as provided for in the existing treaty.

Advancement of Women

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to seek to implement paragraph 259 of the conclusions of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women, relating to the position of women under apartheid.

Mr. Rifkind: The United Kingdom was pleased to join consensus on the document "Forward-Looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women", but we reserved our position on several paragraphs, including paragraph 259. Our reservations were placed on record in the report of the world conference, copies of which are in the Library of the House (A/CONF. 116/28).

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to implement paragraph 264 of the conclusions of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women, relating to the participation of women in United Nations International Year of Peace 1986.

Mr. Eggar: During 1986 Government information on defence and disarmament questions will draw attention to the international year of peace. Individuals must decide how best they can contribute to the aims of the year; we hope they will do so by supporting policies which genuinely further the cause of peace.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now publish the document, "The Nairobi Forward Looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women".

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Deakins) on 29 November at column 707. The report of the world conference of the United Nations decade for women will also be available from booksellers as a United Nations sales publication.

International Institutions (Government Expenditure)

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the Government expenditure during the last financial year on the Council of Europe, the Western European Union, the North Atlantic Assembly, the Inter-Parliamentary Union and the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, respectively.

Mr. Eggar: Payments to the Council of Europe, Western European Union Secretariat and Assembly and the North Atlantic Assembly in respect of the United Kingdom share of their budgets during the financial year 1984-85 were as follows:

Council of Europe	5,040,000
Western European Union	932,000
North Atlantic Assembly	171,000

Expenditure on the Inter-Parliamentary Union and the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. However, I understand that expenditure was as follows:

Inter-Parliamentary Union	325,000
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association	445,000

International Peace Year

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the conference that Her Majesty's Government have undertaken to hold to mark the United Nations international peace year.

Mr. Eggar: The conference will be held at the Wiston House conference centre at a date to be decided. Its purpose will be to examine international peacekeeping and the peaceful resolution of conflicts. We shall invite eminent individuals with practical or academic experience of these issues and hope that deliberations will make a significant contribution in this important field.

Gibraltar

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will ultimately be responsible for payments to former Spanish workers in Gibraltar of their pensions which were frozen as a result of Spanish Government action under European Economic Community regulations.

Mr. Eggar: Under Gibraltar law and under EC regulations, responsibility for payments of pensions rests with the Gibraltar Government. We are having discussions with the Gibraltar Government about how this responsibility will be met.

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the £28 million provided by Her Majesty's Government for the Gibraltar dockyard is monitored; and if he will make a statement on the extent to which information on the application of these funds is available to right hon. and hon. Members, the Gibraltar Government and other people of Gibraltar, and from where information is available in each case.

Mr. Raison: Monitoring is effected through ODA representation on the board of directors of Gibraltar Shiprepair Limited and by regular visits by officials.

Gibraltar company law requires published annual audited statements that are readily available to interested parties. Matters concerning the company are also discussed in the Gibraltar House of Assembly and reported locally.

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to secure a comprehensive test ban treaty on nuclear weapons; and what proposals have been made as to how verification techniques could be improved to ensure compliance.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 20 November at column 271.

Achille Lauro

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what basis his Department charged the British subjects involved in the hijack of the Achille Lauro passenger ship for their return flights to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The British subjects involved in the hijack of the Achillo Lauro were charged on the basis of the undertakings to repay and requests for repatriation which they signed, the terms of which made it clear that the advances for their return fares to the United Kingdom were temporary and repayable. We have, however, absolutely no wish to cause financial hardship to the victims of this hijacking. I have written to the six people involved and instructed officials in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to discuss with them possible methods and sources of repayment. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office will be as helpful and sympathetic as it can.

WALES

Drug Addiction

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been made available by the Welsh Office for the combating of drugs problems in Gwynedd during the present year; how much is likely to be actually spent on this work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Forty four thousand and five hundred pounds has been made available in 1985-86 to Gwynedd health authority to fund the appointment of two community workers to provide advisory and counselling services for drug misusers and their families and a specialist health education officer concerned with addiction. A further £10,000 has been made available to the health authority for the production of a Welsh language curriculum pack on drug education. I understand that the health authority's current estimate is that £40,000 in total will be spent in the financial year.

Literacy Service

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons he has working on the literacy service in Wales within his own Department.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Matters related to literacy in Wales are dealt with as part of the functions carried out by our Education Department. There are no officials in our Department whose sole responsible is literacy policy.

Refuse Disposal (Water Pollution)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will arrange for a survey to be undertaken of all locations of refusal disposal in Wales in order to ascertain to what degree water from the refuse finds its way into the food cycle in the area, or potentially becomes a source of contamination of subterranean water supplies.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I am satisfied that such a survey is not necessary as under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 waste disposal authorities in consultation with water authorities are required to ensure that waste disposal sites do not cause pollution of water or danger to public health. Water authorities regularly monitor discharges from such sites and the quality of ground and surface water.

Ambulance Workers (Pay Increases)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how he anticipates that the necessary funds will be found by health authorities in Wales to fund the recently announced pay increases for ambulance workers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what he expects to be the total effect on public expenditure on the National Health Service in Wales arising from the recent proposals for a restructuring of ambulance workers' pay.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Health authorities are expected to meet all pay increases within the total sums available to them. There has as yet been no pay settlement covering all ambulance workers in 1985-86 but any increase would be contained within 4·7 per cent. on the pay bill. The trade union side of the ambulance council is consulting its members on a proposal for a salaried structure, the cost of which will depend upon the outcome of local agreements on productivity.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing for 1985-86 and for each of the past 20 years the total expenditure on the services provided by: (a) health authorities in Wales and their predecessors and (b) the Gwynedd health authority and its predecessors, respectively.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is not available for years prior to 1974-75, and not yet available for 1985-86.

For the years 1974-75 to 1984-85 the information is as follows:

	All health authorities in Wales £000	Gwynedd health authority £000
1974-75	198,288	14,983

Welsh Language Development Body

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report those bodies with which he consulted concerning the possibility of establishing a Welsh language development body; and if he will state the basis on which he decides with whom to consult on such matters.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The bodies which were consulted formally are listed below. In addition my hon. Friend the Member for Monmouth (Sir J. Stradling Thomas) met representatives of six bodies having a particular interest in the Welsh language. The selection of the bodies to be consulted on this matter, as in other cases, is based on the relevence of their particular responsibilities and functions to the matter under consideration.

Felinheli bypass

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now publish the anticipated timescale for decisions and action relating to the construction of the Felinheli bypass.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There will be a public exhibition of the proposed scheme from 11 to 13 December 1985. Taking account of the work on the detailed design of the scheme and the need to complete statutory procedures, the provisional planning target is to have the project ready to start early in 1989.

Goat Farmers

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what support is given by his Department and the European commission to goat farmers.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Grant aid is available under the agriculture improvement scheme for goat farmers who have an approved improvement plan. The scheme implements EC regulation 797/85. Grant is available on most types of farm improvement and rates vary from 15 per cent. in the lowland to 60 per cent. in the less favoured area.

Member states are free under Community regulations to pay hill livestock compensatory allowances on goats, but the United Kingdom restricts payment of these allowances to sheep and meat producing cows.

National Health Service Statistics

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give, for each year since 1979 and for each district health authority in Wales, the total number of beds in National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information relating to the number of hospital beds for each health authority in Wales is published annually in "Bed Use Statistics". A copy of the publication for each of the years 1979 to 1984 is available in the Library.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give, for each year since 1979 and for each district health authority in Wales, the total number of National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is as follows:

Departmental Appointments

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he if he will list all those bodies to which his Department makes appointments, the number of appointees and the number of these who are women.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: This information is contained in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1984" a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library. The 1985 edition will be published shortly.

Advancement of Women

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has had any meetings with the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss the implementation of those parts of the Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women relevant to his Department; and if he has any future plans for such meetings.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have not met the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss the strategies and have no plans to do so.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to evaluate progress towards implementation of those parts of the United Nations Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women which apply to his Department; what resources he has allocated to this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Copies of the strategies document have recently been received by my Department. Some of its recommendations are relevant to the Welsh Office's responsibilities, and are being studied at present.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for implementing paragraph 58 of the Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women, relating to the collection of statistics on the situation of women.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: My Department collects and publishes many statistics in which information is disaggregated by sex.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will establish a special office within his Department to monitor periodically and accelerate the process of equitable representation of women as called for in paragraph 88 of the United Nations Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: My Department has appointed an equal opportunities officer who is responsible for co-ordinating the Civil Service policy on non-discrimination within the Welsh Office.

Hospital Development

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hospital development schemes costing over £5 million in Wales (a) completed since May 1979 and (b) started since May 1979, giving for each the district, the number of beds involved, the completion date and the cost.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information on hospital development schemes in Wales costing over £5 million is given in the following tables:

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each health district in Wales the revenue and capital expenditure in each year since 1974, expressing the figures (a) in money terms, (b) adjusted by the gross domestic product deflator and (c) adjusted by the movement of National Health Service pay and prices.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is not readily available. I shall however write to the hon. Gentleman and will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Anglo-Irish Summit (Security)

Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much it cost to secure Hillsborough castle on the occasion of the Anglo-Irish summit on 15 November.

Mr. King: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Planning Procedures

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, in view of the delays in planning application decisions arising from the indefinite close-down by the majority of district councils, he will make a statement about alternative procedures to consider and decide upon planning applications.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is required to consult district councils on all planning applications. This consultation takes the form of a presentation to councils on a regular basis of a schedule of applications received, indicating the preliminary opinion of the Department as to how the application is to be determined. Following established procedure if the Department does not receive the comments of the council within a reasonable period a decision issues in accordance with the preliminary opinion.

National Health Service (Revenue and Expenditure)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for each health and social services board the revenue and capital expenditure on National Health Service services in each year since 1974, expressing the figures (a) in money terms, (b) adjusted by the gross domestic product deflator and (c) adjusted by the movement of National Health Service pay and prices.

Mr. Needham: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

Rail Services (Strathclyde)

55. Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is satisfied that those rail services in Strathclyde which are currently being supported under section 20 of the Transport Act 1968 will continue to be so after the Transport Act 1985 comes into operation.

Mr. Ancram: This is a matter for Strathclyde regional council, which is responsible for the subsidy paid under section 20. The future operation of these services should however be much assisted by the implementation of the Strathclyde rail review proposals for which my right hon. Friend has offered grant assistance.

National Health Service Hospitals

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each year since 1979 and for each health board, the total number of National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is as follows.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each year since 1979 and for each health board, the total number of beds in National Health hospitals.

Mr. John MacKay: The average number of available staffed beds in each health board in the years concerned was as follows:

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he expects the Forestry Commission's review of its regional advisory committees to be complete.

(2) if the Forestry Commission will be consultanting the voluntary bodies as part of its review of the commission's regional advisory committees.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. Friend expects to receive in the new year the Forestry Commission's proposals on the public accountability of regional advisory committees. Consultations will be held thereafter with a number of bodies, including voluntary bodies, before final decisions are taken.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what public meetings have been arranged by the Forestry Commission in each of its seven conservancies to consult on the implementation of the new broadleaf policy;

(2) which national organisation the Forestry Commission has notified in advance of public meetings arranged in each of its seven conservancies on the implementation of its new broadleaf policy.

Mr. John MacKay: No public meetings have been arranged in the sense of meetings which have been advertised and to which the general public have been invited. The commission has, however, held or arranged a number of meetings with those bodies and individuals likely to have an involvement in the implementation of the policy.

The national organisations participating in such meetings include:

Association for the Protection of Rural Scotland
Association of Trusts for Conservation in Wales
British Association for Shooting and Conservation
British Timber Merchants Association
British Trust for Conservation Volunteers
British Trust for Ornithology
Council for the Protection of Rural England
Council for the Protection of Rural Wales
Country Landowners Association
Countryside Trust
Farmers Union of Wales
Friends of the Earth
Friends of the Earth (Scotland)
Institute of Chartered Foresters
Landscape Institute
National Coal Board Open Cast Executive National Farmers Union
National Trust
National Trust for Scotland
Royal Forestry Society
Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors
Royal Society for Nature Conservation
Royal Society for the Protection of Birds

Scottish Conservation Projects
Scottish Field Studies Association
Scottish Landowners Federation
Scottish Wildlife Trust
Timber Growers United Kingdom
Tree Council
Woodland Trust

In addition, the Agriculture Departments, the Countryside Commissions, the Nature Conservancy Council and local authorities have been involved.

The numbers of meetings that have been organised in each of the Commission's Conservancies are:

	Number
North England	11
East England	18
West England	9
Wales	8
North Scotland	1
Mid Scotland	2
South Scotland	3

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the senior officer designated by the Forestry Commission in each of its seven conservancies who will be responsible for co-ordinating the new broadleaf policy; and for each officer, if he will give his or her previous position within the commission.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is as follows:

Conservancy	Name	Previous position
North England	Mr. R. O. Smith	Forest district manager, Lothian and Tweed
East England	Mr. N. Dannatt	Assistant conservator (forest management) North West England
West England	Mr. M. H. Orrom	Assistant conservator (forest management) South West England
Wales	Mr. A. H. Scott	Assistant conservator (forest management) North Wales
North Scotland	Mr. A. M. Calder	Assistant conservator (forest management) North Scotland
Mid Scotland	Mr. R. D. L. Toleman	Assistant conservator (forest management) West Scotland
South Scotland	Mr. J. Y. Ogilvie	Assistant conservator (forest management) South Scotland

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Forestry Commission will make site visits on a full or sub-sample basis to check whether the management objectives of the new broadleaf scheme are being achieved.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission will inspect each site which is the subject of an application for entry to the broadleaved woodland grant scheme to determine whether the objectives of the application are in accordance with the management guidelines for broadleaved woodlands. When claims for grant are subsequently made under the scheme, the commission will make sample checks to ensure that the work has been carried out to a satisfactory standard and that this is in accordance with the objectives approved at the time of the approval of the application.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements the Forestry Commission has made for monitoring its new broadleaf policy.

Mr. John MacKay: Quantitative aspects of the policy will be monitored by collecting information on the planting and natural regeneration of broadleaves under the Forestry Commission's grant schemes and on the licensed felling of broadleaves. Qualitative aspects will be monitored by commission staff in the course of field visits. The commission is discussing with the Nature Conservancy Council ways in which the nature conservation aspects of the policy might best be monitored.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, as part of its broadleaf policy, the Forestry Commission plans to monitor (a) the number of grant applications, (b) the area (in hectares) covered by each successful grant application, (c) the composition of tree species being planted and regenerated and (d) the planting density of grant-aided works.

Mr. John MacKay: Yes. The Forestry Commission will be monitoring each of these aspects.

Cemeteries

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to give powers to local authorities to enforce reasonable standards of maintenance in commercially-owned cemeteries and burial grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: Maintenance of commercially-owned cemeteries and burial grounds is primarily the responsibility of their owners. Planning authorities are, however, empowered by section 63 of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972, if they consider that the amenity of any part of their district is seriously injured by reason of the derelict, waste or neglected condition of any land, to serve on the owner a notice requiring steps to be taken to abate the injury. Section 88 as applied by section 63(3) of the 1972 Act provides that, if such a notice is not complied with, the planning authority may themselves take the steps specified in the notice, and may recover from the owner any expenses reasonably incurred by them in doing so. Against this background, I see no need for further legislation to be introduced.

Maternity Beds

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the maternity bed provision by each health board in Scotland expressed as a percentage of the population served by each board.

Mr. John MacKay: The latest comprehensive data available relate to the average number of staffed beds in the year to 31 March 1984. These are expressed below in terms of the number per 10,000 resident population: in some cases individual maternity units also serve patients from neighbouring boards.

Health Board	Number of Obstetric beds	Number per 10,000 population
Argyll and Clyde	247	5·5

Lothian	402	5·4
Orkney	12	6·2
Shetland	11	4·7
Tayside	218	5·6
Western Isles	17	5·4

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to health boards on defining catchment areas for maternity beds.

Mr. John MacKay: None. This is a matter for each health board to determine in the light of local circumstances.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to health boards on maternity bed provision.

Mr. John MacKay: None. The provision of maternity services is a matter for health boards in the first instance although specific proposals for major capital developments require the approval of the Scottish Home and Health Department when such matters may be discussed.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many births took place each year for the past five years in each health board area expressed as a percentage of the population served by the boards.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is as follows:

Births as a percentage of population 1980-84

Maternity Units

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many maternity units currently serve the city of Glasgow and its environs; and what is the total maternity bed provision.

Mr. John MacKay: There are five maternity units within Greater Glasgow health board with, in the year ending 31 March 1985, a total average staffed bed number of 524.

Health Boards (Consultation)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to health boards on consultation with interested parties when any service provided by a board is proposed for withdrawal.

Mr. John MacKay: The procedures to be adopted by health boards are set out in the Scottish Home and Health Department circular 1975(GEN)46, a copy of which is being placed in the Library today.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he or his hon. Friend the Member for Argyll and Bute (Mr. MacKay), the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, last met the chairman of the Greater Glasgow health board; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. John MacKay: I last met the chairman of Greater Glasgow health board on 12 November 1985 at one of my regular meetings with all chairmen. A wide range of issues affecting the health service were discussed.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Greater Glasgow health board proposing the closure of the Stobhill hospital maternity unit; when he intends to respond; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: As yet I have received none. In due course, however, the Greater Glasgow health board will have to seek my right hon. Friend's agreement to the proposed closure.

Students (Module Fees)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Scottish students who are being refused their national certificate by the Scottish Vocational Educational Council until they pay their module fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Falkirk, East (Mr. Ewing) on 22 November 1985 at column 330. I have received representations from the deputy president of the National Union of Students in Scotland. I will see that the hon. Member receives a copy of my reply to the National Union of Students.

Certificate of Education

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received regarding the outcome of the 1985 Scottish certificate of education awards.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend and I have received 42 letters specifically related to awards received by candidates in the 1985 Scottish certificate of education examinations. In addition the 1985 SCE results have been mentioned in more general terms in correspondence about the teachers' dispute.

National Health Service (Revenue and Expenditure)

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the outturn revenue spending of each area health board in Scotland for each year from 1979-80 to 1984-85 and the budgeted revenue spending for 1985-86, all expressed in constant 1985-86 prices on the basis of the cost and price factors relevant to the National Health Service, along with indices for each year for each board's spending taking 1979-80 as 100.

Mr. Younger: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the revenue and capital expenditure in each year since 1974, expressing the figures (a) in money terms, (b) adjusted by the gross domestic product deflator and (c) adjusted by the movement of National Health Service pay and prices.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Hospital Development

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the hospital development schemes costing over £5 million in Scotland (a) completed since May 1979 and (b) started since May 1979, giving for each the health board, the number of beds involved, the completion date and the cost.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is as follows:

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Decisions

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that local planning decisions taken by local authorities are overturned by his Department only in exceptional circumstances.

Mr. Tracey: Appeals against decisions on planning applications can be decided by the Secretary of State only in accordance with the provisions of section 36(5) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, that is, inter alia, having regard to the provisions of the development plan, so far as relevant to the appeal, and to any other material considerations.

Brixton (Job Creation)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about his discussions with the Greater London Enterprise Board on job creation measures for Brixton.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend has had no discussions with the Greater London Enterprise Board on this matter.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how long he expects the discussions with local authorities on the implementation of the repairs identified in the departmental report into the condition of local authority housing stock in England to last; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The report was discussed with the local authority associations during the Housing Consultative Council meeting on 27 November. It was agreed that there should be further discussions. We have not set any time limit for these.

Use Classes Order (Review)

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made with the review of the use classes order under the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, announced in paragraph 3.6(iii) of the White Paper "Lifting the Burden," Cmnd 9571.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Use Classes Order, which has not been substantially changed since it was first introduced in 1948, was in need of review in the light of today's conditions. As a first step, I invited a sub-group of the Property Advisory Group to undertake an urgent study of the order and to make recommendations on ways in which it needs amendment, in particular so as to reduce the number of classes to the minimum consistent with retaining effective control over changes of use which, because of their environmental consequences or relationship with other uses, need to be subject to specific control.

I am grateful to the sub-group for completing its work so promptly. In sum the recommendations propose significant changes in the present system which are designed to reduce its detailed constraints. I welcome this approach, but I will need to consider the comments of interested persons and bodies before reaching conclusions on the sub-group's detailed recommendations. I am arranging for the report to be published so that all those interested in the revision of the Use Classes Order will have the opportunity to express their views.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library. Copies are also being sent today to the local authority associations and other interested bodies with the request that they should send to the Department by 3 February 1986 any comments which they may have on the sub-group's proposals.

Water Rates

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the percentage increase in domestic water rates in each year since 1979, respectively; and, in each case, what has been the whole increase between 1979 and 1985 in cash and real terms.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire North-East (Mr. Freud) on 21 November 1985 at column 260.

New Houses

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the value at constant prices of new orders obtained by contractors for all new housing in the first three quarters of 1985 compared with 1984 and 1983.

Mr. John Patten: The following is the information for Great Britain at 1980 constant prices.

First three quarters

	£ million
1983	3,305
1985	2,897

These values do not include orders for home improvement work.

Rented Properties

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is his intention to bring forward proposals in this Parliament to seek to encourage potential resident landlords to let.

Sir George Young: Resident landlord lettings are not subject to fair rents or to security of tenure under the Rent Act. We introduced measures in the Housing Act 1980 to assist resident landlords and we shall consider further action in the context of the legislation which we hope to introduce, probably in the next Parliament, to stimulate the supply of private rented accommodation.

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the average gross return yielded by registered fair rents on the vacant possession value of privately rented properties.

Sir George Young: Information about the relationship between fair rents and capital values is collected via the "Beacons" exercise, which provides estimates of fair rents for specified dwelling types by area, together with estimates of capital values assuming vacant possession. The results of the Beacons exercise on 1 January 1985 are published in a rent officer statistical note, RO(S)72, a copy of which is available in the Library. The mean gross return on capital values in England and Wales for the specified dwelling types varied between 3 per cent. and 4 per cent. Data for 1 July 1985 will be published shortly.

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his estimate of the current breakdown of the total numbers of dwellings occupied in the private rented sector including fully protected tenancies, holiday lets, lets with board, lets with attendance, lets by absent owner-occupiers and lets on licence;

(2) what is his estimate of the current numbers of dwellings occupied in the private rented sector; and what proportion of total dwellings this represents.

Sir George Young: Latest estimates of the current stock of privately rented dwellings, and the proportion this represents of the total dwelling stock, are published in Housing and Construction Statistics 1974-1984, table 9.4, a copy of which is available in the Library. This shows that the private rented sector in England is now estimated to include about 1·65 million dwellings, 8·9 per cent. of the total stock. Information enabling this estimate to be broken down according to type of lettings is not collected.

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he can give any information about the change in the supply of privately rented accommodation as a result of the House of Lords' decision in Street v. Mountford.

Sir George Young: My Department has no information on this.

Rent Acts

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to amend the Rent Acts in the light of the House of Lords' decision in the case of Street v. Mountford regarding licences.

Sir George Young: The implications of this decision will be one of the matters to be taken into account when the Government consider legislation, probably in the next Parliament, to stimulate the supply of private rented accommodation.

Development Proposals

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what procedures have been adopted to ensure that development proposals within areas which are recognised as being of sufficient importance to merit listing as special protection areas under directive 70/409 are given rigorous scrutiny.

Mrs. Rumbold: The United Kingdom obligations in relation to sites which meet the criteria for listing under the EC birds directive are covered by the site protection measures enacted in the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Where development proposals affect an SSSI, the NCC must be consulted so that conservation interests can be taken into account. The NCC may ask the appropriate Secretary of State to consider determining any application which in their view may have a significant effect on the nature conservation interest of a site.

Inner City Aid

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to involve the private sector in his reform of inner city aid; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The ministerial guidelines for the urban programme indicate that local authorities should work with the private sector and should in particular consult the local private sector on the scope and content of inner area programmes as they are being drawn up. Within the urban programme, encouragement is given to economic projects, those which stimulate wealth creation, increase economic activity and employment opportunities, bring idle assets of land and buildings into use, remove obstacles to development and investment, and improve business confidence. Local authorities are also encouraged to make full use of urban development grant, which is intended to bring about private sector investment in inner urban areas.

Yorkshire Water Authority

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that the Yorkshire water authority repays its existing debt only when it falls due, and not earlier.

Mr. John Patten: No, although at present the authority is continuing to increase its indebtedness.

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of charges by the Yorkshire water authority to its customers for the year 1986-87.

Mr. John Patten: The authority does not fix its charges until it makes its budget early next year but on present indications an average increase of about 9 per cent. appears likely.

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy not to require the Yorkshire water authority to finance capital spending from charges to customers.

Mr. John Patten: No. Such a rule has no more general application in the public sector than it does in the private sector.

Water Authorities

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will set the external financing limits for the regional water authorities for the year 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The external finance limits I have notified (excluding MAFF grants which are additional and will be notified separately in due course) are:

	£ million
Anglian	40·5
Northumbrian	20

	£ million
Severn Trent	2·5
South West	4
Southern	0
Thames	−85
Wessex	25
Yorkshire	32

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that water authorities should be able to raise capital to finance their capital programmes on the open market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: It is Government policy at present that water authorities and other nationalised industries should normally take their loan finance from the national loans fund. This has the benefit of lower costs for the public sector and the industry itself.

Glanford and Scunthorpe

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate what effect regional aid grant of three enterprise zones, his Department's special employment measures, grants and cheap loans from the European Economic Community, derelict land grants, urban aid grants and the activities of English Industrial Estates have had upon employment in the parliamentary constituency of Glanford and Scunthorpe.

Sir George Young: I will answer this question shortly.

Water Supplies (Nitrate Content)

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of water supplies exceeds the European Economic Community guidelines for nitrate content for each water authority.

Mr. John Patten: The EC drinking water directive's maximum admissable concentration for nitrate is exceeded in one or more supplies in the following water authority areas (including water companies):

Percentage of total population to area

	Per cent.
Anglian	10
Severn-Trent	5
Thames	0·4
Yorkshire	0·045

Council Houses (Rent Arrears)

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest available figure for arrears of council house rents in England and Wales.

Sir George Young: Almost all the returns for English local authorities giving information on rent arrears of current and former tenants have now been made. The provisional indications are that gross rent arrears had risen to over £200 million by April 1985. They then represented 5·9 per cent. of gross rent collectable, compared to 5·1 per cent. at April 1984.

Arrears on this scale represent a scandalous and avoidable waste of resources. My Department and the Audit Commission have issued comprehensive guidance on how to deal with rent arrears. We will continue to press local authorities with significant arrears to put their affairs in order. I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales for figures for Welsh local authorities.

John W. McKay

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether the cable-laying ship John W. McKay is owned by the London Docklands development corporation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the annual revenue budget set aside by the London Docklands development corporation for 1986-87 and 1987-88 for maintenance and running costs in respect of the cable-laying ship John W. McKay.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 15 November at column 312.

Housing Land Price Inflation

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the influence of housing land price inflation on the level of expenditure on (a) housing benefit and (b) mortgage interest tax relief.

Mr. John Patten: The level of mortgage tax relief is determined by mortgage interest rates, tax rates, the size of mortgages raised relative to the price paid for the houses being bought, as well as by house prices. What determines the level of house prices is itself a complex matter and the cost of land is only one component.

The connection between the price of housing land and expenditure on housing benefit is even more tenuous. This is particularly so because most housing benefit is paid to tenants or residents of dwellings which are long established and for which current land prices are not a relevant consideration: capital expenditure by local authorities on land for new building is much smaller than their expenditure on their existing houses and flats.

No reliable estimate can therefore be made of how far movements in the price of housing land have influenced expenditure on housing benefit or the amount of tax relief on mortgage interest.

Empty Dwellings

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the percentage of empty dwellings in (a) the public sector, (b) the voluntary sector, (c) the private sector and (d) those owned and controlled by Her Majesty's Government, giving the numbers represented by the percentage.

Mr. John Patten: I will answer this question shortly.

Departmental Appointments

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those bodies to which his Department makes appointments, the number of appointees and the number of these who are women.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Secretary of State for the Environment makes appointments to the bodies listed in this Department's entry in the HMSO publication "Public

Advancement of Women

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what meetings he has had with the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss the implementations of those parts of the Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women relevant to his Department; and what future plans he has for such meetings;

(2) what steps he is taking to evaluate the success of those parts of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women which apply to his Department; what resources he has allocated to this; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what plans he has for implementing paragraph 58 of the Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women, which calls for the collection of timely and reliable statistics on the situation of women;

(4) whether he will establish a special office within his Department to monitor periodically and accelerate the process of equitable representation of women as called for in paragraph 88 of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department of the Environment is already reviewing its policies and procedures to ensure equality of opportunity for women in the Department. A joint committee of management and trade unions was set up in 1984 to consider such matters as recruitment, promotion, training and flexible working patterns; its work continues. Equal opportunity officers have already been appointed to oversee progress in this area. The Department of the Environment is also participating in further service-wide work on this subject including the creation of the necessary data-base, which should go a long way to meeting the recommendation in paragraph 88 of the strategies document.

As to equal opportunities in the environment field generally, the Department of the Environment is studying the text of the Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women and will be considering with other Government Departments and the Equal Opportunities Commission how best to take its conclusions forward.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the local authorities in England owning more than 40,000 dwellings, indicating the number for each authority;

(2) if he will list the numbers of housing authorities in England owning (a) between 20,000 and 30,000 dwellings and (b) between 30,000 and 40,000 dwellings.

Mr. John Patten: The authorities are listed below, with the numbers of their dwellings reported to my Department in their 1985 housing investment programme returns or 1985 subsidy claim forms.

* Figure from subsidy claim form, including dwellings owned outside the authority's area.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of empty council properties in each of the 13 districts in Hampshire on 31 October.

Sir George Young: Information for 31 October is not available. The numbers of their dwellings within their own areas, which were vacant at 1 April 1985 were included in the authorities' housing investment programme returns and are listed in col A 81 of the "HIP1 (1985) all items print" which is available in the Library.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has for each housing authority in England as to the number of dwellings classed as difficult to let, indicating the percentage this figure represents of the authority-owned stock; and what are the changes in these figures compared with 1984.

Mr. John Patten: Local authorities' annual housing investment programme returns include numbers of dwellings owned within their own areas, which they class as difficult to let. Numbers reported are not necessarily comparable as authorities' criteria may differ. The total for England at 1 April 1985, including estimates for those councils which did not provide a figure, was about 320,000, 7·1 per cent. of the stock, and was 10,000 fewer than the estimate for a year earlier. The figures for each authority are as follows:

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the percentage of those registered as unemployed who were single, widowed or separated women or women with dependent children under the age of 16 years in each year since 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: The labour force survey showed that about 19 per cent. of those in the unemployment count in Great Britain in the spring of 1984 were single, widowed, divorced or separated women, including some 3·5 per cent. who had dependent children aged under 16. Corresponding estimates for 1983 are 18 per cent. and 2·5 per cent., respectively. Comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

Mr. Foulkes: asked the Paymaster General if he will list all changes which have occurred in the method of compiling employment, unemployment and vacancy statistics since 1979; and if he will estimate the quantitative change in those statistics which has occurred as a result.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Dormand asked the Paymaster General what is the number and percentage of unemployed persons in the northern region in each of the years from 1979 to the latest available date in 1985, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The figures are adjusted for discontinuities and are consistent for all the years shown. They are the numbers of unemployed claimants, seasonally adjusted excluding school leavers, in the northern region at October of each year from 1979 to 1985.

	Number	Percentage rate
October 1979	99,900	7·3
October 1980	135,900	10·1
October 1981	182,500	14·0
October 1982	199,100	15·4
October 1983	210,800	16·7
October 1984	224,300	17·8
October 1985	227,500	18·1

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate for each regional area, Scotland and Wales and in total, the number of jobs in (a) banking, insurance and finance, (b) public administration and defence, (c) wholesale distribution, hotels and catering, (d) education, health and social services and (e) construction in June 1979, December 1982 and June 1985, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: The figures for the regions, categories and dates specified are in the following table. Separate regional statistics are not available for social services employees which are included in the education, health and other services grouping.

Mr. Winnick asked the Paymaster General if, pursuant to the answer of 28 November, Official Report, column 399, on unemployment statistics, he will now publish (a) figures of the numbers of those unemployed for over 12 months in April 1979 in the area which corresponds as closely as practicable to the present Dudley and Sandwell, Wolverhampton and Walsall travel-to-work areas and (b) the percentage increases between April 1979 and October 1985 in the numbers of those unemployed for over 12 months in the United Kingdom and west midlands, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: In April 1979, there were 8,164 people, who had been unemployed over 12 months, registered at jobcentres within the Dudley and Sandwell, Walsall and Wolverhampton travel-to-work areas as defined in 1978. The following table gives the available information for the United Kingdom and west midlands.

Unemployed—Over 12 months

	United Kingdom	West Midlands
Unemployed Registrants
April 1979	366,711	34,154
October 1982	1,169,558	155,741

Comparisons over this period are affected by the provisions in the 1983 Budget, which removed 160,000 people, overall from the count, some 18,700 in the west midlands.

October 1983	1,142,874	152,423
October 1985	1,351,857	164,848

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley asked the Paymaster General if he will take steps to collect information about how many registered disabled people are in employment in any given month.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At present I have no plans to do so.

Employment Protection

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Paymaster General whether he will seek to amend the law in Scotland so as to protect the employment of employees of a company that has been bought by another company.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Existing law in Great Britain provides adequate protection for such employees.

Advancement of Women

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what steps he is taking to institute programmes that would inform women workers of their rights under legislation and other remedial measures as set out in paragraph 72 of the Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A comprehensive range of Government booklets explaining individuals' employment rights, including those of special significance to women, can be obtained free of charge through this Department's offices or where appropriate from the Equal Opportunities Commission. The commission itself does valuable publicity work. In particular, it publishes a series of leaflets called "Sex Discrimination Decisions" which present case law in an accessible fashion; and its code of practice which was approved by the House this year contains useful guidance on the steps which employers and others may need to take to comply with the Sex Discrimination Act.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General (1) what steps he is taking to promote the occupational desegregation of women and men, as called for in paragraph 137 of the United Nations Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women;

(2) what steps he is taking to evaluate those parts of the United Nations Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women which apply to his Department; what resources he has allocated to this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government are fully committed to eliminating sex discrimination in employment and are promoting women's entry into non-traditional occupations by a variety of means. For example, we are encouraging employers to observe the Equal Opportunities Commission's code of practice; we have designated 27 training bodies this year under section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act to run women-only courses in such skills as engineering and management, bringing the total of designations since 1975 to 120; and we have given encouragement and financial support to the women into science and engineering (WISE) campaign. Women are encouraged to consider the full range of Manpower Services Commission training opportunities, and the MSC funds pump-priming projects within industry to demonstrate to employers the benefits of developing female employees for a wider range of jobs. We recognise that additional barriers need to be tackled early in working life and efforts are being made to overcome sex-stereotyping in the youth training scheme and technical and vocational education initiative. Programmes are systematically invaluated to assess their effectiveness and we also take note of the results of the annual labour force survey and other surveys in assessing the advancement of women in the labour market.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what meetings he has had with the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss the implementation of those parts of the Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women relevant to his Department; and what future plans he has for such meetings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My colleagues and I frequently meet the chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss women's employment and training issues, the last occasion being on 28 November at our advisory committee on women's employment. I am also meeting Lady Platt this afternoon to discuss the Government's proposals to amend the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 and expect to continue to meet her frequently in the future.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what plans he has for implementing paragraph 58 of the Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women, which calls for the collection of timely and reliable statistics on the situation of women.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's regular statistical series and special feature articles on labour market topics, which are published in Employment Gazette, normally quote separate figures for men and women. The Department also commissioned the wide-ranging women and employment survey. The annual labour force surveys and general household surveys are also major sources of statistics relating to the situation of women.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General whether he will establish a special office within his Department to monitor periodically and accelerate the process of equitable representation of women as called for in paragraph 88 of the Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am fully committed to increasing the representation of women on bodies to which this Department makes appointments. I wrote to the CBI and TUC earlier this year urging them to identify and put forward a larger number of female candidates and have also been in touch with the chairmen of ACAS, the Health and Safety Commission, the Manpower Services Commission and the Equal Opportunities Commission on this subject. I am monitoring progress, and I wrote to the EOC last month giving the latest figures of female appointees to public bodies sponsored by this Department.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Paymaster General what steps he is taking to implement paragraph 162 of the United Nations Nairobi forward looking strategy for the advancement of women relating to measures to enhance the occupational health and safety of women in areas where women predominate or work with the new technologies.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 requires employers to ensure, so far as is reasonably practicable, that the work place is safe and without risk to health. Employers must take account of individual needs and capabilities in making health and safety arrangements. The Health and Safety Commission takes into account any special needs of women when developing legislative proposals.

Parental Leave

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what steps he is taking to ensure that parental leave following the birth of a child should be available to both women and men as set out in paragraph 140 of the United Nations Nairobi forward looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government believe that negotiation of voluntary arrangements for parental leave between employers and employees offers the best prospects of contributing to improved childcare while safeguarding job prospects.

Departmental Appointments

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will list those bodies to which his Department makes appointments, the number of appointees and the number of those who are women.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table gives the information as of 1 November 1985 in respect of bodies sponsored by the Department. Appointments of members to the employment appeal tribunal are made by Her Majesty the Queen and appointments of chairmen of industrial tribunals are made by the Lord Chancellor. Appointments to the other bodies are made either directly by my right hon. and noble Friend or by the appropriate executive body concerned.

National Communications Union

Mr. Golding asked the Paymaster General why, in view of the facts that the certification officer recorded in May that 27,827 members of the National Communications Union were contracted out of the engineering group political fund and in the ballot on maintenance of the fund 17,757 members voted against, his Department issued a press notice stating that the National Communications Union had recorded more votes against its political fund than there were members contracted out at the time of the ballot.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I made a mistake. I apologise.

Textile and Clothing Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to how many people are currently employed in textile industries of each of the member countries of the EEC.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest available data for most countries relate to 1983, and are given in "Employment and Unemployment 1985", page 146, published by the Statistical Office of the European Communities, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to the total number of people employed in the textile industry throughout the EEC in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and what this figure is as a percentage of the total labour force of the manufacturing industries of the EEC in each of those years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested is given in the following table:

Employees in employment in the textile industry European Community 1974 to 1983*

	Thousand	As percentage of employees in employment in all manufacturing industries
1974	2,094·5	17·3

Clothing and Footwear

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Paymaster General what information he has to how changes in the prices of clothing and footwear in each of the last 10 years compare to changes in the retail prices index as a whole.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested is as follows:

The 12-month percentage changes in the annual average indices for retail prices 1975-1984 are:

*	RPI Clothing & Footwear	RPI all items
1975	14·9	24·2

Glanford and Scunthorpe

Mr. Hickmet asked the Paymaster General (1) what the unemployment figures and percentages were for the Glanford and Scunthorpe constituency in September 1983, September 1984 and September 1985, respectively;

(2) if he will give the percentage by which unemployment in the Glanford and Scunthorpe constituency has been reduced since June 1983;

(3) what trend the unemployment figures from September 1983 to September 1985 reveal for the parliamentary constituency of Glanford and Scunthorpe.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library.

The numbers of unemployed claimants in the Glanford and Scunthorpe parliamentary constituency are as follows:

	Number
September 1983*	7,701
September 1984	7,586
September 1985	7,012

* provisional.

Unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas.

Between September 1983 and September 1985 unemployment in the area fell by 689 or 8·9 per cent. Between June 1983 and October 1985 unemployment in the area fell by 782 or 10·5 per cent., but this comparison will be affected by seasonal factors.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Paymaster General what special employment measures are available in the Glanford and Scunthorpe parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Alan Clark: The current ranges of employment measures are all available to people living in the Glanford and Scunthorpe constituency:

Community Industry
Community Programme
Enterprise Allowance Scheme
Job Release Scheme
Job Splitting Scheme
Part-Time Job Release Scheme
Voluntary Projects Programme
Young Workers Scheme

Mr. Hickmet asked the Paymaster General how many new jobs have been created in the Glanford and Scunthorpe constituency since June 1983.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics. Net changes in employment can be given, but, for areas smaller than regions, only for those dates when censuses of employment are taken.

The latest available information is from the June 1978 and the following September 1981 censuses of employment. In that period the number of employees employed in the area covered by the jobcentre areas of Scunthorpe and Gainsborough, of which the Glanford and Scunthorpe constituency forms part, fell by just over 17,000. More up-to-date employment figures will become available following the publication of the 1984 census of employment in the spring of 1986. A September 1984 inquiry confined to employment in the Scunthorpe and Glanford enterprise zones showed a net increase of 160 employees since dates of designation in September 1983 and spring of 1984 respectively.

"The Sex Discrimination Act and European Community Legislation"

Mr. Millan asked the Paymaster General if he will list the bodies to which his Department's consultative document, "The Sex Discrimination Act and European Community Legislation", issued in September, was distributed for comment; why the Association of Professional, Executive, Clerical and Computer Staff was not included in the distribution; why the closing date for submission of views was fixed at 30 November; and if he will extend the date for submission of views in such a way as to allow interested trade unions a greater opportunity to make their views known.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The document was published on 19 September and was sent to the CBI, TUC, Equal Opportunities Commission and 30 other interested organisations. It was not sent to individual employers' associations or trade unions since it is our normal practice to look to the CBI and TUC to represent the interests of these bodies in the first instance. The Department issued a press release announcing the document's publication and we have since then responded to some 100 requests for copies, including one from APEX. The closing date for responses to the document was fixed at 30 November to enable us to prepare a Bill for introduction as soon as possible in the current Session of Parliament. I am willing to consider representations from APEX or other interested trade unions at any time before the legislation is passed, but I do not think it would be generally welcomed to hold up preparation of the Bill.

Childcare Services

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Paymaster General if he will take steps to implement paragraphs 228 of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women relating to Government incentives to employers to provide childcare services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have approved the Equal Opportunities Commission's code of practice. Paragraph 43 encourages employers to "consider with their employees whether child-care facilities are available locally or whether it would be feasible to establish nursery facilities on the premises or combine with other employers to provide them".

The code came into operation on 30 April this year. The forward looking strategies are related to goals for the advancement of women over the period 1986-2000.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Millan asked the Paymaster General if he will introduce legislation to extend the jurisdiction of industrial tribunals to deal with disputes relating to rights of notice, and rights to payment in lieu of notice, on termination of employment.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are at present no plans to exercise the power to extend the jurisdiction of industrial tribunals in this way.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards development of the practice of positive discrimination in favour of young persons of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin in the private sector.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Race Relations Act 1976 does not permit positive discrimination in favour of any particular racial group. Sections 37 and 38 of the Act do permit certain forms of positive action by training bodies and employers to allow encouragement and training when a racial group is seriously under-represented in particular work. The Government are seeking to encourage greater use of these provisions as a means of reducing the level of racial disadvantage.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General what evidence he has that young persons of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin get proportionately fewer jobs and stay at the bottom of the promotion ladder when in work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Research studies over recent years have shown that the racial minorities in Britain have an inferior position in the labour market. The recent Policy studies Institute publication "Racial Discrimination—17 Years After the Act" concluded that racial discrimination by employers remains as common as it was a decade ago with at least a third of employers discriminating against black jobseekers. The PSI publication "Black and White Britain" published in 1984 showed that people of Asian and West Indian origin at work tended to have jobs with lower pay and lower status than those of white workers. The 1984 labour force survey shows that unemployment rates were generally considerably higher for the ethnic minorities than whites with similar characteristics in terms of age and qualifications. For the age group 16 to 24, the survey showed that in the spring of 1984 the unemployment rate for those of Caribbean or Asian origin was about a third compared with less than a fifth for those of white ethnic origin. It is generally accepted that the best person should get a job, without discrimination. Positive action within the existing law should reduce discrimination.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General (1) what procedures are adopted at unemployment benefit offices to ascertain whether claimants are available for work; whether he is satisfied with these procedures; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of these procedures compared with a system of compulsory registration at an employment office;

(2) how the work test operates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Unemployed people making a claim for benefit have their availability tested for work by a direct question on the unemployment benefit claim form, and subsequently at regular signing intervals and whenever doubt arises about their availability for work.

The initial availability test requires all claimants to declare whether or not they are willing to take any full-time job which they can do. A negative reply causes the unemployment benefit office to make further detailed inquiries about the nature and conditions of the work which an individual claimant is prepared to accept. Any doubts about the individuals' availability are then referred to the independent adjudicating authorities. In 1984, the last full year for which fugures are available, over 49,000 claims were disallowed on these grounds.

I am not fully satisfied with this availability test and its adequacy is currently being reviewed. I have recently set in hand arrangements to improve links between unemployment benefit offices and jobcentres and, following discussion with colleagues, the role played by the DHSS unemployment review officers is being strengthened.

I draw the attention of my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 28 October at columns 334-35.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General how many persons who were unemployed had their benefits terminated because of refusal to accept employment in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Alan Clark: The answer is not available in the precise terms asked. The number of people who were disqualified from receiving unemployment benefit for refusing without good cause to apply for or accept suitable employment in the years 1979 to 1984 was:

	Number
1979	6,812
1980	8,227
1981	4,194
1982	2,248
1984	*1,972

Coal Industry

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Paymaster General how the Manpower Services Commission will decide which coalfield areas will benefit from the Manpower Services Commission-National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd. joint training initiative.

Mr. Trippier: Through the NCB job and career change scheme, redundant mineworkers can apply for training at any skillcentre in Great Britain, and the NCB will also consider applications for training with training providers other than the skillcentre training agency of the Manpower Services Commission.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Paymaster General how the funds allocated to the Manpower Services Commission-National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd. joint training scheme are to be divided among coalfield areas; and how much these funds amount to.

Mr. Trippier: This is an internal matter for the National Coal Board.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Paymaster General what criteria the Manpower Services Commission will use to decide the nature of the training to be carried out under the Manpower Services Commission-National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd. joint training initiative.

Mr. Trippier: The skillcentre training agency is prepared to offer training in all occupational and skill areas which it is experienced and equipped to provide. The training programme for each individual applicant to the NCB job and career change scheme is tailored to meet his/her specific experience and requirements and to reflect local labour market opportunities.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Paymaster General how, in the case of the Manpower Services Commission-National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd. joint training scheme, the Manpower Services Commission proposes to ascertain market requirements for new skills.

Mr. Trippier: The MSC-NCB agreement required the skillcentre training agency to undertake appraisals for each geographical area to ensure that any training which the board may request the agency to provide relates to the needs of local labour markets.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Paymaster General how many redundant miners have applied for re-training under the Manpower Services Commission-National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd. joint training scheme; and how many have received or are receiving training.

Mr. Trippier: To 31 October 1985 (the latest figure available) skillcentres had received 161 applications for training under the NCB job and career change scheme. By 31 October 1985, 74 applicants had commenced skillcentre training.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Paymaster General how the Manpower Services Commission proposes to monitor the Manpower Services Commission-National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd. joint training initiative; and what criteria it will use to do so.

Mr. Trippier: Skillcentre training agency (STA) management requires all operating units to provide monthly details of NCB job and career change scheme (JACCS) activity. Through this the agency's management can monitor the level of applications received, training places offered, NCB employees in training, training courses completed, and so on.

Both STA and NCB are maintaining records of employment and further training entered by those completing JACCS training.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Paymaster General if he will list the centres where training is available under the Manpower Services Commission-National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd. point trading scheme, what courses are available at each centre, how many places are available on each course at each centre, the length of each course, the type of qualification gained on completion of each course and the number of places currently filled on each course.

Mr. Trippier: Through the NCB job and career change scheme, redundant mineworkers can apply for training at any skillcentre in Great Britain and the NCB will also consider applications for training with providers other than the skillcentre training agency.

Skillcentres will make available training in every occupational and skill area which they are experienced and equipped to provide.

Local Enterprise Agency Funding Scheme

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Paymaster General when details of the new local enterprise agency funding scheme will be announced.

Mr. Trippier: Details of the new support scheme for enterprise agencies in England, the local enterprise agency grants scheme, are now available. A copy of the guidance notes on the scheme has been place in the Library.

The aim of the scheme is to help promote the establishment of viable enterpirse agencies across the country, particularly through encouraging greater private sector support. Agencies will be encouraged to expand and develop their services to small businesses, and to act as the focus for local networks of people and organisations similarly committed to helping local economic growth. The private sector is making a substantial contribution to local enterprise agencies. But we are very aware that many agencies currently face considerable difficulties in obtaining sufficient private sector funding to ensure their long-term future.

The new scheme will run for five years from 1 April 1986; £2·5 million has been set aside in 1986-87. In years one and two, assistance may be available to qualifying agencies up to a maximum of £20,000. The level of grant in individual cases will be dependent on the level of private sector funding but will also take account of the agency's business plan and, to ensure that support only goes to those who require it, the overall cash income of the agency. To encourage greater private sector support, the maximum level of Government grant will be reduced in later years while at the same time the private sector funding to trigger that grant will be increased. There will be no automatic entitlement to assistance.

To qualify for support, local enterprise agencies will need to be approved under the terms of section 48 of the Finance Act 1982. Applications will have to be supported by a three-year business plan as well as a five-year funding strategy. The business plan will have to show how Government assistance will be used to extend the scope and effectiveness of their services. The business plan will also contain indicators against which the agency's performance will be monitored. Assistance in subsequent years will be subject to satisfactory performance against targets in the plan.

The Government have asked business in the community to support local enterprise agencies in developing the business plan and funding strategies and in formulating their applications.

The Government are demonstrating through this scheme their commitment to helping develop a network of viable LEAs. But the success and strength of LEAs largely stems from the private sector's support for agencies. The Government look therefore to the private sector to step up its support to local enterprise agencies and to play its part in local economic development.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Malone asked the Paymaster General what evidence is available on the longer term success of enterprise allowance scheme businesses; and what steps are taken to help those businesses prosper.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Latest survey evidence shows that over three in five of those people taking advantage of the full 12 months' enterprise allowance are still trading three years after setting up in business and on average every 100 of these businesses have created 99 additional jobs. This is a very satisfactory success rate for a scheme which assists people who have been unemployed for some months to set up new businesses of their own.

People on the scheme are entitled to take advantage of free business start-up training provided by the Manpower Services Commission. They also have access to free advice and counselling from the small firms service. Some local enterprise agencies have also been providing support. Despite the success of the scheme in stimulating self-employment and new enterprises, we believe that its success could be further improved if there were a greater take-up of the training and counselling services available. I have therefore asked the Manpower Services Commission to look urgently at ways of increasing take-up. I particularly believe that local enterprise agencies can make a bigger contribution in advice and counselling for these new businesses.

DEFENCE

School Leavers

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any discussions have taken place concerning the possibility of recruiting large numbers of unemployed school leavers into the support arms of the forces.

Mr. Stanley: This possibility is not under consideration.

Nuclear Tests (Cancer)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many military personnel, representing what percentage of the task force during the Christmas Island nuclear weapons test explosions, were provided with protective clothing and respirators or alternative breathing apparatus;

(2) how many civilian personnel representing what percentage of the task force during the Christmas Islands nuclear test explosions were provided with protective clothing and respirators or alternative breathing apparatus.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Appropriate protective equipment, including the items that are referred to, was issued to all personnel, whether civilian or military, when it was needed for the duties on which they were engaged. The decision to employ protective measures was taken on the advice of health physicists. Such duties were undertaken by a very small proportion of the task force. Radiation exposures were recorded but not the issue of every item of protective equipment.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall answer shortly.

Ashford Training Centre

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men, regular and reserve, of the Special Air Service Regiment have taken part in training at Ashford training centre, Templar barracks, Kent; and upon which courses.

Mr. Stanley: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on any aspects of the operations or training of special forces.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilians have trained at Her Majesty's training centre, Ashford over the past five years; and upon which courses.

Mr. Stanley: Some 200 civilians have attended a wide range of intelligence and security related courses at Templer barracks, Ashford in the past five years.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men and service women, respectively, have been trained specifically in interrogation methods annually at Ashford training centre, Templer barracks, Kent, over the past five years; and which services and units.

Mr. Stanley: Seventy-nine service men and one woman have been trained in interrogation methods at the joint services interrogation wing, Templer barracks, during the last five years. They are drawn predominately from the intelligence staffs at a variety of units of all three services, but the great majority are from the Army.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men and service women have been trained annually at Ashford training centre, Templer barracks, Kent; and on which courses and which services.

Mr. Stanley: Templer barracks, Ashford is the headquarters of the Intelligence Corps and therefore carries out a very wide range of training ranging from drill and basic training for new recruits to courses in various aspects of intelligence. On average each year there are about 125 courses of all types attended by some 3,000 service students. These students are drawn from all three services in the following broad proportions:

	Per cent.
Royal Navy*	13
Army	78
Royal Air Force	9

* Including Royal Marines

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence upon what criteria specialist groups are chosen to receive training at Ashford training centre, Templer barracks, Kent.

Mr. Stanley: Those trained in resistance to interrogation are all volunteers from groups who would be most vulnerable to capture in time of war. The small number of personnel who are trained in interrogation techniques are drawn from those who would require these specialist skills in war.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many service men and service women, respectively, of the Ulster Defence Regiment, regular and reserve, have taken part in training at Ashford training centre, Templer barracks, Kent; and which courses over the past 10 years;

(2) how many members, men and women, respectively, of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, regular and reserve, have taken part in training at Ashford training centre, Templer barracks, Kent over the past five years.

Mr. Stanley: No UDR or RUC personnel have taken part in training at the joint service interrogation wing over the past 10 years. During that period 263 UDR officers and SNCOs have attended other courses at Templer barracks in various aspects of intelligence. No detailed breakdown is available of the split between full and part-time UDR members, but the great majority would have been permanent cadre officers or SNCOs. A small number of RUC officers have also attended some courses.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many policemen and policewomen and from which forces, over the past five years have trained at the military training centre at Ashford, Kent; and upon which courses.

Mr. Stanley: Six Ministry of Defence police have attended various security courses.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of foreign and Commonwealth armed forces have trained at the Ministry of Defence Ashford training centre, Kent, over the past five years; on which courses they trained; and from which countries they came.

Mr. Stanley: In the past five years some 500 members of foreign and Commonwealth armed forces have received training in various aspects of intelligence and security at Templer barracks, Ashford. In addition, about 50 such personnel each year receive training in resistance to interrogation. This training is only available to members of the armed forces of NATO countries and other close allies. It is not our practice to list the specific countries to which we give particular types of training.

Interrogation Resistance (Training Centres)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what other training centres such as the one known as Ashford training centre, at Templer barracks, Kent, that specialise in interrogation methods and interrogation resistance techniques exist for training members of Her Majesty's armed forces.

Mr. Stanley: The joint services interrogation wing at Templer barracks, Ashford, is the only such specialist training centre. Some continuation training in resistance to interrogation is carried out in some units.

Service Police (Training)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) where service police are trained in interrogation techniques besides Ashford training centre, Templer barracks, Kent;

(2) how many of the Army's, the Royal Air Force's and the Royal Navy's special investigation branch trained at Ashford training centre, Templer barracks, Kent.

Mr. Stanley: Service police and special investigation branch personnel do not train at the joint services interrogation wing, Templer barracks. The interrogation training at Ashford is quite different from the training in interviewing given to service policemen which is conducted by each of the services at, respectively, the Naval Regulating School, Portsmouth, the Royal Military Police headquarters, Chichester or one of its subsidiary establishments, and the RAF Police school, RAF Newton.

Trident

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether tests on the United Kingdom warheads for the Trident missile system will be carried out at any test site other than Nevada.

Mr. Norman Lamont: For more than 20 years United Kingdom nuclear warheads have been tested at the Nevada test site. We have no plans to conduct nuclear tests at any other site.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the cost for designing, testing and fabrication of the British-built warheads for Trident.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Bosworth (Mr. Butler), on 24 May at column 600.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the proportion of the total cost of construction of the Trident submarine which is taken up by the cost of design.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Under 10 per cent. of the estimated cost of the Trident submarine, excluding the weapons systems, will represent the cost of design and design-related activities such as prototype testing.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the mega-wattage-thermal (MWCE) of the prototype reactor being built for the Trident submarine.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This information is classified.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are working on the design and testing of the British warhead for Trident.

Mr. Norman Lamont: For reasons of security it is not our policy to reveal details of staff engaged on the defence nuclear programme.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United Kingdom is building its Trident submarines to a design furnished by a United States firm; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. Overall responsibility for the design of our Trident submarines rests with the United Kingdom, where the great majority of the design work is being undertaken. But, as I told the hon. Member in a recent letter, it makes sense for us to adopt the same basic design as the United States for the central section of the submarine which houses the Trident D5 strategic weapon system. A contract has therefore been let to the electric boat division of General Dynamics in the United States to provide the necessary design information in this area.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the proposed terms of technical transfer rights which will be available to United Kingdom companies within the outline agreement between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government on strategic defence initiative research.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No agreement has yet been concluded. The Government are still considering the question of formal participation in SDI research.

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been made of the impact on United Kingdom research resources of participation in the United States strategic defence initiative research programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The question of British participation in SDI research is still under consideration by the Government, including the aspects referred to.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Deputy Secretaries

Mr. Arnold asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the responsibilities of each of the deputy secretaries in his Department and the numbers and ranks of staff reporting to each.

Mr. Jopling: Information on the five grade 2 posts, which include deputy secretary appointments, in my Department and the number of staff reporting to them on 1 April 1985 is as follows:

Post	Number of Staff
Deputy Secretary (Agricultural Commodities)	259
Deputy Secretary (Land and Resources)	3,250½
Deputy Secretary (Fisheries and Food)	1,027½
Legal Advisor and Solicitor	53½
Director General (Agricultural Development & Advisory Service)	5,176

Details of their responsibilities are set out in the Civil Service Year Book 1985 which is available in the Library of the House.

There are about 200 grades in my Department and a breakdown of staff in each grade by grade 2 commands is not readily available. There are 25 grade 3 posts. For grades 4 in the open structure and below, the numbers by grade are given in Her Majesty's Treasury's publication "Staff in Post: Civil Service: Non-Industrial Staff: Departmental Tables by Sex: Grade by Department Analysis on 1 April 1985", a copy of which is also available in the Library of the House. Similar details are not available for industrial staff of which there were 668 on 1 April 1985, mainly in the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service.

Badger Control

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the current policy of the badger control section of his Department in connection with Clouts Wood nature reserve in Wiltshire;

(2) what has been the cost in each of the last 10 years of badger control.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle have been slaughtered in each of the last five years (a) with symptoms of bovine tuberculosis and (b) as bovine tuberculosis reactors.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Brucellosis

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle were slaughtered in each of the last five years because of their having brucellosis.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what additional revenue he expects to be yielded in a full year by the increased charges and new charges for analytical and diagnostic services provided by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service which will have effect from 1 December; and whether this is included in the £5 million which he expects to be yielded in 1987-88 by charging for the Agricultural Development Advisory Service advisory work.

Mr. Gummer: I expect these changes to yield some £446,000 additional revenue in a full financial year. To the extent that this additional income reduces the operating deficit on the agricultural services scheme, it will contribute to the overall earnings target for ADAS in 1987-88.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to provide additional funds for the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service to cover the cost of the free analysis of hay and silage that he announced in his statement in the House on 28 November.

Mrs. Fenner: No.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much of the severe weather aid for farmers that he announced in the House on 28 November will be paid to farmers in Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland, respectively.

Mr. Gummer: It is estimated that the payment to be made to farmers under the weather relief measures, amounting in total to some £16·9 million, will be distributed as follows:

	£ million
Scotland	7·8
England	3·4
Wales	1·7
Northern Ireland	4·0

Waste Disposal

Mr. O'Brien asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what study he has made of the effect of the European Economic Community directive on the dumping of waste at sea on the Yorkshire water authority's sludge disposal and the costs of finding alternative means of disposal.

Mr. Gummer: The proposal for a directive would clearly have far-reaching implications for the disposal of waste at sea. Consequently my Department is closely consulting all those who might be affected by it so that full account can be taken of their concerns before discussions on the proposal start in the new year.

Suckler Cow Premium Scheme

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now announce the changes in the rules of the suckler cow premium scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: Under the existing rules of the suckler cow premium scheme as laid down by the European Commission, if a producer fails to keep for a minimum of six months at least the number of animals on which premium has been granted, he normally forfeits the premium on all his cows. We have always considered this rule to be unduly harsh and have sought to get it changed, though hitherto without success. This year, however, its operation could clearly bear particularly harshly on those farmers who, because of the particular problems caused by the bad weather, find themselves unable to maintain their herd numbers. I therefore pressed commissioner Andriessen very strongly to make a change, and I am glad to say that some modification has now been agreed. This will enable producers to notify, before 31 December, a reduction in the number of cows they have previously undertaken to retain for six months, and to qualify for premium on the lower number. This concession, which applies to the 1985 scheme only, is restricted to farmers in areas notified to the European Commission by the Government as being affected by a shortage of fodder supplies. In this connection, we propose to notify the European Commission that we are applying the rule change to the whole of the United Kingdom with the exception of specified counties in eastern and south-eastern England.

In addition, there is at present a rule that any losses that occur in a herd within the specified six months retention period must be made good within one month; and failure to comply with this rule can involve forfeiture of premium on all a farmer's animals. We have pointed out to the Commission that this rule, too, could cause particular difficulties in the circumstances of the coming winter, and I am glad to say that this has been recognised. It has accordingly been agreed that we may take the particular circumstances into account in considering a farmer's ability to replace lost animals.

I hope that these two changes will help farmers with suckler cow herds who may have difficulties in maintaining their herd numbers through the coming winter. The Agricultural Departments will be announcing the full details of these revised arrangements.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Greece (Economic Measures)

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the European Economic Community Finance Council is to consider recent economic measures taken in Greece; if there was any prior consultation about them within the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Greek economic measures, announced on 11 October, were intended to deal with balance of payments and other problems. The package contained a number of protective measures, including the introduction of an import deposit scheme, which required derogations from Greece's obligations under the EC treaty. The Greek Government informed the Commission of these measures, as required by article 109 (paragraph 2). Following discussion at its meetings on 28 October and 18 November, the EC Finance Council agreed, on a recommendation from the Commission, to grant a Community loan to Greece of 1,750 million ecu, to be made under the Community loan mechanism for balance of payments assistance provided for in Council Regulations No. 682/81 of 16 March 1981 and No. 1131/85 of 30 April 1985. The loan will be made available in two equal instalments, the second instalment to be released in the light of developments in Greece's economic situation and of the results obtained in Greece's economic recovery programme. The Commission has authorised protective measures, including the import deposit scheme, in accordance with article 108 (paragraph 3).

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the financial years 1970-71 to 1988-89 the actual or planned figures for (a) the public sector borrowing requirement in cash on the present definition, together with a note indicating what significant definitional changes during this period have been, (b) the public sector borrowing requirement in constant price terms and (c) the public sector borrowing requirement as a percentage of gross domestic product.

Mr. MacGregor: The figures requested are in the following table:

1970-71	0·8	3·8	1·5

‡ Forecast

§ MTFS projections.

There has been only one change of definition of the PSBR since statistics for the PSBR were first published; that was to exclude public sector deposits with banks and certain other short-term assets of a similar nature, as announced in the Official Report, 10 February 1984, at column 808. An article in the February 1984 issue of Economic Trends described the change and its effects, which are small (at most about 0·25 per cent. of GDP in any year and on average much smaller).

Asset Sales

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the financial years 1970-71 to 1988-89 the actual or planned figures for (a) the special sales of assets programme, (b) sales of public sector buildings and land outside the special sales of assets programme and (c) the proceeds of asset sales retained within nationalised businesses.

Mr. MacGregor: Figures for special sales of assets for the years 1979-80 to 1988-89 were provided in the answer my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) on 25 November 1985 at column 466. The only material receipts arising in previous years which were treated similarly were proceeds from the sale of BP shares in 1977-78, which totalled £548 million.

For information on receipts from the sale of land and buildings from 1979-80 to 1988-89, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today in reply to his other question on the same subject. Figures for years before 1976-77 are not readily available. Figures for 1976-77 to 1978-79 are as follows:

Sales of land and buildings

	£ million
1976-77	183

Figures for sales of assets by nationalised industries for the years 1979-80 to 1987-88 were contained in answers given to the hon. Member on 26 July 1985 and 14 November 1985 at columns 861 and 275, respectively. Information for 1988-89 will not be available until after the 1986 public expenditure White Paper is published. Directly comparable figures for years before 1979-80 are not available.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the years 1979-80 to 1988-89 an analysis by programme of sales of public sector land and buildings outside the special sales of assets programme, distinguishing at programme level between receipts associated with the sale of public sector housing and other items.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 14 November 1985 and to my letter to him of 9 September 1985 which included material for 1979-80 to 1987-88. The figures given earlier include council house sales which account for some 90 per cent. of sales of land and buildings in the housing programme. Information for 1988-89 will not be available until after the 1986 public expenditure White Paper is published.

Esal Commodities Ltd.

Mr. Chapman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will institute an inquiry into the extent to which the operations in London of the Punjab National Bank, the Union Bank of India, the Central Bank of India and Johnson Matthey Bank, in supporting the now defunct Esal Commodities Ltd., complied with the Bank of England's banking supervision guidelines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No. The Punjab National Bank, the Union Bank of India and the Central Bank of India are banks incorporated in India which operate in London through branch offices. In line with usual international practice, primary supervisory responsibility for overseas branches lies with the "parent" bank's supervisory authority—in this case the Reserve Bank of India. The report on banking supervision which was published in June (Cmnd. 9550) took full account of the implications for supervisory procedures of the operations of Johnson Matthey Bankers.

THE ARTS

Advancement of Women

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts what steps he has taken to implement paragraph 206 of the conclusions of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women relating to the promotion of women's cultural projects.

Mr. Luce: The report is addressed to a wide range of interests and is being widely disseminated. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Deakins) on 29 November 1985 at columns 707-8.

TRANSPORT

Speed Limits

8. Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will initiate a specific publicity campaign to urge stricter observance of road speed limitations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: We are currently issuing, with excise duty reminders, some 11·5 million leaflets advising drivers of national legal speed limits. I am considering how our rolling national publicity campaign will shortly be emphasising the need to drive at a safe speed for the conditions and at a safe distance from the vehicle in front.

Channel Link

15. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if it remains the Government's position that no public funds or guarantees will be provided for a Channel fixed link.

Mr. Ridley: As far as the link itself is concerned, yes. If the selected scheme were to include a rail element there would be commercial investment by British Rail in inland infrastructure and rolling stock for through trains; and the future roads programme will need to take account of any new traffic generated by a link.

16. Mr. Knowles asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the French Minister of Transport to discuss proposals for a fixed Channel link.

Mr. Ridley: I discussed proposals for a Channel fixed link with M. Auroux, the French Minister for Town Planning, Housing and Transport, on 18 November.

21. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give a preliminary indication of the date for commencing construction operations on the English Channel link.

Mr. David Mitchell: The earliest date construction of a Channel fixed link might commence is summer 1987. Allowing for the necessary legislative procedures in the United Kingdom and in France.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the consequences for regional employment of the proposed fixed Channel link.

Mr. David Mitchell: The consequences of the various Channel fixed link proposals for regional employment form part of the joint Anglo-French assessment of these proposals that is currently under way.

Buses and Lorries (Speed Limits)

17. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has considered using tachograph evidence to enforce speed restriction for buses and lorries.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The evidence needed to support prosecutions for speeding is a matter for chief officers of police, but I understand there may be some legal and technical difficulties in using tachograph charts as evidence. The proposed requirement to fit coaches with speed governors will help enforce compliance with motorway speed limits.

Dartford Crossing

18. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be in a position to invite tenders for the private sector financing and construction of a new Dartford crossing.

Mr. David Mitchell: An announcement about the submission of proposals for the construction and operation of a third crossing at Dartford will be made shortly.

Rail Electrification

19. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on rail electrification schemes currently under consideration.

Mr. David Mitchell: We are considering a proposal by British Rail to electrify the line from Bournemouth to Weymouth. In addition, Lancashire county council and Greater Manchester council have asked for a grant under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968 to enable them to finance the electrification of the line between Manchester and Blackpool. We shall reach decisions on both proposals as soon as possible.

British Rail (Corporate Plan)

20. Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects next to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss British Rail's corporate plan.

Mr. Ridley: The chairman and I often discuss the strategies on which BR's corporate plan is based.

Metropolitan Areas

22. Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria are used in determining the level of grants for public transport in metropolitan areas.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) earlier today.

Air Transport

23. Sir Kenneth Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he discussed progress on the Commission memorandum on air transport at the recent Council of Transport Ministers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Yes. My right hon. Friends made it quite clear that the council must agree quickly on a package of truly liberal measures. Failing this, the full rigour of the competition rules would have to be applied in practice as well as in principle.

Cyclists

24. Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Transport what further steps he intends to take to seek to increase the safety of cyclists.

Mr. Ridley: We shall decide in the light of our consultation on a wide range of issues that emerged from our conference "Ways to Safer Cycling" held earlier this year. Copies of our consultation letter and report of the conference have been placed in the Library.

32. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made concerning better road facilities for cyclists.

Mr. Ridley: Most local highway authorities are now taking cyclists' needs into account in their proposals for the construction of new highways and improvements, or have proposals for specific cycle facilities.

42. Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received from cycling organisations concerning road safety.

Mr. Ridley: Cycling organisations make representations to us on a variety of road safety matters and we are currently consulting them and other bodies on the wide-ranging issues arising from our "Ways to Safer Cycling" conference earlier this year.

Docklands Light Railway

25. Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with the London Docklands Development Corporation concerning modifications, or extensions of, the docklands light railway.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department is in regular touch with the Docklands Light Railway Joint Board, which comprises representatives of London Regional Transport and the London Docklands Development Corporation. One of the matters discussed recently has been the proposal to extend the railway to the Bank. My right hon. Friend announced on 27 November that London Regional Transport had reached an understanding with the Canary Wharf consortium on underwriting finance for this extension and that they had, with his consent, introduced a Bill to provide for the works. I welcome this development.

It has been decided, in the absence of proposals for private funding, that a Bill to provide for an eastern extension to the railway should not be deposited in this Session.

Metropolitan Areas

4. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria are used in determining the level of grants for public transport in metropolitan areas.

Mr. David Mitchell: Rate Support Grant for the metropolitan counties and for the passenger transport authorities that will succeed them will depend on their GREAs and on their actual expenditure. For the first three years, the new PTAs will be constrained by precept control under the Rates Act 1984 and I am currently considering the authorities' applications for redetermination of their expenditure levels. Other grants are available for public transport capital projects under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968.

Public Transport (Grants)

26. Mr. Allan Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the level of central Government grant for public transport during 1986-87.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received various representations and comments about the level of central Government grant for public transport in future years including 1986-87. I have also received applications from the six new metropolitan passenger transport authorities for re-determination of their expenditure levels set in accordance with the procedure for precept control under the Rates Act 1984.

Midlands Links Motorway

27. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he anticipates being able to make a decision on the selected line for the northern relief route to the Midlands links motorway.

Mr. Ridley: I hope to make an announcement on this scheme within the next few weeks.

Bus Lanes (London)

28. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the further development of bus lanes in London.

Mr. Ridley: Any new proposals for bus lanes in London should be looked at on their merits to see if they result in an overall benefit to all types of road user. I am having a study done into their assessment and I hope to issue further advice next year.

British Rail (Manning Levels)

29. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will raise with him the subject of manning levels in British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. British Rail manning levels are the responsibility of the board.

Locomotive Maintenance and Construction

30. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will raise with him the board's policy towards acceptance of foreign tenders or contracts for locomotive maintenance or construction.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The board's purchasing policy conforms to the Government's public purchasing initiative.

Rail Services (Standards)

31. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will raise with him the subject of the standard of rail services, including inter-city services between London and Bradford.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have at present no plans to do so. I am sure that the chairman will have seen the points made by the hon. Member in the Adjournment debate on 26 November on rail services to Bradford.

Motor Cycles

33. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any representations about the efficacy of noise regulations relating to motor cycles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The Department receives a large amount of correspondence about motor cycle noise and the level of enforcement of the regulations. The police can and do enforce the regulations. In 1983, the last year for which detailed statistics are currently available, there were more than 2,800 successful prosecutions for motor cycle noise offences in England and Wales.

36. Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to make it an offence for motor cycles to pass between moving vehicles which are less than 25 ft apart.

Mr. Ridley: Although I have a good deal of sympathy for the thinking behind my right hon. Friend's suggestion, I suspect that a measure of the kind he proposes would be difficult to draft and impossible to enforce. I believe that the key to improved rider behaviour lies primarily in ensuring that all motor cyclists receive thorough training in the use of their machines an that is why I am currently reviewing the training and testing arrangements. Apart from this, motor cycle safety continues to be a major theme within the Department's rolling publicity campaign.

EC Shipping Policy

34. Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress was made at the last European Council of Ministers' meeting towards agreeing a common shipping policy.

41. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether any progress was made at the recent European Economic Community Council of Transport Ministers' towards meeting the liberalisation of shipping cabotage.

Mr. Ridley: Ministers discussed four of the draft regulations proposed by the Commission, including the regulation which would extend the freedom to provide services to shipping, and instructed officials to continue their work on these draft instruments.

Settle-Carlisle Railway

35. Mr. Watson asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the conclusions from the Transport Users Consultative Committee which will be holding inquiries into the proposed closure of the Settle to Carlisle railway.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand the transport users' consultative committees for north western and north eastern England are planning to hold their public hearings into British Rail's proposal to close the Settle-Carlisle line in March and April 1986. I would not expect to receive their reports until the late summer at the earliest.

London Regional Transport

37. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to seek to modify the salary of the chairman of London Regional Transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The salaries of the chairman and members of the board of London Regional Transport are under review.

Air Fares (Europe)

38. Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of the National Consumer Council to discuss the level of air fares in Europe.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I met representatives of the National Consumer Council on 24 April 1985 to discuss their study of European air services, and officials have had subsequent meetings. I look forward to seeing the NCC report.

St. Pancras-Sheffield Line

39. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will raise with him the matter of cuts in the numbers and regularity of trains on the St. Pancras to Sheffield line.

Mr. David Mitchell: Service planning on this and other lines is for British Rail.

Local Transport (Grants)

40. Mr. Welsh asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy with regard to the contribution of central Government grants to local public transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) earlier today. There is no difference between metropolitan and non-metropolitan areas in this respect.

Coaches (Safety)

43. Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the safety record of coaches in the United Kingdom; and on the recent trend revealed by the relevant accident figures.

Mr. Ridley: The most recent accident involvement rates are shown below:

Bus and coach vehicle involvement rate per 100 million vehicle kilometres: 1982-84 Great Britain

	Rate per 100 million vehicle kilometres
1982	430
1983	412
1984	400

The accident report form does not differentiate between buses and coaches.

Infrastructure (Private Finance)

44. Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to promote further opportunities for private sector financing and management of parts of the national infrastructure network.

Mr. Ridley: I seek always to encourage private sector initiatives for the financing and management of transport infrastructure where appropriate in the interests of efficient use of resources and improving services to consumers. For example, I suggested in evidence to the Select Committee on Transport last July that the private sector might contemplate financing the construction of a third crossing of the Thames at Dartford, and a good deal of interest has already been shown in that idea. London Regional Transport has reached an understanding, which I have endorsed, to promote private sector financing and management of the Docklands light railway. In addition, I have made it clear that the Government are prepared to facilitate a private sector cross-Channel Link, which would be the largest infrastructure project in our history.

British Airways

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much public dividend capital has been allocated to British Airways for each year since its formation; and what dividends have been paid in each year by British Airways to Her Majesty's Government in respect of public dividend capital.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information is as follows:

	Average public dividend capital during year £ million	Gross dividend £ million
1972-73	83·6	6·25
1973-74	132·8	8·7
1974-75	159·8	—
1975-76	240·2	—
1976-77	281·0	16·7
1977-78	290·4	—
1978-79	309·1	24·2 + *21·4
1979-80	155·4	10·0
1980-81	166·7	—
1981-82	179·7	—

* In 1979, Concorde assets were written down by £135·8 million and a special dividend of £24·2 million (including advance corporation tax) was paid to the Government to take account of reductions in the dividend payment in earlier years. The corresponding amount of public dividend capital amounting to £160 million was cancelled.

† The rights, liabilities and obligations of the British Airways Board were vested in British Airways plc on 1 April 1984. The public dividend capital of £180 million held by the board was replaced by share capital of £180 million in British Airways plc held by the Secretary of State for Transport.

Tyre Tread Depths

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, during the review by his Department of tyre regulations, consideration will be given to the stricter minimum standard of tyre tread depth recommended by the Transport Committee.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. Our review of the tyre tread depth regulations has begun. When all the evidence has been received and discussions have been held with the relevant interested bodies, we will consider whether the regulations should be further amended taking into account also the recommendations of the Transport Committee.

Dartford Tunnels

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to invite the private sector to submit proposals for the provision of additional capacity at the Dartford tunnels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I shall make an announcement shortly about the terms and conditions upon which we will invite offers to construct this additional capacity.

Road Spray

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what action he intends to take to seek to obviate spray from high-speed heavy vehicles;

(2) by what date he intends all heavy vehicles to be fitted with anti-spray devices.

Mr. Ridley: In November last year we made regulations which require new lorries and existing heavy trailers to be fitted with anti-spray devices conforming to British standard BS AU 200 by various dates starting in May this year. All those falling within the scope of the regulations will have to be fitted by October 1987.

Motorway Fatalities

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents causing fatalities on motorways have resulted in the last year to date at places where the lanes have been restricted due to repair work; what was the nature of the vehicles involved; and what police patrols were on duty prior to the accidents.

Mr. Ridley: During 1984 in Great Britain, there were 19 fatal accidents on motorways (including A(M) Roads) where road works were present. The type and number of vehicles involved in these accidents were:

	Number
Two wheeled motor vehicles	3
Cars	34
Light goods vehicles	2
Heavy goods vehicles	7
Other motor vehicles	2
Coaches	0

Information concerning the presence of police patrols can only be obtained at disproportionate costs.

Derby Road, Bootle

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the proposed dualling of Derby road, Bootle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Sefton metropolitan borough council and Merseyside county council, whilst expressing support for the scheme in principle, have made representations about its impact on houses fronting Derby road. Following discussions with officers the Department is considering what additional environmental measures can be taken. No other representations have been received.

Kingsway Roundabout Flyover

Mr. McWilliam asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost to public funds of his visit to open the Kingsway roundabout flyover and the ensuing opening ceremony on Monday 25 November.

Mr. Ridley: The cost to public funds of my visit to open the Darlington eastern bypass and the Kingsway flyover was less than £200.

Motorway Hazards

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with measures presently in force to signpost lane restrictions and hazards on motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I have recently reviewed the arrangements for the signing and management of roadworks on both motorways and all-purpose trunk roads. New guidance was issued to the Department's agent authorities on 14 November. A copy of the relevant trunk road management and maintenance notice (TRMM/9/85) is in the Library. We shall continue to monitor the arrangements.

Drink-Driving Campaign

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is yet in a position to announce the starting date for the campaign against drink and driving for Christmas 1985, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I shall be launching on 9 December a publicity campaign on the lines set out in the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels) on 14 November.

Highway Expenditure

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will show for each English county (a) the estimated highway capital expenditure in 1985-86, (b) the planned highway capital expenditure in 1986-87, (c) the proportion of planned expenditure in 1986-87 that is eligible for transport supplementary grant, (d) the highway structural maintenance expenditure in 1984-85, (e) the highway routine maintenance expenditure in 1984-85, (f) the estimated highway structural maintenance expenditure in 1985-86 and (g) the estimated highway routine maintenance expenditure in 1985-86.

Mr. Ridley: This information, taken from local authorities' transport policies and programmes, is given in the following tables.

Column (c) Shows counties' estimates of all their expenditure on highways and the regulation of traffic, all of which is eligible for TSG. The amount of this estimated expenditure which I accept for TSG will be shown in the TSG settlement for 1986-87 which is expected to be announced before Christmas.

Note to table: "Estimated Highway Maintenance Expenditure".
Notes:
Columns (d) to (g) Maintenance information is from 1985-86 transport policies and programmes. It was not collected in this form for 1986-87. There is no breakdown available for Merseyside's budget and bid or for most West Midlands' bid. Totals only can be shown.

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish his full response to the National Economic Development Organisation civil engineering report entitled, "A Fairer and Faster Route to Major Road Construction."

Mr. Ridley: I hope to be in a position to publish my response early next year.

Advancement of Women

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to ensure that national decisions concerning transportation policies should consider women's needs and should be based on consideration of the possible impact on the employment, income and health of women, as called for in paragraph 213 of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to her written questions on 29 November at column 717.

Fuel Consumption

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Transport what he estimates, at current fuel prices, would be the savings produced by a 2 per cent. reduction in fuel consumption on roads in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ridley: A reduction of two per cent. in annual petrol consumption assuming a pre-tax price of £·95 per gallon would save around £115 million.

Traffic Statistics

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current average weekday traffic flow at the peak time on the A50 where it passes through the Meir in Stoke on Trent; and if he will give the figures for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to the reply, 28 November 1985 c. 670]: Not all the data requested by the right hon. Member is available. The figures below represent actual peak hour flows on A50 east of Meir for all vehicles taken from counts on a day in the years indicated, but the figures are not necessarily typical.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Prescription Charges

Mr. Adams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will initiate an investigation into whether any hardship is being suffered as a result of the liability of unemployed people to pay National Health Service prescription charges.

Mr. Hayhoe: No.

Smoking

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the Health Education Council's budget is currently being spent on anti-smoking campaigns; whether further public money will be spent for the purpose in the next financial year; and what criteria he will be taking into account in reaching a decision on this matter.

Mr. Whitney: About one-fifth of the Health Education Council's (HEC) current budget of £10·1 million is allocated to smoking education and smoking is included in other programmes, particularly that concerned with preventing coronary heart diseases. The HEC has provisionally allocated £1·8 million for its smoking education budget in 1986-87, reflecting the importance it continues to attach to this subject. In addition, the Government are providing £1 million to test the effectiveness of an advertising campaign to discourage teenage smoking. This reflects our particular concern, which I know the HEC shares, to dissuade young people from starting to smoke.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to increase the level of grant paid by his Department to Action on Smoking and Health.

Mr. Whitney: Consideration will be given to next year's level of funding of ASH when we receive their grant application for 1986-87.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the amount of Government funding used by the Health Education Council to finance anti-smoking campaigns in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: The information is as follows:

Year	£ Million
1984-85	2·1
1982-83	2·4

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what funds have been made available by his Department to Action on Smoking and Health in the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: The information is as follows:

Grant to Action on Smoking and Health

1985-86	150,840
1984-85	136,000
1983-84	118,000

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to increase that element of the grant paid by his Department to the Health Education Council for campaigning on the issue of smoking.

Mr. Whitney: The Health Education Council (HEC) determines the allocation of its overall budget in discussion with the Department. The council is expecting to spend about £1·8 million on its smoking education programme in 1985-86 and has provisionally allocated a similar amount for this purpose next year. In addition, we are making available to the HEC extra funds as part of a £1 million pilot media campaign against teenage smoking.

Regional Secure Units

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the breakdown by regional health authority of the number of beds available in interim and permanent regional secure units; and how many of these are currently staffed and available.

NHS (Overseas Visitors)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is (a) the income received and (b) the administrative cost resulting from charges on overseas visitors using National Health Service facilities for each district health authority, regional health authority, and in total, for each year since the charges were introduced.

Mr. Hayhoe: The income from National Health Service hospital treatment for each year since the NHS (Overseas Visitors) Regulations came into operation on 1 October 1982 is set out in the following table.

The administrative costs associated with the collection of income are not separately identifiable.

Blood and Blood Products

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what volumes of blood and blood products have been imported for (a) the National Health Service and (b) the private health sector for each year since 1975; what were the origins of these imports; and when he expects the United Kingdom to achieve self-sufficiency in blood and blood products.

Mr. Whitney: This country is already self-sufficient in its needs for blood. It is believed that blood itself has not been imported for use in either the National Health Service or the private sector for many years.

As regards blood products, the information is not available in the form requested. Records are not kept centrally of the volumes of blood products imported their origins or destinations.

Scotland and Northern Ireland are already self-sufficient through the manufacturing capability of the protein fractionation centre, Liberton. The redevelopment of the blood products laboratory at Elstree is intended to meet the full needs of England and Wales. This redevelopment is expected to achieve full production by the end of 1986.

HTLV III Virus

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Social Services if he has any plans to introduce legislation to seek to avoid discrimination against known carriers of the HTLV III virus.

Mr. Hayhoe: Problems concerned with discrimination against carriers of the HTLV III virus are under consideration but I have no plans to introduce legislation in this area at this time.

TBWA

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much his Department has spent on employing the advertising agency TBWA; and what has resulted from this employment.

Mr. Hayhoe: Advertising agencies are paid on a commission basis by the media operators, not by their clients. TBWA has not, therefore, received any money directly from the Department for its services, apart from production costs.

Media spending channelled through TBWA plus production costs has been as follows:

1981-82	Nil
1982-83	390,209
1983-84	1,425,663
1984-85	941,129
1985-86	*940,262

* Estimate, not including AIDS campaign.

TBWA is currently handling the nursing careers, blood donation and AIDS campaigns.

Nurses (Recruitment)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce a policy of recruiting only non-smokers in the nursing profession.

Mr. Hayhoe: No.

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what additional funds have been made available by his Department for research into acquired immune deficiency syndrome; and on what they have been spent.

Mr. Hayhoe: Research in the United Kingdom is proceeding through six projects funded by the Medical Research Council (MRC) which recieves grant-in-aid from the science vote of the Department of Education and Science. The total cost is about £431,000, of which my Department is contributing £59,000 to two of these projects.

Exceptional Needs Payments

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now estimate the percentage of manpower spent on administering exceptional needs payments (single payments) in his Department's supplementary benefit local offices.

Mr. Major: About 5·5 per cent., just over 2,000 posts, of the supplementary benefit complement is estimated to be allocated to administering single payments.

One-parent Families

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of women who are single, widowed, separated, with dependent children under 16 years of age for each of the years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Whitney: Estimates, based on information from the 1981 census and the general household survey, are available as follows for 1979 and 1982.

Lone mother one-parent families, Great Britain

Lone mother	1979 000s	1982 000s
single	130	180
widowed	130	120
divorced	280	350
separated	200	180
Total	740	830

Notes:
1. A one-parent family comprises a lone parent with one or more dependent children, aged under 16 or 16-18 and in full-time education.
2. Estimates are derived from the general household survey by averaging the results for three years, centred on the year indicated.

Furniture Grants

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to change the basis on which furniture grants are paid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Green Paper "Reform of Social Security" announced proposals to replace the present system of help by way of single payments (including those for furniture) with a social fund. We are considering the comments made in the consultation period on the Green Paper and our conclusions will be set out in the White Paper.

Sick Leave

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many security officials employed by offices of the Department of Health and Social Security have taken sick leave during the past six years; if he will list the average periods of time that this has lasted during the same period; what level of damage has been done to Department of Health and Social Security property during the same period; and what costs have been incurred resulting from repair work.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Hypercholesterolaemia

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what investigations have been carried out by his Department into the incidence of hypercholesterolaemia in the population; and what publicity material has been issued to health authorities and other bodies about the dangers inherent in high levels of raised blood fats.

Mr. Whitney: I am not aware of any such investigations. In 1984 the report on diet and cardiovascular disease from the Chief Medical Officer's committee on medical aspects of food policy (COMA), which contains advice to doctors about hypercholesterolaemia, was published by the Department and circulated widely.

Hospital Closures

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of closures of hospitals for the mentally ill and the mentally handicapped which have been decided since 1979; and in which regions these have taken place.

Mr. Whitney: For mental illness and mental handicap hospitals approved for complete closure between May 1979 and 31 March 1985 I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her by my right hon. and learned Friend the then Minister of Health on 24 May at columns 591-94.

The total number of mental illness and mental handicap hospitals approved for complete closure between 1 April and 30 June, the latest period for which we have information, is three.

Details of the individual hospitals are as follows:

Mental illness and mental handicap hospitals approved for complete closure 1 April 1985-30 June 1985

Region	District	Hospital	Type of hospital mental illness (MI) or mental handicap (MH)	Date approved
Yorkshire	Leeds Western	Grassington hospital	MI	May 1985
	York	Naburn hospital	MI	May 1985
Wessex	Isle of Wight	Longford hospital	MH	April 1985

National Health Service (Industrial Relations)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration he has given to the document, supported by the North West regional health authority, entitled "Industrial Relations — Response to the Threat or Actuality of Industrial Action", a copy of which has been sent to him by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe; what is his policy towards the document; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: All health authorities are required to have contingency plans for maintaining services to patients in the face of threats of industrial action. I understand that this document was prepared for consideration by general managers in the North Western region and the right hon. Member may therefore wish to address his questions to the chairman of the North Western regional health authority.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest available figure for the number of ordinary board and lodging claimants who, as a result of the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1985, were paid at the non-householder rate or who would have been paid as non-householders but received unemployment benefit or had excess income: how many of these claimants have returned his Department's letter BL1 following the High Court decision in R v Secretary of State for Social Services ex parte Cotton; what is the latest available figure for the total amount of arrears paid to these claimants; and if he will give this information for Great Britain as a whole, for England, Scotland, Wales;

(2) what are the latest figures for the number of ordinary board and lodging claimants who, as a result of the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1985, were due to be restricted to the non-householder rate but continued to be paid as boarders as a result of the judgment in R v Secretary of State for Social Services ex parte Cotton; and if he will give this information for England, Scotland, Wales and Great Britain;

(3) what is the latest available figure for the number of ordinary board and lodging claimants who, as a result of the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1985 received four-week or eight-week transitional protection from restriction; what is the latest available figures for the total amount of arrears paid to these claimants following the High Court decision in R v Secretary of State for Social Services ex parte Cotton; and if he will give this information for England, Wales, Scotland and Great Britain as a whole;

(4) what are the latest figures for the number of ordinary board and lodging claimants who, as a result of the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1985, changed status following restriction to (i) householders and (ii) no fixed abode; and if he will give this information for England, Scotland, Wales and Great Britain.

Mr. Newton: We do not collect national statistics on the numbers and details of all claimants who changed benefit status as a result of the 29 April board and lodging changes. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 29 October at columns 439-442 for information on the proportion of claimants exempt from the application of the time limits and for the findings of special surveys.

Following the decision in the High Court in R v Secretary of State for Social Services ex parte Cotton, local offices were asked to keep statistical records relating to the number of claimants affected by the suspension of time limits, and the arrears of benefit paid. The analysis of these statistical returns is not yet complete. Separate information was not collected on the number of forms BL1 that were returned.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest available figure for the number of ordinary board and lodging claimants with dependent children under 18 years.

Mr. Newton: The sample size precludes the provision of reliable estimates. However, it is probably less than 5,000.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how the following information is collected: (a) the total annual number of ordinary board and lodgings claimants, (b) the annual average payment to ordinary board and lodging claimants and (c) the total annual cost of payments to ordinary board and lodging claimants.

Mr. Newton: Estimates of such caseloads, average payments and total expenditure are derived from the Department's regular statistical inquiries covering all social security offices.

Infant Mortality (Leeds)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the infant mortality rates per 1,000 live births for children (a) under one year, (b) under four weeks, (c) under one week and (d) under 24 hours for the Leeds eastern district health authority for 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Whitney: The information is shown in the table. The rates are based on small numbers and are therefore liable to chance variation from year to year.

Numbers and rates for (a) infant, (b) neonatal, (c) early neonatal and (d) deaths under 24 hours for children in Leeds eastern health authority 1983 and 1984*

	1983		1984

(c) Early neonatal	13	2·84	24	5·31
(d) Under 24 hours	8	1·75	16	3·54

*Rates per 1,000 live births.

Definitions

(a) Infant—deaths of children aged under 1 year.
(b) Neonatal—deaths of children aged under 4 weeks.
(c) Early Neonatal—deaths of children aged under 1 week.

Benefits

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all the changes in social security law since May 1979 which have affected the entitlement of (a) 16 to 17-year-olds, (b) 18 to 20-year-olds and (c) 21 to 25-year-olds to supplementary benefit or any other benefit or which have affected the entitlement to any benefit of their parents.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

School Leavers (Benefits)

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in each year since its introduction, what has been the gross and net saving from the change in supplementary benefit rules which delayed the entitlement of school leavers until one of three terminal dates, showing separately the savings from 16, 17, 18 and 19-year-olds; and what would be the cost of reversing this change in a full year at 1985-86 benefit rates.

Mr. Newton: No separate records are kept of claims to benefit by school leavers and the information requested is not therefore available.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, in each year since its introduction, what has been the saving fom the removal of a parent's right to child benefit where a school or college leaver obtains a job or a place on a Manpower Services Commission scheme before the relevant terminal date; and what would be the cost of reversing this change in a full year at 1985-86 benefit rates.

Mr. Newton: The change, from 31 May 1982, produced savings of about £9 million in the first year. It is estimated that the cost of reversing this change during 1985-86 would be of the order of £11 million.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, in each year since its introduction, what has been the saving from counting as a resource of their parents (a) the earnings and (b) the training allowances of school leavers before their terminal date; and what would be the cost of reversing these changes in a full year at 1985-86 benefit rates.

Mr. Newton: For supplementary benefit purposes income, including training allowances but excluding earnings, received by a dependent child has for many years been taken into account in determining his parents' entitlement to benefit but only up to the level of the child's own requirements; any excess is completely disregarded. Until 1984, all earnings received by a dependent child were completely disregarded but, by virtue of Regulation 3(6) of the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Amendment Regulations 1984, from 26 November 1984 the full-time earnings of a school leaver have been taken into account up to the level of his own requirements, any balance being ignored.

Information about the actual amount of benefit saved as the result of these provisions is not available but it is estimated that if no account was taken of either the earnings or training allowances received by school leavers the additional cost at 1985-86 benefit rates would be about £1·5 million and £0·4 million respectively.

Supplementary Benefits

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in each year since its introduction, what has been the gross and net saving from the removal from (a) 16 and 17-year-olds, (b) 18 to 20-year-olds supplementary benefit non-householders' rent addition; and what would be the cost of reversing these changes in a full year at 1985-86 benefit rates.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in each year since its introduction, what has been the saving from the introduction and increase in non-dependants' deductions from housing benefit for young people, showing separately the savings from the changes for 16 and 17-year-olds and from 18 to 20-year-olds; and what would be the cost of reversing these changes in a full year at 1985-86 benefit rates.

Mr. Major: I regret that this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

National Health Service (Vacant Posts)

Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines his Department has issued on advertising of posts in the National Health Service.

Mr. Whitney: Following a Rayner scrutiny on recruitment advertising in the National Health Service the Department issued guidelines in health circular (85)12 to health authorities in England. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales issued similar guidelines to Welsh health authorities in WHC(85)11. A copy of the guidelines is in the Library.

Benefits (Dietary Guidelines)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what dietary guidelines he uses in determining levels of supplementary benefit and family income supplement levels;

(2) if he will give details of the amount of supplementary benefit and family income supplement available for food purchase by different claimant groups.

Mr. Newton: There is no specific amount for food, or any other item, in the supplementary benefit scale rates. The rates are based on the national assistance rates set in 1948, which were based upon an assessment of requirements for food and other essential items. The real value of the rates has more than doubled since 1948, but upratings have not been based on the revaluation of particular items. The family income supplement prescribed amounts were originally set in 1971 having regard to, amongst other things, the supplementary benefit rates. The amounts have been increased since then well ahead of prices.

Dental Fillings (Amalgam)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning poisoning or other health risks by the use of amalgam for dental fillings.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Spencer) on 22 October at columns 131-132.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received recently on the subject of amalgam dental fillings.

Mr. Hayhoe: A few letters.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to establish a standard for substitutes for amalgam for dental fillings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: An international standard already exists for dental gold (ISO 1562; 1984). The United Kingdom is participating in the work of the International Standards Organisation to develop standards for resin based tooth coloured filling materials.

Departmental Grants

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy with regard to the criteria used in deciding whether to provide grants for more than one organisation campaigning on similar issues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: We do not normally provide support specifically for campaigning although this may form part of the activities of a grant-aided body. We always seek to avoid duplicating grants for the same purpose, but there is often room for a number of bodies to work in the same field and in such cases we co-ordinate the purposes for which any grants are given to them.

National Health Service Hospitals

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give, for each year since 1979 and for each district health authority, the total number of National Health Service hospitals;

(2) if he will give, for each year since 1979 and for each district health authority, the total number of beds in National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Supplementary Benefit (Camden)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was (a) the number of persons claiming supplementary benefit and (b) the number of children estimated to be dependent on those claimants in each of the local offices of his Department that serve the London borough of Camden in each of the years 1979 to 1985.

Mr. Major: The following table shows the estimated number of people claiming supplementary benefit in the London borough of Camden in December 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, and the estimated number of children dependant upon them. Comparable figures for 1979, 1980 and 1985 are not available.

London borough of Camden

	Estimated number of supplementary benefit claimants	Estimated number of children dependant on these claimants
1981	16,000	3,000
1982	20,000	6,000
1983	19,000	6,000
1984	23,000	7,000

Road Accidents (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) injuries and (b) deaths from road accidents have been dealt with in each of the last five years in the Portsmouth and South East Hampshire health district.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not available centrally on the numbers of persons treated in Portsmouth and South East Hampshire district health authority following injury in road accidents. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the district health authority who may be able to provide the information requested. I shall let the hon. Member have the available information on deaths from road accidents as soon as possible.

Hypothermia

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will institute a publicity campaign this winter about the dangers of hypothermia and means of combating it.

Mr. Whitney: The Health Education Council leaflet "Warmth in Winter", which offers practical advice on keeping warm, is available again this winter through local health education units and Age Concern branches. Further information and training materials for those in contact with elderly people are being developed under the Health Education Council's project, "Your Right to be Warm". These will be available in time for next winter.

Kidney Transplants (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many kidney transplants have been carried out in each of the last five years in the Portsmouth and South East Hampshire health district.

Mr. Whitney: According to information supplied by the United Kingdom transplant service, the numbers of cadaveric kidney transplant operations performed in each of the last five years at the renal transplant unit at St. Mary's hospital in Portsmouth have been as follows:

	Number
1981	44
1982	60
1983	73
1984	50

Pharmaceutical Services

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has carried out any assessment of the implications for patients and pharmacists of the proposed new agreement between his Department and the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the advice received from the adjudication officer about the administration of exceptionally severe weather payments.

Mr. Newton: I understand that the Chief Adjudication Officer expects to issue his guidance to adjudication officers very shortly and I shall arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Tuberculosis (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children died of tuberculosis in the Portsmouth health district area in the last five years.

Mr. Whitney: The information is shown in the table.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the rate of notifications of tuberculosis among the population in the Portsmouth and South East Hampshire health district area for the last five years.

Mr. Whitney: Notifications of tuberculosis are made to the local medical officer of environmental health (proper officer) for each local government district, and are therefore generally not available for health districts.

The table shows the corrected notification rates for the county districts of Portsmouth, Fareham, Gosport and Havant, all of which fall wholly within the boundary of the Portsmouth and South East Hampshire district health authority.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many speech therapists are currently being trained; how many are in post; and where they are employed.

Mr. Whitney: Information on the numbers currently being trained is not collected by the Department as oversight of training is delegateded to the College of Speech Therapy under the authority of the NHS (Speech Therapists) Amendment Regulations 1985 (SI 1985/47). The numbers in post and their location by Regional Health Authority are shown in the table.

Family Practitioners

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding the provision of information about doctor services for patients; and what was his response.

Mr. Hayhoe: Representations from the British Medical Association proposing additions to the information about general medical practitioners made available by family practitioner committees are under consideration.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding the extension of the availability of family practitioner committee lists; and what was his response.

Mr. Hayhoe: No such representations have been received.

Pensions

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, if, in so far as they affect the current payment of pensions, he will list the relevant statutory instruments and orders which governed the exceptions to the general requirements for employees or others to pay contributions into the statutory pension insurance scheme between 1936 and 1948, and all the employers who obtained exception under these provisions, indicating the period during which the exception was current and, where possible, whether it was for all employees or not.

Mr. Major: Since persons in excepted employments between 1936 and 1948 did not pay contributions which were credited into the state pension scheme in 1948, legislation governing exceptions does not in general affect the current payment of pensions. However, the main provisions for excepting persons from insurance during the relevant period are contained in schedule 1 to the National Health Insurance Act 1936, as amended. In addition, a large number of regulations and orders were made under this act, such as, for example:

Regulations

National Health Insurance, Statutory Undertakers Total Exception Regulations 1939.
National Health Insurance Exception Regulations 1942
National Health Insurance Exception Regulations (No. 2) 1942
National Health Insurance Exception Regulations 1943
National Health Insurance, Statutory Undertakers Total Exception (Amendment) Regulations 1946

Orders

Subsidiary Employments Order 1937
Subsidiary Emmployments Order (No. 2) 1937
Contractors for Manual Labour Exclusions Order 1937
Employment under Local and Public Authorities Order 1937
Employment under Local and Public Authorities (Northern Ireland) Order 1937
Outworkers Order 1937
Sharefishermen Order 1937
Employments (Exclusion and Inclusion) Order (Scotland) 1937
Subsidiary Employment Order (Northern Ireland) 1938

The full information requested is not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

It would not be appropriate to list all the employers who from time to time obtained exception under these provisions, even if the information were available. However, in September 1946, there were some 440 employers with excepted employments in Great Britain and 135 in Northern Ireland. No information is available on the proportion of those employers whose employment was excepted.

Occupational Therapists

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total number of National Health Service patients awaiting treatment by occupational therapists for 1 January 1985 and 1 January 1984.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of occupational therapists employed by each health authority for 1 January 1985 and 1 January 1984.

Mr. Whitney: Information is collected centrally only at 30 September. The table gives the number of occupational therapists employed by each regional health authority in England at 30 September 1983 and 1984, the most recent information available.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. The available data on qualified occupational therapists are given in the table.

Tuberculosis

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the incidence of cases of respiratory and non-respiratory tuberculosis, as taken together, per 100,000 population, reported in each standard region of the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and what was the comparable figure for England and Wales.

Mr. Whitney: The information is given in the table. The systems of notification of tuberculosis differ slightly in the constituent parts of the United Kingdom, and the figures are not exactly comparable year by year.

*Rates per 100,000 population.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of (a) respiratory and (b) non-respiratory tuberculosis have been reported in England and Wales in each of the last five years; and what are the figures for South Tyneside.

Mr. Whitney: The numbers of notifications of respiratory and of other forms of tuberculosis for England and Wales, and for South Tyneside are given in the table. Figures from 1982 exclude notifications associated with chemoprophylaxis. Other changes mean that the figures are not exactly comparable year by year, but the effect is thought to be minimal.

Overseas Visitors (Social Security Payments)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in what circumstances social security payments are made to visitors to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: Most social security benefits have residence and contribution tests and other individual specific tests of eligibility which could not be fulfilled by a visitor to the United Kingdom. Entitlement to supplementary benefit, which does not have residence or contribution tests, may be dependent on immigration status and most visitors from abroad are admitted on the understanding that they will support themselves: their conditions of entry effectively exclude them from benefit entitlement. However, in some circumstances, where a person has been given limited leave to enter and the Home Office has his status under consideration, payments may be made on an urgent needs basis.

Hospital Services (Privatisation)

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what directives he has given since 1983 to regional and district health authorities regarding the privatisation of hospital services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: No directives to health authorities on competitive tendering for hospital support services have been given but I expect the policies set out in circular HC(83)18 to be implemented by all health authorities.

Hospital Development

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the hospital development schemes costing over £5 million (a) completed since May 1979 and (b) started since May 1979, giving for each the district, the number of beds involved, the completion date and the cost.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

National Health Service (Revenue and Expenditure)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each health district the revenue and capital expenditure in each year since 1974, expressing the figures (a) in money terms, (b) adjusted by the gross domestic product deflator and (c) adjusted by the movement of National Health Service pay and prices.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Private Homes (Fees)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for each of his Department's areas which includes any part of Barnet health authority within their boundaries the number of residents (a) aged 65 years and over and (b) aged under 65 years of private and voluntary nursing and residential homes whose fees are paid by social security;

(2) if he will place in the Library the returns from each of his Department's areas, giving the numbers of residents of private and voluntary nursing homes and residential homes whose fees are paid by social security.

Mr. Newton: The analysis of statistical returns on boarders from local social security offices — which would also need to be used to provide information relevant to the Barnet health authority area—is not yet complete. Full information on the results of the monitoring will be made available as soon as possible.

National Health Service (Annual Report)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many copies of the document, "The Health Service in England—Annual Report 1985", have been produced; and how many have been supplied free and to whom.

Mr. Whitney: 4,000 copies of the report were printed. 2,500 have been supplied for official use. The distribution includes regional, district and special health authorities, family practitioner committees, community health councils and professional bodies. Copies were made available in the Vote Office and to members of the press.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total cost of the preparation, printing, publication, promotion and distribution of "The Health Service in England—Annual Report 1985"; and how many copies have been distributed.

Mr. Whitney: The full printing costs, and distribution costs of sale copies, were borne by Her Majesty's Stationery Office with recovery in the usual way from the proceeds of sales. It would not be possible to calculate the Departmental costs of preparation, promotion and distribution without disproportionate cost. Over 2,000 copies of the Report have been distributed by the Department.

National Health Service (Surplus Property)

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his policy regarding the retention by district health authorities of funds released by the sale of surplus National Health Service property; and what steps he has taken to monitor the implementation of this policy.

Mr. Whitney: Health authorities have been advised that, in general, they will retain the proceeds of their disposals for funding future service developments. They have been asked to submit action plans by 31 December 1985 for consideration by the Department. The Department will monitor the implementation of the plans over the next two years.

Mentally-ill Persons

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what proportion of annual National Health Service revenue and capital budgets was spent on services for mentally-ill people during the most recent year for which figures are available;

(2) if he wil provide a percentage figure indicating the proportion of the National Health Service budget on mental health services which was spent on services, facilities, staffing and upkeep of psychiatric hospitals at the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: 11·1 per cent. of health authority spending in 1983-84 was devoted to services for mentally-ill people. The remaining information sought is not readily available in the form requested but in recent years details of the breakdown of health authority and personal social services gross current expenditure on different groups, including mentally-ill people, have been published in the Department's evidence to the Social Services Committee for the Committee's annual inquiry into public expenditure on the social services — most recently in the Committee's Sixth Report (HC 339) which was published in June this year (pages 11-29 inclusive).

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many local authority day centre places are available for mentally ill people in England.

Mr. Whitney: At 31 March 1984, the latest date for which complete information is available, the number of places in local authority day centres for mentally-ill people in England was 5,361. A further 1,225 day centre places were made available to local authorities by voluntary and other bodies. The above figures do not include places available in mixed day centres, an unspecified number of which are for mentally-ill people, or day care places available in local authority residential homes.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many community mental health centres are operating; how many are planned; and where they are situated and planned to be situated.

Mr. Whitney: Centres described as community mental health centres vary in their objectives and in the resources they offer, and we have not so far sought either to define what minimum requirements would justify the term, nor therefore to obtain statistics of the number of centres within such a definition which are operating. Generally we would see their essential function as to provide a local base for a multi-disciplinary team to provide psychiatric services to a part of a district; we are aware, however, that in some districts advantages have been seen in such a team not using a "community mental health centre" but instead using the accommodation of a health centre or group practice, so that there can be close links with primary health care, and no unnecessary labelling of minor disabilities as psychiatric. There are also places where such a multi-disciplinary team has found a suitable base in say a day hospital or day centre, but has not sought to identify it as a "community mental health centre".

We are however aware that a number of health authorities have plans for such centres, which may include domiciliary, day and in-patient care as well as a resource centre for professionals, the voluntary sector and the public. We are anxious to secure more evaluative research into the different patterns of community-oriented psychiatric care responding to the needs of neighbourhood areas.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the evaluation studies concerned with the effects of hospital rundown on patients and staff and with the buildup of alternative community services undertaken by his Department's mental illness research liaison group.

Mr. Whitney: A number of evaluation studies have been undertaken as part of the Department's research programme on the effects of hospital run-down and the provision of alternative community services in the field of mental illness. These have included studies based on the psychiatric case registers at Worcester, Salford, Nottingham, Southampton and Camberwell, by the universities of Birmingham, Liverpool, London and Manchester. Detailed numerical descriptions of the development of these activities are due to be published soon. These will detail results obtained from the registers including the monitoring of change and collaboration between services.

Other studies have covered the more general provision of community services, joint planning and collaboration. A number of research applications in these fields are at present being considered by the Department.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which health advisory service reports have been published on mental illness services since 1 January.

Mr. Whitney: Reports have been published on Health Advisory Service visits to the following health authorities concerning mental illness services: West Surrey and North East Hampshire, South West Surrey, South Manchester, Central Manchester, North Manchester, Great Yarmouth and Waveney, North West Surrey, Worcester, Ealing, Harrow, Brent, Wigan and Herefordshire and District health authorities. Reports on all visits made since 1 January 1985 are being published.

Psychiatric Hospitals

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list all those psychiatric hospitals for which a firm date has been set for closure indicating in each case what that date is;

(2) if he will list all those psychiatric hospitals which are planned for closure but for which no firm date has at present been set.

Mr. Whitney: We collect information centrally about the dates on which closures are approved, but not the planned or actual dates of those closures taking place.

Hospitals for the mentally-ill and mentally-handicapped which have been approved for closure since May 1979 are listed in the reply from my right hon. and learned Friend the then Minister for Health to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Short) on 24 May at columns 591-4 and in my reply to her today.

The hon. Member may wish to approach the relevant health authorities direct about closure dates.

Personal Social Services Research Unit, Kent

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all publications produced to date by the personal social services research unit in Kent.

Mr. Whitney: The personal social services research unit, which is funded by this Department, produces its own series of discussion papers. Some of these papers are intended mainly for internal use, some are circulated more widely and some are published as priced documents. Some of the discussion papers or extracts from them are published elsewhere as articles, monographs or books. Since its inception in 1974 the unit has produced more than 400 papers in this series. The Department does not keep a complete list of these publications. The list which is immediately available is as follows. I will let the hon. Member have a further reply as soon as I receive a complete list from the unit.

Advancement of Women

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to implement paragraph 149 of the United Nations Nairobi forward looking strategies on the advancement of women relating to the increased participation of women in higher professional and managerial positions in health institutions.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department is using the appropriate gender-specific indicators for monitoring women's health developed by the World Health Organisation and referred to in paragraph 161 of the United Nations Nairobi forward looking strategies on the advancement of women.

Mr. Whitney: Yes. We use the World Health Organisation's gender-specific indicators, along with many other similar systems, to monitor women's health in this country in the context of the health status of the population as a whole.

Geriatric Beds (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many acute geriatric beds there are in each Hampshire hospital presently; and what are the comparative figures for each year from 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 18 November 1985, c. 83-4]: Information is not held centrally in precisely the form requested. The available information is given in the table.

Hospital Pharmacy Service

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the number of hospital pharmacists currently employed in each health district; and what is the ratio of hospital pharmacists to hospital patients treated annually in each of those districts.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 14 November 1985, c. 284]: The latest available figures for hospital pharmacists employed, and inpatients and day patients treated in each health district are shown in the table. Available statistics do not differentiate between types of activity in hospitals. Crude ratios of staff to total patients are not therefore meaningful.

WALES

Local Authority Capital Expenditure

Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he will make known his plans for local authority expenditure for 1986-87.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Following the autumn review of public expenditure, I have decided that the total available for capital expenditure allocation for Wales will be £323 million. This is £60 million, or 23 per cent., more than the total available for 1985-86, and is consistent with delivery of the plans in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement to the House on 12 November.

Following my requests in July and December 1984 for expenditure restraint, councils have succeeded in reducing their capital expenditure in 1984-85 from an initial excess of around £90 million (33 per cent.) to £16 million (6 per cent.). In the light of this reduction I have decided to waive all outstanding offsets to capital allocations for both 1985-86 and 1986-87. District council spending power is therefore £10 million more than it otherwise would have been.

The total of councils' accumulated receipts increased substantially in 1984-85 but has remained broadly stable in the current year. I have therefore decided not to change for 1986-87 the prescribed proportion of captial receipts from the sale of assets which local authorities may use for additional capital expenditure. This will allow councils to make substantial additions to their capital spending using their new and accumulated receipts in 1986-87.

The increase in allocation which this package represents is further evidence that by keeping a tight rein on their expenditure in recent years local authorities in Wales have made it possible for me to make substantial additional sums available for much needed capital investment. I am sure that this will be welcomed by all concerned.

I shall shortly make announcements on the allocation of these resources to services and individual local authorities in the usual way.

Health Authorities

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to provide resources necessary to permit full and effective consultation if any health authority in Wales is required to take steps that materially affect the service it offers residents in its area in any aspect of its work, arising from financial constraints placed upon it by the Welsh Office.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The rationalisation of services and the consultation that is required are part of a health authority's normal management responsibility. There is no justification for special funding.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what local unemployment figures are available for a basis of comparison in the movement of unemployment figures over the past 10 years; and how far back comparisons can be made with those local figures of unemployment which will henceforth be used.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: A consistent seasonally adjusted series of unemployment figures is available for Wales as a whole back to 1974. As a result of changes in methods of collection and analysis, there are, however, no figures for local unemployment which can be properly used as a basis of comparison over the whole of the past 10 years. Discontinuities in the figures have occurred as a result of three events: first, the change in the basis of the count in October 1982 from registered unemployed to a claimants system; secondly, the effects of the 1983 Budget provisions whereby some men, mainly aged 60 or over, no longer need to sign on at the unemployment benefit offices to receive benefits; and, thirdly, the recent change to a ward-based system for allocating claimants to localities.

The recently introduced "ward-based" unemployment figures, which give a more accurate geographical representation of areas than any previous series, is to be made available from June 1983, although it was only fully introduced earlier this year.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the level of unemployment in each local area in Wales for which figures are available for September; and if he will indicate the corresponding figures drawn up on the same basis, for each such local area for January and August respectively.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The smallest area for which unemployment rates are calculated is the travel-to-work area. The following information is therefore on that basis:

Housing Corporation

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied that the Housing Corporation in Wales takes adequate steps to ensure that the needs of each area are properly understood by them, and that proper discussions take place with local housing departments before the Housing Corporation-implemented plans are formulated or updated.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Yes.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will arrange to discuss with Arfon borough council and the Housing Corporation what plans exist to meet the housing needs of elderly persons in the Caernarfon area.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I am satisfied that the Housing Corporation and Arfon borough council are continuing to discuss all housing needs in the Caernarfon area, including those of the elderly.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing for the most recent available year, an analysis by local planning committees area of the number of planning appeals under section 36 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 made to him, from each such area, together with the number of appeals upheld and rejected, respectively, for each such area.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higher Education

87. Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures have been taken to make higher education more relevant to the needs of industry.

Mr. Walden: Improving the effectiveness of higher education's contribution to the national economy is central to the Government's educational policies. This aim, and the specific measures designed to encourage the growing partnership between higher education and industry, were spelt out in our recent Green Paper "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s".

These measures include financial support through the Science and Engineering Research Council for the teaching company and other schemes which link higher education and industry in collaborative projects; responding to the requests of industry and others for additional higher education student places in science, engineering and technology — most recently in the engineering and technology programme, which will provide about 5,000 such additional places by the end of the decade; appointing more industrialists to national planning bodies for higher education and to the governing bodies and councils of individual institutions; and the establishment of schemes which encourage retraining and containing education for employees, such as the PICKUP programme.

Trauma (Research)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research is being sponsored by the Medical Research Council into trauma; whether he has any plans to extend the existing trauma research facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: I understand that the Medical Research Council (MRC) is funding 38 projects on research into trauma; this includes two projects omitted in error in my reply of 25 November, at columns 397 and 398, to questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton). It is for the MRC to decide how, within its charter purposes, to apportion the grant-in-aid it receives from the Department's science budget between the various areas of science which it supports. The council is always willing to consider soundly-based research proposals for support through its grants schemes in competition with other applications.

Pupil Statistics

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish figures to show the number of pupils educated by each education authority in London in 1978, 1982 and 1985; and if he will give the same information for Leicestershire.

Mr. Dunn: The numbers of full-time and part-time pupils in maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools in each local education authority in Greater London and in Leicestershire in 1978, 1982 and 1985 were as follows:—

January	1978	1982	1985

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report, for each local education authority in England, at the latest available date, the number and proportion of children of compulsory school age in (i) mainstream, maintained schools and (ii) special schools whose education is governed by a statement under the provisions of the Education Act 1981.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mandatory Grants

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the saving to his Department of the changes in the mandatory grant regulations between 1984-85 and 1985-86; and whether this saving is ongoing to future years.

Mr. Walden: The saving resulting from the abolition of the minimum maintenance award and increased parental contributions from those in the middle and upper reaches of the income scale is estimated at £19 million in 1985-86. In later years the effect in each full financial year is estimated at £28 million.

Students (Income)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report, for the latest year available, the figures for income per student at the following universities (a) Birmingham, (b) Bristol, (c) Leeds, (d) Leicester, (e) Liverpool, (f) Manchester, (g) Newcastle, (h) Nottingham, (i) Oxford and (j) Sheffield under the headings (i) income from the University Grants Committee, (ii) direct income from local education authority in which the institution is located, (iii) endowments, (iv) investment income, (v) fees, (vi) research councils and (vii) other research and consultancy funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The recurrent income per full-time equivalent student load for the academic year 1983-84 is estimated to be as follows:

¶Estimate.
Information about direct income from local education authorities and investment income is not readily available.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report, for the latest year available, the figures for the income per student at the following polytechnics: (a) Birmingham, (b) Bristol, (c) Leeds, (d) Leicester, (e) Liverpool, (f) Manchester, (g) Newcastle, (h) Nottingham (Trent), (i) Oxford and (j) Sheffield under the headings (i) income from the advanced further education pool, (ii) direct income from the local education authority in which the institution is located, (iii) endowments, (iv) investment income, (v) fees, (vi) research and (vii) other research and consultancy funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The table below gives figures for the latest available year, 1983-84. The differences between columns (v) and (vi) are largely accounted for by income from maintaining authorities, but may also include inter-authority payments and income from other sources.

University Grants Committee

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the percentage change in the funding of each university by the University Grants Committee between 1980-81 and 1983-84, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home student fees, compensation for redundancy and early retirement, changes to take account of minor capital works from the recurrent grant changes in the level of local authority rates, additions made for the information technology and new blood programmes;

(2) what is the percentage change in real terms, measured by the gross domestic product deflator, in the funding of each university by the University Grants Committee between 1980-81 and 1983-84, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home student fees, compensation for redundancy and early retirement, changes to take account of minor capital works from the recurrent grant and changes in the level of local authority rates (a) including and (b) exluding additions made for the information technology and new blood programmes.

Mr. Walden: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Young Persons (Special Educational Needs)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to offer advice to local education authorities on the role of further education colleges in providing for young people with special educational needs.

Mr. Chris Patten: I am considering what advice can usefully be offered on this subject to colleges and local education authorities.

School Reorganisation

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the implications for school reorganisation of the judgment of Mr. Justice Taylor in respect of Avon county council's proposals for south Bristol and the Sex Discrimination Act 1975; and how many proposals for reorganisation are currently awaiting his decision to which the ruling is relevant.

Mr. Dunn: It would be premature for my right hon. Friend to reply to this question until it is clear that the judicial process has run its full course, or before he has been able to consider a full transcript of the judgment.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Brixton Prison (Strip Searches)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners on remand at Brixton prison are strip searched; and whether he will publish a table showing the number of times per day they are strip searched, where the searching takes place and what is the sex of the prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: Rule 39 of the prison rules 1964 provides that every prisoner, male and female and including those on remand, shall be searched on reception into prison and thereafter as the governor thinks necessary. Standing instructions provide that the search on reception should be a strip search, and other times at which prisoners may be strip searched include before and after court appearances, before and after visits, at the time of cell changes and during wing and cell searches. The frequency of such searches in individual cases will depend upon a range of factors including the incidence of court appearances, visits etc., and the security category of the prisoner concerned. The location of a search will depend upon the circumstances in which it is carried out. Comprehensive information of the kind requested is not available because establishments are not required to maintain statistics of the number of strip searches carried out.

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often Ella O'Dwyer and Martina Anderson are strip-searched in Brixton prison, and why.

Mr. Mellor: Strip searching is a routine security measure for the detection of small items of contraband, in particular weapons and drugs, which can be concealed easily about the person and cannot be detected by other methods of searching. Miss O'Dwyer and Miss Anderson have been strip searched in accordance with standard practice, before and after court appearances, after visits, at the time of cell changes and during wing and cell searches.

Rape Crisis Centres

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the names of the rape crisis centres which receive Government grants, specifying the grants allocated for the years 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Mellor: The rape counselling and research project receives a grant from the Department of Health and Social Security. The amount of the grant for the financial years 1985-86 and 1986-87 will be £22,000 each year. Local rape crisis centres are not provided with direct Government funding, but can apply in the same way as other voluntary organisations for financial assistance under various general Government programmes, such as the urban programme. The Department has no information about the number of rape crisis centres which are funded in this way.

Prison Officers

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to refusals by insurance companies to consider applications from prison officers serving in certain establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Department has received no information that prison officers have been refused personal insurance.

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prison officers of all ranks serving in penal establishments in Britain and Northern Ireland have, within the last five years, been recorded as suffering from heart attacks or other stress related conditions; and how many have died from such ailments whilst still serving;

(2) how many prison officers serving in a dispersal prison within the United Kingdom or who are recorded as having served in a dispersal prison have died from a heart attack or related ailment within the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: Information about the circumstances of staff sickness or the death of serving officers is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Life Sentence Prisoners

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present average prison sentence now being served by a person who has been sentenced to life imprisonment.

Mr. Mellor: The average time served under sentence in prison department establishments in England and Wales by those first released on licence from life sentences in 1984 was about ten and a half years. There are wide variations in the periods served in custody from which this average is calculated and it does not take into account any time that may have been served in other custodial care before entering a prison department establishment. This average excludes those persons who have died in custody or been discharged for other reasons. Also, it does not fully reflect the longest periods likely to be served by some of those given life sentences following the abolition of capital punishment in 1965 who have not yet been released.

Hampshire Constabulary

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the establishment of the Hampshire constabulary in 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980 and 1985, respectively.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information is as follows:

Authorised Police Establishment
On 31 December

	Number
1965	*2,321
1970	2,750
1975	2,845
1980	3,034
1985	3,038

Note:
* The authorised establishment figure given for 31 December 1965 combines the establishments of the then separate forces of Hampshire and the Isle of Wight, Portsmouth and Southampton. These police areas were amalgamated in 1967 to form the Hampshire police area.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civilians have been employed by the Hampshire constabulary in each year since 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980 and 1985, respectively.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information is as follows:

Civilian staff

On 31 December	Full-time	Part-time
1965	†324	—
1970	476	58
1975	621	124
1980	644	145
*1985	689	148

Notes:
* 31 October.
† The civilian staff number given for 31 December 1965 combines the staff numbers in the then separate forces of Hampshire and the Isle of Wight, Portsmouth and Southampton. These police areas were amalgamated in 1967 to form the Hampshire police area.

Unmarked Police Vehicles

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for reports from chief constables about their guidelines regarding the use of unmarked police vehicles by constabularies in England and Wales;

(2) if he will call for reports from chief constables about how many police forces in England and Wales use unmarked police vehicles for motorway patrol duties; and if he will list the names of such constabularies.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The use of unmarked police vehicles, whether for motorway patrol or other duties, is an operational matter for individual chief officers of police, in which it would not be appropriate for us to intervene.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further consideration he has given to the use of compulsory quotas as a means of overcoming racial discrimination in the employment of young perons.

Mr. Waddington: None. Under the Race Relations Act 1976 any racial discrimination at the point of employment is unlawful. We have no plans to amend the law in this respect.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further consideration Her Majesty's Government have given to imposing conditions regarding racial discrimination in the employment of young people when awarding Government contracts.

Mr. Waddington: The Government already require their contractors not to discriminate unlawfully within the meaning of the provisions of the Race Relations Act 1976 relating to employment and to take all reasonable steps to ensure that their servants, employees, agents and sub-contractors do not do so.

Fire Services (New Guidelines)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the new guidelines for fire services are to be published.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that the hon. Member is concerned with the guidelines by which fire authorities assess the number of pumping appliances required in any locality. These are contained in the report of the joint committee on standards of fire cover of the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Councils for England and Wales and Scotland, which was endorsed in Fire Service circular No. 4/1985 issued on 22 May.

The Solicitor-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions hopes to complete his investigations shortly.

PRIME MINISTER

Labour Statistics

25. Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's estimate of unemployed people who are actively seeking work; and what assumptions are made in calculating that figure as to the number of people classified as unemployed who are not registered at job centres.

The Lord Privy Seal: I have been asked to reply.

According to the labour force survey, there were an estimated 2,905,000 people without jobs and actively seeking work in Great Britain in the spring of 1984. This figure is derived from household interviews and no assumption is made of the numbers of people claiming benefits or registered at jobcentres.

Falkland Islands

30. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will initiate discussions with President Alfonsin of Argentina about the future of the Falkland Islands; and if she will make a statement.

The Lord Privy Seal: I have been asked to reply.

Our position on sovereignty over the Falkland Islands is clear; it follows that the answer is no. But we have consistently sought to improve our bilaterial relations with Argentina

President Reagan

41. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister what discussions she has held with President Reagan since his recent meeting with Mr. Gorbachev in Geneva.

The Lord Privy Seal: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 25 November at columns 391-392. I have had no other meeting with President Reagan since the Geneva summit.

Mr. Peter Walker: No meetings have been held between my Department and the Equal Opportunities Commission and none is planned.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those bodies to which his Department makes appointments, showing in each case the total number of appointees and the number who are women.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information as at 2 December 1985 is as follows:

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to evaluate the successful implementation of those parts of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward looking strategies for the advancement of women applicable to his Department; what resources have been allocated to this task; and if he will make a statement.

(2) if he will list for the duration of the miners' dispute (a) the number of people arrested and charged with an offence, (b) the number of people convicted and (c) the number of people acquitted, stating in each case the nature of the offence.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The information requested is not readily available, and I shall publish the information in the Official Report later.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Textile Industry

89. Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what specific steps he has taken to stimulate increased employment in the British textile industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The provision of specific Government aids to the textile and clothing sectors is not permitted under present European community policy. Companies in these sectors can, however, apply for assistance under the Department's national schemes of support and also through its regional schemes aimed at projects safeguarding or creating new jobs.

Extraterritoriality

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ensure that the statement to be made by Mr. David Hall of his Department on Government policy towards United States extraterritoriality on 3 December will reflect the declaration made by the Attorney-General in his letter to the hon. Member for Yeovil in July.

Soft Loan Finance

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria his Department uses to determine whether soft loan finance should be made available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Soft loan facilities under the aid and trade provision will be negotiated where there is a clear preference over aid in the form of grants plus export credits. Individual projects will have to satisfy the criteria of the aid and trade provision and support under a facility agreed with the recipient country.

Manufacturing Industry (Exports)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all those manufacturing industries whose exports in the latest year for which figures are available exceeded £4 billion in value.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Appeals

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the longest time, shortest time and average time it takes for planning inspectors' reports to be determined after the appeal has been heard.

Mr. Tracey: The chief planning inspector's report for 1984 contains statistics for the handling of planning appeals made under section 36 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971. The time taken to reach and issue a decision after an inquiry or site visit by an inspector varies according to the procedure used to determine the appeal. Appeals may be "transferred" for decision by one of the Department's inspectors following a public inquiry or an informal hearing, or on the basis of written representations and a site visit. Or appeals may be "recovered" for decision by the Secretary of State—that is, by Ministers or by officials under the authority of Ministers—following a public inquiry or on the basis of written representations and a site visit. The following were the median times for each type of procedure in 1984:

Transferred section 36 appeals

(i) Written representations (82·2 per cent. of all appeals decided) —site visit to decision letter=four weeks.

(ii) Inquiry cases (11·1 per cent.)
—inquiry to decision letter=five weeks.

(iii) Informal hearings (2·6 per cent.)
—hearing to decision letter=four weeks.

Recovered section 36 appeals

(i) Written representations (1·9 per cent.)
—site visit to receipt of case in decision branch=four weeks.
—receipt in decision branch to decision letter=nine weeks.

(ii) inquiry cases (2·2 per cent.)
—inquiry to receipt of case in decision branch=nine weeks
—receipt in decision branch to decision letter=12 weeks.

Depending on the complexity of the individual case, the longest and shortest times taken at the various stages vary widely around the median time for each procedure. Data in the form requested by my hon. Friend are not readily available.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning appeals were decided between 1 September 1981 and 1 September 1985; and in how many cases the applicants were successful.

Mr. Tracey: Information on planning appeal statistics is published quarterly.

The total number of appeals decided and the number of those allowed between 1 October 1981 and the end of September 1985 can be broken down as follows:

Section 36 appeals	Number decided	Number allowed
October 1981 to September 1982	13,283	4,013
October 1982 to September 1983	11,320	3,706
October 1983 to September 1984	11,429	3,714
October 1984 to September 1985	14,150	5,041

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he began his consideration of the inspector's report on the planning appeal at Birtenshaw farm, Bolton; and on what date he reached a decision.

Mr. Tracey: Consideration of the inspector's report began on 14 March and the decision was issued on 18 July 1985.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many planning appeal cases between 1 September 1981 and 1 September 1985 he did not accept the inspector's report.

Mr. Tracey: In the calendar years 1981-84, 83 appeals under section 36 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 were decided contrary to inspectors' recommendations. There were 14 such decisions in the first six months of 1985.

Nitrates in Water

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Thames water authority has applied to his Department for an easing of the nitrate levels in water set by a recent European Economic Community directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No application has been made by the Thames water authority for a derogation from the maximum nitrate concentration in drinking water set by the EC drinking water directive (80/778).

Housing Policy

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the objectives of his housing policy.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my hon. Friend gave him on 18 November at column 62.

Private Renting

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to facilitate the renting of private property.

Sir George Young: The Government hope to introduce legislation, building on the initiatives already taken in the Housing Act 1980, to encourage the supply of more homes for renting in the private rented sector, but probably not during the lifetime of this Parliament.

Improvement Grants

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to reintroduce 90 per cent. improvement grants for domestic roofs during the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: No. Repair grants up to 90 per cent. are still available where such a rate is justified, namely for those in hardship.

Planning Applications

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to prohibit variations to planning application approvals being determined and authorised by paid officials acting alone under delegated powers.

Mr. Tracey: We have no plans to introduce legislation for this purpose. It is entirely proper for local planning authorities to decide whether and to what extent they delegate to officers decisions about variations to planning permissions.

Webbers Yard, Dartington

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to accelerate a decision by the European Commission with regard to the Webbers Yard, Dartington application for a grant from the European regional development fund for a new road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: Although the final decision on the application rests with the European Commission, my Department, in conjunction with the Department of Trade and Industry, is doing all that it can to ensure a speedy and satisfactory outcome.

Rented Accommodation (Bradford)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to seek to increase accommodation to rent in Bradford; what resources have been allocated to the Housing Corporation for this purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend announced on 20 November a gross provision of £2,532 million for capital investment by local authorities in 1986-87, with a total of £1,465 million available for housing investment programme (HIP) allocations, and a gross total of £685 million for the Housing Corporation's approved development plan. Bradford city council will be notified before Christmas of its HIP allocation for 1986-87. Local authorities have discretion in deciding the content of their capital programmes but we expect them to give priority to renovation of the existing housing stock and, in the case of new build, to concentrate on meeting special needs which cannot be met by the private sector. The breakdown of the Housing Corporation's programme for 1986-87 will be announced after consultation with the corporation, which will then be responsible for making allocations to individual housing associations and projects. Fair rent projects which will provide 643 homes for a total estimated cost of £16.645 million are currently being funded by the Housing Corporation in Bradford.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount of rate support grant paid to each local authority area in England and Wales in each of the years 1978-79 to 1985-86, expressed in constant 1985-86 prices.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today placed in the Library tables showing rate support grant paid to individual English and Welsh local authorities from and including 1981-82 to 1985-86, at constant 1985-86 prices, based on the latest supplementary report for each year. Because of the change in the way rate support grant was paid to different tiers of local authority, figures for earlier years are not available on a comparable basis. Cash figures have been adjusted by the GDP deflator. For 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86, the grant payable may be adjusted in future supplementary reports.

South Africa (Rugby Tour)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will circulate to individual members of the home rugby unions' committees guidelines concerning the Government's policy towards the proposed British Lions' tour of South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: I met the president and secretary of the RFU and made clear the Government's firm opposition towards the scheduled British Lions tour of South Africa. The South African rugby board has now announced that it is withholding the invitation for the tour.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Sector Pay

88. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the success or failure of Her Majesty's Government's guidelines on pay in the public sector.

Mr. MacGregor: Our policy for public sector pay has been and remains that it should reflect the need to recruit, retain and motivate the staff of the calibre required, within what can be afforded.

Family Income

Mr. Squire asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table in the Official Report which sets out for a two-child family on (a) half average earnings, (b) three quarters average earnings, (c) average earnings, (d) one and a half average earnings, (e) twice average earnings, (f) five times average earnings and (g) 10 times average earnings the increase, in net income to be derived from (i) a 1p cut in the standard rate of income tax, (ii) an increase in personal allowance, over and above indexation, which incurred the same cost as a 1p cut in standard rate income tax and (iii) an increase in child benefit which incurred the same cost as a 1p cut in standard rate income tax in 1985-86.

Mr. Moore: A cut of one penny in the basic rate of income tax would cost about £1,200 million in a full year at 1986-87 income levels, assuming indexation of allowances and thresholds as in the autumn statement 1985. The table below illustrates the effects of this reduction on the net income of a married man with two children. It also gives the effects of an increase in all the main personal allowances and an increase in child benefit which would have the same full year cost.

£ per week

*Multiple of average earnings	Increase in net income for married man with two children
	½	¾	1	1½	2	5	10
1p off basic rate	0·37	0·90	1·44	2·50	3·29	3·29	3·29

Child benefit increased by £1·90 per child†	3·80	3·80	3·80	3·80	3·80	3·80	3·80

*Assuming for illustration an increase in average earnings of 7 per cent. between 1985-86 and 1986-87 (paragraph 3.02, autumn statement, 1985).

Personal Allowances

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures showing the rates of child benefit, single person's tax allowance and married man's allowance, at current and at 1979 constant prices, in April of each year since 1979.

Mr. Moore: The information is in the table.

	Child benefit (£ per week per child)		Single person's tax allowance (£ per annum)		Married man's tax allowance (£ per annum)
	Current prices	1979 prices*	Current prices	1979 prices*	Current prices	1979 prices*

* Figures converted to 1979 prices using the movements in the RPI between April of each year.

Family Credit

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the treatment for national accounting purposes of the proposed family credit.

Mr. MacGregor: It is intended that family credit will be classified for national accounting purposes as voted central Government expenditure.

Income Tax Reliefs

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the total cost of income tax reliefs specifically for lone parents, distinguishing between the additional personal allowance, maintenance payments, school fees and other reliefs; and what was the comparable figure in 1970.

Mr. Moore: In 1985-86, the cost of the additional personal allowance for lone parents is expected to be about £150 million. In 1975-76, the earliest year for which a comparable figure is readily available, the cost is estimated to have been about £30 million. There are no other income tax reliefs specifically for lone parents.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Skinner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total level of overseas investment in 1979 and 1984.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Figures for overseas investment can be found in the 1985 edition of the "United Kingdom Balance of Payments" (The Pink Book). Table 8.2 gives United Kingdom private investment overseas, and table 11.1 gives United Kingdom external assets.

South Africa

Mr. Skinner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of direct British investment in South Africa in 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The book value of direct United Kingdom investment in South Africa was £2,826 million at the end of 1981, the most recent date for which figures are available.

Cable and Wireless

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the contribution of his plans for offering shares in Cable and Wireless to Her Majesty's Government's policy on seeking wider public share ownership.

Mr. Moore: 48,796,399 ordinary shares (worth some £286 million at the offer price) are being made available by the Government for sale to members of the public and to employees and pensioners of Cable and Wireless. In the event of heavy demand, a further 5 million shares will be made available as well as any shares not taken up by existing shareholders.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the Government are not taking up their preferential entitlement of 12·8 million new shares in Cable and Wireless and offering this instead to Japan and Canada.

Mr. Moore: The Government are not taking up their preferential entitlement in accordance with their decision to sell their remaining ordinary shares in Cable and Wireless and their general policy of not retaining ordinary shareholdings in privatised companies. The decision to dispose of the new shares in Japan and Canada was a matter for the company.

Mr. Leigh asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement about the Government's privatisation programme.

Mr. Moore: The Government are offering for sale its remaining 102,500,005 ordinary shares in Cable and Wireless in a joint offer with the company which is issuing 43,610,814 new ordinary shares. The offer will close on 11 December 1985. The company is also offering separately 12,812,500 new ordinary shares in Japan and Canada.

All the offered shares have been underwritten. The price has been fixed at £5·87 per share, with £3 payable on application and the balance of £2·87 payable on 7 March 1986. Gross proceeds to the Government will therefore be £602 million.

Depending on the level of demand, up to two thirds of the shares in the joint offer will be made available for the public, Cable and Wireless employees and pensioners, and existing shareholders.

A copy of the prospectus for the offer has been placed in the Library.

Sub-Saharan Africa (Government Debt)

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the amount of outstanding Government debt to countries in sub-Saharan Africa; and if he will give a breakdown by country.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

Adult Training

13. Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Paymaster General when he will next meet the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss the adult training strategy.

Mr. Trippier: I have frequent meetings with the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission and matters relating to the adult training strategy are regularly on the agenda.

29. Mr. Latham asked the Paymaster General whether he will make a statement on Government proposals for adult training or retraining.

Mr. Trippier: Our main objective is to implement the adult training strategy so as to secure and sustain the skills necessary to meet the changing requirements of employers. We have recently written to the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to ask for proposals for re-focussing the commission's own adult training programmes to give a sharper focus on the needs of small businesses, promoting enterprise and self-employment and further developing the potential of open learning.

Labour Statistics

14. Mr. Welsh asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently out of work.

17. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the current level of unemployment.

25. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Paymaster General what is the present level of unemployment.

31. Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General if he will publish the latest figures for unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 10 October 1985 the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 3,277,000.

41. Mr. Hirst asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement about the current trends in unemployment.

Mr. Alan Clark: Unemployment has levelled off since the spring; the seasonally adjusted level has remained broadly unchanged over the past six months.

54. Mr. Ashton asked the Paymaster General how many people are unemployed now; and how many were unemployed in May 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 10 October 1985 the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom, seasonally adjusted excluding school leavers, was 3,175,000. The corresponding figure for May 1979 was 1,184,100.

57. Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General what is his latest estimate of the number of persons classified as unemployed who are actively seeking work.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the spring of 1984, the latest date for which complete returns are available, the labour force survey estimated that there were 2,905,000 people without jobs and actively seeking work in Great Britain.

61. Mr. Nicholls asked the Paymaster General how many more people have come on to the labour market since May 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: Between mid-1979 and mid-1984 the net increase in the civilian labour force in Great Britain is estimated at 390,000.

63. Mr. Charles Wardle asked the Paymaster General what is the proportion of (a) employees in employment and (b) self-employed persons directly and indirectly engaged in the tourist industry.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) on 29 October at columns 425-26.

65. Mr. Chapman asked the Paymaster General what is his latest estimate of the total numbers in employment; and how this figure compares with one year and two years before.

Mr. Alan Clark: In June 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, the size of the employed labour force in Great Britain was estimated to be 23,684,000. This compares with 23,432,000 in June 1984 and 23,038,000 in June 1983. The figures have been adjusted for seasonal variations.

67. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Paymaster General if he will give the change in the number of employees in employment in the north-west region between 1979 and 1985 for (a) all industries and (b) manufacturing industry.

Mr. Alan Clark: Between June 1979 and June 1985 the number of employees in employment in all industries in the north-west region decreased by 307,000; employees in employment in the manufacturing industries decreased by 295,000.

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what is the most recent figure for the number of people who have been unemployed for (a) over three years, (b) over two years and (c) over one year.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. Figures are given showing the number of claimants in the United Kingdom who, on 10 October 1985, had been unemployed for the durations requested.

	Number
Over three years	532,573
Over two years	823,127
Over one year	1,351,857

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General how many people were employed in each travel-to-work area in Lancashire in 1979 and the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is from censuses of employment taken in 1978 and 1981 and is as follows.

As results of the 1978 census are not available for the new travel-to-work areas announced last year, figures are given for the travel-to-work areas as defined before last year's review.

Employees in employment

Thousands

Travel-to-work area	June 1978	September 1981
Accrington	27·6	25·5
Blackburn	67·2	54·4
Blackpool	104·5	101·3
Burnley	45·0	40·1
Lancaster	44·1	44·3

Preston	140·9	140·8
Rossendale	19·2	16·3
Clitheroe	10·8	14·0
Barnoldswick	7·0	6·3

More up-to-date employment figures for travel-to-work areas will become available following the publication of the 1984 census of employment in the spring of 1986.

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General what is the current number of vacancies at jobcentres in (a) Glasgow, (b) Liverpool, (c) Southwark and (d) Sheffield.

Mr. Alan Clark: The numbers of unfilled vacancies (excluding community programme) at jobcentres in the local authority districts requested as at 4 October 1985 are as follows:

	Number
Glasgow	3,155
Liverpool	649
Southwark	703
Sheffield	558

Manufacturing and Production

15. Mr. Caborn asked the Paymaster General how many people were employed in manufacturing and production in 1979; and how many people are employed now.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In September 1979 the number of employees employed in manufacturing and production in Great Britain was 7,843,000. In September 1985 the figure was 5,982,000.

Temporary Employment and Training Schemes

16. Mr. O'Brien asked the Paymaster General what are the numbers of persons in the Normanton constituency on temporary employment or training schemes.

Mr. Alan Clark: Some 11,000 people are being supported, at the latest available date, on our employment and training measures, in the Wakefield travel-to-work area or the geographical areas closest to it. Figures for the Normanton constituency are not available.

Tourism

18. Mr. Butterfill asked the Paymaster General what he is doing to seek to encourage the dispersal of visitors out of the capital and into other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: We are providing £150,000 towards the cost of a new British travel centre in London which the British Tourist Authority with British Rail and other partners hope to open by the start of next season. The BTA will continue, in its many marketing and advertising schemes, to encourage our overseas tourists to visit places outside of London. As announced in the White Paper on airport policy, the Government are putting increased emphasis on regional airports in international negotiations on traffic rights.

37. Sir Peter Blaker asked the Paymaster General what action he intends to take to seek to achieve the objectives set out in "Pleasure, Leisure and Jobs."

Mr. Trippier: Work is continuing on the points for action listed in the report with the aim of agreeing improvements in time for the 1986 tourist season. Good progress has already been achieved on some points. For example, the introduction of the new voluntary hotel classification scheme and the agreement between the British Tourist Authority, British Rail and other partners to set up a new British travel centre in London next year. Many other action points are the responsibility of colleagues in other Departments. My right hon. and noble Friend will chair periodic meetings of colleagues to progress further the objectives of the "Pleasure, Leisure and Jobs" report and to discuss any new obstacles to tourism's development which may emerge. Steps have also been taken to improve co-ordination of Government policies at regional level.

42. Mr. Maclean asked the Paymaster General if he intends to increase the funding of the English Tourist Board.

Mr. Trippier: Yes, but I cannot give a precise amount at this stage. We are increasing the total funding for the British Tourist Authority and English Tourist Board, including section 4, next year by some 20 per cent. to £40 million. Discussions will be held with the boards to decide how the money should be spent.

45. Mr. Ottaway asked the Paymaster General if he will increase the funding of the regional tourist boards.

Mr. Trippier: The English regional tourist boards, which are non-statutory, receive Government funds through the English Tourist Board. The boards' needs will be taken into account when we consider the future level of the ETB's grant-in-aid, an how the additional funding which we have announced for tourism will be apportioned between the ETB and the British Tourist Authority.

47. Mr. Holt asked the Paymaster General how many tourists it is estimated visited England in each of the past five years from Australia and New Zealand.

Mr. Trippier: The figures are as follows:

Tourist visits to England† by Australian and New Zealand residents*

	Australia Thousands	New Zealand Thousands
1980	374	80
1981	298	59
1982	348	66
1983	323	75
1984	441	92

Notes:
* All visits for leisure or business reasons for a period of less than a year.
† Estimates covering tourists visiting the United Kingdom who spent all or part of their visit in England.

48. Mr. Lewis Stevens asked the Paymaster General how many businesses have been assisted by funding through section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act.

Mr. Trippier: Since the inception of the scheme, the English Tourist Board, which is responsible for administering the section 4 scheme in England, has approved assistance for 3,175 projects, of which nearly half have been approved since the scheme was extended beyond the assisted areas in August 1982. The ETB estimates that almost all of the projects assisted were for private sector businesses. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales are responsible for section 4 assistance for projects in their respective countries.

82. Mr. John Townend asked the Paymaster General if he intends to reduce bureaucratic burdens which constrain small firms connected with tourism.

Mr. Trippier: The White Paper "Lifting the Burden" (Cmnd. 9571) indicated our intention to reduce further the burdens of business, particularly on small firms including those involved in tourism. The report "Pleasure, Leisure and Jobs—the Business of Tourism" signalled our firm intention to remove unnecessary obstacles to the further development of tourism, with an emphasis on action to come into effect in the 1986 tourist season.

Wages Councils

19. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Paymaster General how many jobs he expects will be created as a result of the proposed reforms of the wages councils.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is not possible to give a precise figure for the increased employment which we believe will be encouraged by the reforms.

69. Mr. Eastham asked the Paymaster General how many workers are currently covered by wages councils; and what proportion of them are women.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is estimated that 2·75 million people work in jobs covered by wages councils: about 80 per cent. are female.

Minimum Wage Rates

20. Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied with the operation of the safeguards seeking to ensure that jobs advertised in jobcentres pay wages council minimum rates.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Revised checking procedures were introduced last year to minimise the chances of jobs which breach regulations being displayed in jobcentres.

30. Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General how many countries are signatory to the International Labour Organisation convention No. 26 on minimum rates of pay.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Ninety nine countries are signatory to International Labour Organisation convention No. 26.

Community Programme

21. Dr. Godman asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the progress of the community programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: 159,000 jobs are currently provided and I am pleased with progress towards the target of 230,000 places by June 1986.

24. Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General what recent representations he has received about the work of the community programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: We have received a number of representations from hon. Members and the general public which have stressed the programme's value for long-term unemployed people and local communities, and suggested possible improvements.

46. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Paymaster General whether he will consider reverting to the former conditions for qualification for entry to the community programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have no present plans to do so.

85. Mr. Patrick McNair-Wilson asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to attempts by political parties to use the community programme for party advantage; and if he is satisfied that safeguards exist to prevent this from happening in the future.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is an essential condition of funding under the community programme that projects must not involve political activity, have political objectives, or provide for or encourage any action in support of a political party. Any breach can lead to termination of contract, and checks on compliance are undertaken as a part of normal monitoring arrangements.

Mr. Madden asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received expressing concern over recent regulations requiring those applying for community programme posts to be in receipt of benefit payment; how many of these representations relate to women who wish to return to work after raising a family; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: There have been no changes in the priorities for entry to the community programme since October 1984.

Youth Training Scheme

22. Mr. Burt asked the Paymaster General how many youngsters have now been through the youth training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

56. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Paymaster General by what date he expects 1 million young people to have taken part in the youth training scheme.

74. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the number of young people who have participated in the youth training scheme.

Mr. Trippier: More than 1 million young people have entered the youth training scheme since it started in April 1983.

The success of the scheme is due in large measure to the active involvement of all the parties who have contributed much in the past two and a half years—large and small companies, trade unions, local authorities, voluntary organisations, the education and careers services, the Manpower Services Commission and, most importantly, young people themselves. This co-operative effort provides a firm foundation for the expansion and development of YTS, to provide two years' training and the opportunity to obtain a vocational qualification, from next April.

32. Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General when he will next meet the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss the youth training scheme.

Mr. Trippier: I frequently discuss the progress and development of the youth training scheme with the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission.

33. Mr. Wood asked the Paymaster General how many youngsters will be able to participate in the youth training scheme each year after April 1986.

Mr. Trippier: We estimate that around 360,000 young people will enter the youth training scheme in 1986-87, and a similar number in 1987-88. It is too early to make forecasts for subsequent years.

35. Mr. Strang asked the Paymaster General how far the plans for a two-year youth training scheme are advanced; and if he will make a statement.

52. Mr. James Lamond asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied with the progress towards development of the two-year youth training scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Details of the main funding and administration arrangements of the new two-year youth training scheme, which is to commence next April, have been agreed and announced, and Manpower Services Commission staff are currently discussing with potential training providers how they might be involved in the new scheme. I am satisfied with progress so far.

This is a major initiative, which will benefit employers and young people themselves. It is in everyone's interest that it succeeds.

43. Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General what advice he will give to local authorities which run Mode B youth training schemes with voluntary organisations on how they should cover the cash shortfall that will result from the proposed changes in the youth training scheme.

Mr. Trippier: The financial arangements for the new youth training scheme provide a good basis for local authorities and voluntary organisations taking out new contracts. The cirumstances of individual providers can differ substantially. Providers in need of advice should discuss their calculations with the Manpower Services Commission's area office.

Small Firms

23. Mr. Lord asked the Paymaster General if he will introduce legislation to compel large firms to speed up the payment of small firms' bills.

59. Mr. Cash asked the Paymaster General if he will introduce legislation to penalise larger businesses which do not pay the accounts of small businesses within a reasonable time.

Mr. Trippier: We are not at present planning legislation on the problem of delayed payment of bills to small firms.

I am currently discussing with industry representative organisations the possibility of promoting good payment practices through cooperation rather than coercion. We expect to produce practical guidance on the subject for both customers and suppliers.

55. Mr. Chope asked the Paymaster General what is the trend in venture capital investment in small businesses.

Mr. Trippier: There has been significant growth in venture capital investment in the United Kingdom during the last five years. A survey by the United Kingdom Venture Capital Report has shown that in 1984 the aggregate amount invested in United Kingdom companies by venture capital organisations was £228 million. This compares with £110 million and £166 million in 1982 and 1983 respectively. Industry sources indicate that some 26·6 per cent. of the amount invested in 1984 supported start-ups or other early stage financings. In addition, direct investment by individuals under the business expansion scheme is providing significant amounts of equity finance for small companies.

60. Mr. Forth asked the Paymaster General what progress he has made in reducing bureaucratic burdens on small firms.

Mr. Trippier: Considerable progress has been made by a number of Departments towards reducing the burden on business, particularly small firms, of complying with regulations. The White Paper "Lifting the Burden" (Cmnd. 9571) which was published in July recorded the Government's achievements in this area to date and proposed a wide range of further measures to this end which are being actively followed up. We intend to publish a second White Paper on deregulation in the spring.

84. Mr. Norris asked the Paymaster General how he intends to encourage local enterprise agencies to raise venture capital for small firms.

Mr. Trippier: Local enterprise agencies are well placed to identify sources of equity finance for small firms and to bring firms and potential investors together. My Department, in conjunction with the Department of Trade and Industry, recently issued guidance notes to those agencies considering activities of this kind. My Department has also now issued a leaflet publicising the potential benefits of the business expansion scheme to small firms and investors, which refers to local enterprise agencies as possible contacts. In my discussions with enterprise agencies I shall encourage them to take an active role in this area.

Shipbuilding Industry (Redundancies)

26. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Paymaster General what information he has regarding the average length of time members of the work force made redundant from the shipbuilding industry on Tyneside take to find alternative employment; and what proportion have yet to find alternative work.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information on the length of time people made redundant take to find alternative employment is not collected.

Job Vacancies

27. Mr. Wallace asked the Paymaster General what travel-to-work areas have more vacancies than unemployed according to the latest available figures.

Mr. Alan Clark: The only available data on vacancies relate to vacancies notified to MSC jobcentres. The analysis requested is therefore not available.

Job Start Assistance Scheme

28. Mr. Dykes asked the Paymaster General if he has yet commenced the briefing of officials in jobcentres to enable them to explain the new job start assistance scheme to members of the public.

Mr. Alan Clark: Briefing of the jobcentre staff in the pilot areas has already begun. The pilot schemes will begin to operate on 6 January 1986.

Skill Shortages

34. Mr. Livsey asked the Paymaster General what steps he is taking to remedy the shortage of skilled labour in parts of the job market.

Mr. Trippier: There is recent evidence that some skills are in short supply in a limited number of sectors and geographical areas. Whilst it is mainly for employers to take action to meet their labour requirements, the Manpower Services Commission continues to monitor vacancies and is taking a number of steps to help the labour market operate more effectively. It is encouraging better mobility of labour through a national bank of vacancies accessible in jobcentres and providing help for unemployed people to travel to interviews and move home to take up work. Employers and individuals are benefiting through the adult training strategy, which is focusing support on skills in most demand in local and national economies.

Basildon

36. Mr. Amess asked the Paymaster General if he will list the number of people in Basildon employed in each of the last five years.

Mr. Alan Clark: Employment statistics for local areas are obtained from censuses of employment taken triennially since 1978. The latest available figures from the 1981 census of employment show that just over 52,000 people were employed in Basildon at that time, compared with a total of nearly 46,000 in 1978.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

38. Mr. Galley asked the Paymaster General how many businesses have been established as a result of the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Up to 31 October 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, 112,191 people have joined the enterprise allowance scheme. The number of individual businesses assisted is lower than this because some of the businesses are partnerships, co-operatives or limited companies involving more than one enterprise allowance recipient.

73. Mr. Carttiss asked the Paymaster General if he will take steps to improve the access to training for those on the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Both private and public sector training, including the full range of provision under the Manpower Services Commission's training for enterprise programme is available. We have, however, asked the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to take particular account of the needs of EAS participants in developing proposals for focusing adult training still more sharply on the needs of small firms and on promoting enterprise and self-employment.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

39. Mr. Batiste asked the Paymaster General how many local education authorities are now participating in the technical and vocational education initiative.

Mr. Trippier: There are 73 authorities running technical and vocational education initiative programmes in Great Britain at present. A further 25 authorities have put in proposals which are currently under discussion.

Open Tech Programme

40. Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Paymaster General when he will next meet the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss the development of the Open Tech programme.

Mr. Trippier: I regularly discuss training matters with the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission. I expect to receive and discuss the commission's proposals for future support for open learning, including Open Tech, following the conclusion of the current consultation exercise.

44. Mrs. McCurley asked the Paymaster General what assessment he has made of the outcome of the Open Tech programme and of its benefits to small firms.

Mr. Trippier: The Manpower Services Commission's Open Tech programme has funded over 140 projects which have already helped more than 20,000 people to improve their skills through open learning. Material is being produced to assist the owner-managers of small businesses in a variety of management topics and specialist material already available in the tourism and transport sectors, both of which contain a high proportion of small firms, has been well-received. The commission is reviewing how the future needs of small businesses for open learning material might be best met, but the final outcomes of the Open Tech programme will not be known for some time yet.

Trade Unions (Ballots)

49. Mr. Alton asked the Paymaster General how many trades unions have so far accepted moneys from the Government to pay for political levy ballots.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am informed by the certification officer that no payments have yet been made to unions in respect of political fund review ballots, although several unions have held ballots for which they could seek reimbursement under the ballot funding scheme.

50. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Paymaster General how many pre-strike ballots have taken place under the provisions of the Trade Union Act 1984.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are aware of over 80 pre-strike ballots believed to comply with the provisions of the Trade Union Act 1984, but there will have been other ballots which the Department does not know about. One union in particular has been reported as having held over 130 pre-strike ballots since the provisions came into force.

66. Mr. Fatchett asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied with the level of turnout in the political fund ballots held under the provisions of the Trade Union Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are encouraged by the generally high degree of participation in the recent round of political fund review ballots. This demonstrates how much trade union members appreciate the opportunity—in many cases the first they have had in 70 years—to express an opinion on the matter. I am only sorry that many unions have obscured the choice by playing down their links with a political party, by not revealing how much of their members political contributions goes straight in party affiliation fees and by exaggerating the circumstances in which a fund is needed.

Job Start Allowance

51. Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General, in the five English pilot areas for the job start allowance, how many persons have been registered unemployed for 12 months or more.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The numbers of claimants who had been unemployed for over 12 months on 10 October 1985 in job start allowance pilot areas are as follows. Figures are given for local authority districts, except for Billingham and Huddersfield, where they relate to those groups of electoral wards which closely correspond to the pilot areas:

	Number
Billingham	1,565
Crawley and Horsham	1,119
Huddersfield	4,228
London Borough of Ealing	4,822
Plymouth	5,836
Preston	4,071
Stoke-on-Trent	6,817

Job Losses (Liverpool)

53. Mr. Loyden asked the Paymaster General if he will list the number of jobs lost in the Liverpool travel-to-work area in manufacturing, service industries, food and drink, transport, public service, local authority, docks, ship building and repair, and distributive trades for the years 1979 to November 1985, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job losses is not available from the Department's statistics. Net changes in employment can be given, but, for areas smaller than regions, only for those dates when censuses of employment are taken. The available information for the Liverpool travel-to-work area is for the period from June 1979 to September 1981 and is as follows.

The Department's employment statistics are analysed according to the standard industrial classification, which does not separately distinguish public services or local authorities or separately distinguish docks from port and inland water transport. Comprehensive manpower figures for all employees in local authorities in England, Wales and Scotland are published quarterly in table 1.7 of the labour market data section of Employment Gazette, copies of which are available in the Library. This information is not available for travel-to-work areas.

Standard Industrial Classification 1968 Order or Minimum List Heading (MLH)	Net changes in the numbers of employees in employment June 1978 to September 1981 (thousands)
Manufacturing industries (Orders III to XIX)	−32·8
Service industries (Orders XXII to XXVII)	−20·1
Food and drink (Order III excluding MLH 240, Tobacco)	−4·4
Transport (Order XXII excluding MLH 708, Postal services and telecommunications)	−9·0
Port and inland water transport (MLH 706)	−3·5
Shipbuilding and marine engineering (Order X)	−1·0
Distributive trades (Order XXII)	−6·1

As results of the 1978 census of employment are not available for the new travel-to-work areas announced last year, information is given for the travel-to-work area as defined before last year's review.

Local Enterprise Agencies

58. Mr. Hanley asked the Paymaster General how many local enterprise agencies have organised courses for management training.

Mr. Trippier: My Department maintains no records on this. However, the latest directory of enterprise agencies, produced by Business in the Community, indicates that at least 122 local enterprise agencies provide, or give access to, training for business men.

62. Mr. Bellingham asked the Paymaster General how many local enterprise agencies are in existence.

Mr. Trippier: There are currently 308 enterprise agencies in the United Kingdom, of which 222 meet the requirements of the Finance Act 1982, which allows private sector sponsors tax relief on their contributions to such bodies.

Earnings

Mr. Hayes asked the Paymaster General what has been the underlying increase in average earnings over the last year.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest estimates for the year to September 1985 are given in table 5.1 of the November 1985 issue of Employment Gazette, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what percentage of (a) males and (b) females under 18 years of age earns less than £100 per week at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest available information relates to full-time employees working a full week in April 1985. The percentages earning less than £100 per week are published, for males in table 10, and for females in table 11 of "New Earnings Survey 1985", part A. A copy is in the Library.

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what percentage of female workers employed as (a) retail checkout operators, (b) textile sewing machinists and (c) receptionists earn less than £100 per week at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest available information relates to full-time females on adult rates working a full week in April 1985 and is published in table 9 of "New Earnings Survey 1985", part A, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what percentage of male workers employed as (a) shop assistants and (b) general farm workers earn less than £100 per week.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest available information relates to full-time males on adult rates working a full week in April 1985 and is published in table 8 of "New Earnings Survey 1985", part A, a copy of which is in the Library.

Sunday Trading

68. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Paymaster General if he has made any assessment of the effect the Government proposals on Sunday trading will have on wages and conditions throughout industry.

Mr. Trippier: I doubt whether the Government's proposals to deregulate Sunday trading will significantly affect wages and conditions of employment throughout industry. Clearly a greater proportion of retail workers would be working on a Sunday and, therefore, average earnings in the retail industry would be likely to rise.

Wages Inspections

70. Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General how many wages inspections have taken place so far in the current year; and how many prosecutions there have been as a result of such inspections.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Up to 31 October 1985 the pay of workers at 37,884 establishments had been checked by the wages inspectorate. Two prosecutions resulted.

New Businesses

71. Mr. Spencer asked the Paymaster General what initiatives his Department is taking to encourage people to set up new businesses.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 27 November, at column 594, to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours).

75. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General what has been the net increase in the number of new businesses since 1980.

Mr. Trippier: The net increase in the number of businesses between 1980 and 1984 is estimated to have been of the order of 140,000. Detailed figures were published in an article in the 23 August 1985 edition of British Business, a copy of which is in the Library. As the article explains, the estimate is subject to revision as more information is received.

Falkland Islands

72. Mr. Ewing asked the Paymaster General if he will introduce legislation to bring within the remit of industrial appeal tribunals appeals against unfair dismissal arising from employment on Government contracts in the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. It would not be appropriate to extend British legislation on unfair dismissal in this way. Any such legislation would be for the Falkland Islands Government.

Manufacturing Industry

76. Mr. Litherland asked the Paymaster General how many people were employed in manufacturing in 1979; and how many are employed now.

Mr. Alan Clark: In September 1979 there were an estimated 7,102,000 employees in employment in manufacturing industries in Great Britain. In September 1985, the latest available date for which estimates are available, the figure was 5,369,000. The estimates have been adjusted for seasonal variation.

Work-related Further Education

77. Mr. Sackville asked the Paymaster General what extra resources have been made available to improve the quality of work-related non-advanced further education.

Mr. Trippier: It is for local authorities to decide what resources are directed to work-related NAFE within the overall resources available to them. However, the Government's expenditure plans for 1986-87 should enable authorities generally to respond to the growing demand for NAFE provision of all kinds. Provided authorities contain costs and take advantage of the scope for efficiency savings they should be able to redeploy resources to improve the quality of the service. The transfer of a proportion of funds to MSC for work-related NAFE (£110 million in 1986-87) is designed to help ensure that work-related provision is provided cost effectively and in response to labour market needs.

West Midlands

78. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Paymaster General if he will indicate those job sectors in the west midlands where the greatest numbers of vacancies have been taken up.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following tables show, for the latest available months, those occupations and industries in the west midlands where the greatest number of vacancies notified to jobcentres have been filled.

Vacancies filled by Occupation: West Midlands, September 1985

Occupation	Total Vacancies Filled

Overtime

79. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the level of overtime currently being worked.

Mr. Alan Clark: Overtime working by operatives in manufacturing industries in Great Britain was 12·35 million hours a week in September (Seasonally Adjusted). Overtime has remained around 12 million hours a week since Februay 1985 (discounting the April figure which was affected by Easter); this represents the highest level since mid-1980.

Registered Unemployed Persons

80. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Paymaster General how many of those counted as unemployed are registered at jobcentres.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information on the numbers of unemployed claimants registered at jobcentres is not available. Statistics of those registered at jobcentres do not distinguish unemployed claimants from people seeking a change of employment and others who are not claimants at unemployment benefit offices. Also, many jobseekers make use of the self-service facilities at jobcentres but do not register.

Computers and Microprocessors

81. Mr. Duffy asked the Paymaster General how many jobs computing and microprocessor related activities account for in South Yorkshire; and how this compares with the national average, expressed as a percentage.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest available figures from the 1981 census of employment showed that just over 700 people were employed in South Yorkshire in industries associated with computing and microprocessor related activities which have, for the purposes of this question, been taken as office machinery (activity heading 3301), electronic data processing equipment (3302), telegraph and telephone apparatus and equipment (3441), electrical instruments and control systems (3442), radio and electronic capital goods (3443), gramaphome records and pre-recorded tapes (3452), active components and electronic sub-assemblies (3453), and electronic consumer goods and other electrical equipment (3454). This represents 0·2 per cent. of the 1981 figure of just over 376,000 employed in industries to this type in Great Britain.

Strikes (Lost Working Days)

83. Mr. Knowles asked the Paymaster General how many working days have been lost through strike action so far this year; and how this compares with previous years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of working days lost through stoppages of work due to industrial disputes during the 10 months to October 1985 is provisionally estimated as 6 million. This compares with 22 million during the corresponding period last year and a 10-year average of 9·7 million days lost for the period January to October 1975 to 1984.

Hairdressing

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what is the average minimum wage for adult hairdressers; and what percentage of this wage is earned by 16 to 20-year-olds working in the hairdressing trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: Details of the minimum weekly wage rates of adult operative hairdressers established in the Hairdressing Undertakings Wages Council (Great Britain) Wages Order for 8 April 1985 are given on page 189 of the Department's publication, "Time Rates of Wages and Hours of Work", a copy of which is in the Library. The publication also gives similar details relating to young workers.

Part-time Workers

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what was the total of (a) male and (b) female part-time workers in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and to the nearest available date in 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: Male part-time workers are not separately identified in the Department's statistics, but for the period June 1979 to June 1985 (the latest date for which figures are available) the estimated numbers of female part-time employees in employment are as follows:

June of each year	Number of part-time female employees in employment
1979	3,869,800
1980	3,940,600
1981	3,816,800
1982	3,861,200
1983	3,956,400
1984	4,161,200
1985	4,344,300

Motor Industry

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General how many persons were employed in the motor vehicle industry in 1980 and to the nearest available date in 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: The number of employees in Great Britain employed in the motor vehicles and parts industry in September 1980 was 412,000. In September 1985 (the latest date for which figures are available) the number was 279,000.

Textile and Clothing Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently employed in each region in the textile and clothing industry.

Mr. Alan Clark: Regional estimates of employees in employment in the textile and clothing industries are available for census of employment dates only. The numbers in September 1981 are as follows:

Employees employed in the textile and clothing industries in September 1981*

	Number
South East	72,000
Greater London (included in South East)	43,900
East Anglia	6,900
South West	16,400
West Midlands	26,800
East Midlands	108,700
Yorkshire and Humberside	87,900
North West	100,600
North	26,600
Wales	14,100
Scotland	66,300

*Class 43 and Groups 453, 455 and 456 of the Standard Industrial Classification.

Performing Arts (New Jobs)

Sir David Price asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the Arts Council's estimate that 600 new jobs, in the performing arts sector, could be created with an extra investment of some £5 million, and the Arts Council figure that the new costs to the public sector borrowing requirement would be £2,070 per annum per job.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is most unlikely that the public sector borrowing requirement cost per person removed from the unemployment count by investment in arts would be as low as £2,070 per annum.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General how many guarantees under the small firms loan guarantee scheme have been called in since 1980.

Mr. Trippier: At 30 November 1985, 4,950 guarantees had been called under the loan guarantee scheme since its inception in 1981.

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General what investigations are carried out when a guarantee under the small firms loan guarantee scheme is called in.

Mr. Trippier: A claim under a guarantee is paid when the lender formally notifies my Department that the borrower has defaulted on the terms of the loan. My Department does not investigate the circumstances of an individual default.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

ADAS

Mr. Wigley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many persons were employed by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service at each of its centres in Wales, respectively, at the latest time for which these figures are available; and how these figures compare with similar ones five years earlier.

Mrs. Fenner: The distribution and number of ADAS staff in post in Wales on 1 November 1980 and 1985, is set out below:

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide figures for the present year and estimates for the next two years to show levels of funding, in constant terms, and staffing of the Government's Agricultural Development and Advisory Service.

Mr. Jopling: The total cost of ADAS, including direct costs and an attributed share of general Ministry overheads and net of receipts, is expected to be about £142 million in 1985-86 and in constant terms, to be reduced by about £4 million in 1986-87 and by a further £20 million in 1987-88. The total staff of ADAS at 1 April 1985 was 4,786, and is expected to fall by about 500 by the spring of 1987 as a result of the measures which I announced on 11 October and 7 November.

SCOTLAND

Children in Care

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many children were received into care annually over the most recent three-year period for which statistics are available in each regional and island area.

(2) how many children were received into care under section 15 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 annually over the most recent three-year period for which statistics are available in each regional and island area;

Mr. John MacKay: The table shows the information for all regions and island areas except Strathclyde, for which no information is available, for the three years ending 31 March 1984.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children were dealt with by children's hearings annually over the most recent three-year period for which statistics are available giving a breakdown by age, under or over 12 years and the outcome of hearing in terms of the following categories: (a) referral discharge, (b) section 44(1)(a) supervision order, with parents or close relatives, (c) section 44(1)(a) supervision order, with foster parents, (d) section 44(1)(b) supervision order, including type of residential establishment and (e) supervision order terminated, in each regional and island area.

Mr. John MacKay: The figures given relate to the number of referrals to children's hearings in each calendar year. A child may be referred more than once in any one year.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children were removed into care annually under place of safety orders over the most recent three-year period for which statistics are available, in each regional and island area.

Mr. John MacKay: The numbers of place of safety orders issued in the calendar years are given in the following table. A few children may be subject to more than one order.

Library Service Book Fund

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to (a) the average expenditure by all Scottish local authorities on their library service book funds and (b) the expenditure by Glasgow district council on its library service book fund in (i) 1978-79 and (ii) the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will express these sums at constant prices.

Mr. Ancram: Information on library service book funds is not available centrally.

Orovite

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why the drug Orovite has been withdrawn from National Health Service prescriptions in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: Orovite vitamin products are no longer available at NHS expense because the expert medical panel which drew up the selected list considered that it was clinically unnecessary to include them on the list. A wide range of vitamin preparations is still available on NHS prescription.

Certificate of Education

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the proportion of B passes in the awards made in 1985, 1984, 1983 and 1982 in the Scottish certificate of education higher grade examination.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is as follows:

	Higher grade presentations (all candidates, all subjects)	Band B awards (post appeals)	Per cent. achieving Band B
1985	168,309	36,791	21·9

* Source: Scottish Examination Board annual reports for 1982, 1983 and 1984 (1985 figures also from the board but are not yet published).

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make a statement regarding the possibility of candidates having a direct right to appeal to the Scottish Examination Board against failure in Scottish certificate of education examinations.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Scottish Examination Board will decide the appeals arrangements to operate in 1986 in the new year, in the light of the implications of the boycott by the Educational Institute of Scotland of examination procedures. The question of allowing candidates or their parents to apply directly to the board for a remarking of scripts will be one of the points for decision at that time.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how many candidates were presented for (a) higher and (b) ordinary grade Scottish certificate of education examinations in 1985; and what was the pass rate for the following subjects (a) music, (b) history, (c) mathematics, (d) English, (e) French, (f) biology and (g) secretarial studies.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is in the following tables:

Scottish Examination Board

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the present membership of the Scottish Examination Board; what are their terms of office; how many members of the board he directly appoints; and what is the professional background of those members.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The present membership of the board is listed in the board's annual report for 1984 a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library. The list indicates the professional backgrounds of the chairman and the 37 members who are all appointed by the Secretary of State, 32 of them on the nomination of bodies regarded as representing certain educational interests, as specified in the Scottish Examination Board regulations 1981 (SI 1981/1562). The chairman and board members are appointed for a four-year term of office and they are unpaid.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff are employed by the Scottish Examination Board; what are the comparable figures for the last six years; and how many part-time examiners have been employed over that period.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Table 1 gives the number of members of central examining teams and the number of visiting examiners employed by the board in the years from 1980 — the earliest year for which figures are readily available—to 1985:

TABLE 1

Year	Total number of presentations	Members of SEB central examining teams	Visiting examiners
1985	614,317	432	*673
1984	631,734	447	832
1983	652,195	428	833
1982	657,412	422	769
1980	613,822	415	621

* The drop from 1984 is explained by the withdrawal of a number of visiting examiners particularly in CSYS biology and chemistry and ordinary grade home economics (food and nutrition). In home economics the remaining examiners covered all presenting centres by undertaking more visits each. In CSYS biology and chemistry, the face-to-face interviews with the candidates on their projects were made optional.

Table 2 gives the Board's staffing figures for 1985 in numbers of employees and full-time equivalents (ie employee years). Comparable information for 1983 and 1984 appears on page 37 if the board's annual report for 1984 and for 1981 and 1982 on page 32 of the board's annual report for 1982. Copies of both reports are in the House of Commons Library. Figures for earlier years are not available.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in the last 12 months he has met the chairman and director of Scottish Examination Board.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has not himself met the chairman and director of the Scottish Examination Board over the last 12 months but I have done so on two occasions, once on 7 February 1985 and once on 20 September.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amount of rate support grant paid to each local authority area in Scotland in each of the years 1978-79 to 1985-86, expressed in constant 1985-86 prices.

Mr. Ancram: I shall write to the right hon. Member.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the offer made by six neutral states to monitor the verification of a moratorium on underground nuclear tests.

Mr. Renton: The offer was not directed to the United Kingdom as it was contained in the letter from the six nations to the United States and the Soviet Union before the Geneva summit. We doubt that, even with the assistance offered, a testing moratorium would be adequately verifiable; but third parties could have a role to play in establishing adequate verification arrangements for a comprehensive test ban and we hope that those of the six nations represented at the Geneva conference on disarmament will pursue their ideas there.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to secure a resumption of negotiations on a complete test ban treaty.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) on 25 November at column 418.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government plan to make use of the information service on nuclear testing sponsored by the Swedish Foreign Office.

Mr. Renton: We are not aware of such a service.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals have been made by the Soviet Union in respect of verification of a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Renton: Verification issues had not been resolved when the trilateral negotiations between the United States, the Soviet Union and the United Kingdom on a CTB were suspended in 1980. Since then, the Soviet Union has proposed, in a United Nations general assembly resolution of 1982, basic provisions for a CTB treaty, including verification by national technical means and other, unspecified, international measures.

European Economic and Social Committee

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the appointed United Kingdom representatives in groups I, II and III for the European economic and social committee; which body has nominated each representative; and when their term of office expires.

Mr. Rifkind: The British members of the economic and social committee are as follows:

Group I Members

Mr. M. T. Fuller, OBE, DSC—Engineering Employers Federation.
Mr. K. M. Tamlin—Mail Order Traders' Association.
Mr. F. S. Law, CBE—National Freight Co. plc.

Mr. F. F. Jarvis—National Union of Teachers.
Mr. T. Jenkins—TUC International Department.
Mr. J. F. Milne—Scottish Trades Union Congress.
Mrs. A. Maddocks, OBE — National and Local Government Officers Association.
Mr. A. R. Smith—National Union of Tailors and Garment Workers.
Mr. L. J. Smith, OBE—Transport and General Workers Union.

Group III Members

Professor W. Elkan—Brunel University.
Mrs. M. Quigley—Northern Ireland.
Mr. E. B. Roycroft — Social Services, Newcastle upon Tyne.

Mr. M. P. Strauss—National Farmers' Union.
Mrs. A. Williams, MBE — National Confederation of Consumer Groups.

The current term of office of the Committee's members expires in mid-1986.

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the attendance record of each of the United Kingdom representatives to the European economic and social committee during the past 12 months.

Mr. Rifkind: Details of members' attendance records are not made public by the committee.

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total expenses claimed by each United Kingdom representative to the European economic and social committee during the past year.

Mr. Rifkind: Members of the economic and social committee are eligible for travel costs—up to club class for air fares—for travel to meetings of the committee. In addition, they are eligible for a flat rate allowance of 3,600 Belgian francs — about £45 — for each day of attendance at meetings, and an allowance for travel time, which may not overlap with meeting time, calculated according to the length of journey. Details of expenses claimed by individual members are not made available by the ESC secretariat.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Tests (Cancer)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Defence, in the light of the statement in his Department's publication D/DSC3/5/810 of 20 March 1984 that the normal cancer rate in men is about 25 per cent., what percentage of military personnel are at present in this category.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The study currently being undertaken by the National Radiological Protection Board will compare mortality statistics and cancer registrations for all known participants with those for a matched control group of non-participants. I would refer the hon. Gentleman to my answers to his questions on 22 November 1985, at column 575.

Privatisation

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those aspects or features of the work of his Department's research establishments which have been subjected to privatisation.

Mr. Lee: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to the provision of certain intramural services at MOD research establishments by contractors rather than civil servants. Contracting-out in this sense has taken place for various establishment support services, including since 1 January 1980

—accommodation and workshop cleaning —equipment maintenance
—air traffic control
—operation and maintenance of range facilities

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what financial savings have been made by privatisation in his Department's research establishments;

(2) what evidence there is that privatisation in his Department's research establishments has resulted in greater cost-effectiveness in appropriate budgets.

Mr. Lee: Taking 1 January 1980 as the baseline, and assuming that the financial savings estimated to accrue at the time of going to contract have remained constant, we estimate that contracting-out of support services at the research establishments has resulted in cumulative savings totalling some £3 million over the six-year period.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence what reductions have taken place in Ministry of Defence employment in his Department's research establishments as a result of privatisation.

Mr. Lee: Since 1 January 1980 the equivalent of some 600 posts at the research establishments have been removed as the result of contracting-out of support services.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence if there has been a net job loss or gain as a result of privatisation in his Department's research establishments.

Mr. Lee: It is not possible to answer this question with any precision. Contracting-out covers the provision of a service and it is for individual contractors to decide how many posts are necessary to achieve this. In general, however, we find that contractors employ rather fewer staff to perform a given task than the numbers of civil servants previously employed.

Global Warming

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much money the Government have spent in the last 12 months on research into global warming caused by increased levels of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere; and how much they expect to spend in the next 12 months on research into global warming.

Mr. Lee: The costs attributed to research on the global warming within the Meteorological Office research programme for 1984-85 are approximately £90,000. It is expected that expenditure on this item will continue at about the present level.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what measures Her Majesty's Government are taking in co-operation with other Governments in investigating the global warming phenomenon.

Mr. Lee: The Meteorological Office is playing a full part in international efforts to investigate climatic changes that might be caused by increased "greenhouse gas" concentrations, In addition to providing independent estimates of the effects, its scientists have been closely involved in the United States Department of Energy's "state-of-art" assessment of the carbon dioxide issue, due to be published soon, and it participated last month in an international conference at Villach, Austria, which prepared a statement for the guidance of Governments on the global warming. I have placed a copy of this statement in the Library.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what contingency plans the Government have made in anticipation of the majority scientific opinion that world temperatures will rise by at least 2° by 2050.

Mr. Lee: Despite general agreement on the possibility of a warming, there is considerable scientific uncertainty as to its magnitude. Until the present disparities between independent estimates have been reduced substantially, or there are observations which demonstrate that the predicted warming is beginning to take place, contingency planning would be premature.

Seismological Research

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the budget of his Department on seismological research; and how this compares with 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It would not be in the national interest to reveal details of the defence budget devoted to seismological research.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the estimated value of the capital assets of Rosyth royal naval dockyard;

(2) what is the estimated value of the capital assets of Devonport dockyard;

(3) what is the estimated value of the land in his Department's ownership at Devonport dockyard;

(4) what is the estimated value of the land in Rosyth royal naval dockyard.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 25 November 1985, at columns 513-14.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to protect the pension rights of royal naval dockyard employees following privatisation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The consultative document "The Future of the Royal Dockyards" set out proposals for the pensions arrangements for dockyard employees who transfer out of the Civil Service into the operating companies. These employees cannot remain in the principal Civil Service pension scheme and a new scheme is therefore being devised which will provide comparable benefits, including index-linking. We shall ensure that this "transferred" scheme, governed by a trust deed and managed by independent trustees, will be secure. It will be funded by an initial transfer payment in respect of employees' previous Crown service, and by future employer-employee contributions. Staff will be able to choose whether to preserve their accrued pension rights in the PCSPS, or to transfer them to the "transferred" scheme, or to a new entrants scheme which would be established for those recruited into the dockyards after vesting day.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent Royal Navy personnel are involved in refitting ships in Rosyth and Devonport; and at what cost.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The extent to which Royal Navy personnel are involved in a refit varies considerably with the type and complexity of refit and the class of ship. The pay and allowances of these personnel are not recorded separately.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what were the last five ships that had major refits completed at Rosyth and Devonport; and what was the cost and time of refit for each of the ships.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information requested on the last five ships for which costs are available is as follows:

Her Majesty's ships	Dockyard	Production costs £ million	Duration of refit
Hubberston	Rosyth	6·9	58 weeks
Scylla	Devonport	72·1	214 weeks
Resolution	Rosyth	113·9	106 weeks
Sovereign	Devonport	19·2	137 weeks
Iveston	Rosyth	6·1	67 weeks

Chief Executive, Royal Dockyards

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report a table for the years 1979 to 1985 showing separately by location and distinguishing civilians from naval staff the number of employees falling within the control of the chief executive, royal dockyards.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 29 November 1985, c. 704]: The figures are as follows:

NATO (Ammunition)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, before the placing of orders for ammunition from companies in North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries, any inquiries are made about the use of military conscripts in factories competing against United Kingdom suppliers.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1985, c. 642]: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

50th Parliament (Celebration)

Mr. Deakins asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will prepare plans to mark the 50th Parliament of the United Kingdom with an appropriate ceremony.

Mr. Biffen: Consideration will be given to what might be appropriate.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Seasonal Workers (Benefits)

86. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration he is currently giving to changes in the seasonal workers benefit regulations.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Ross) on 19 November at columns 153-54.

Child Benefit

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures showing the rates of child benefit plus the long-term national insurance child additions, at current and at 1979 prices, in April of each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: Comparison of values at dates other than upratings can be misleading and unhelpful. The figures given in the table show the levels of child benefit and long-term benefits child addition at the November uprating dates since 1979. The values at those dates are given, as requested, at April 1979 and October 1985 prices. Child benefit was increased to £7 a week and the long-term child addition to £8·05 from 25 November 1985, but the retail price index for that date will not be known until later in the year.

Retirement Pension

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated saving to his Department from changing the uprating date for the basic retirement pension from November 1986 to July 1986 and April 1987.

Mr. Newton: On the assumption in the Chancellor's autumn statement that the movement in prices over the eight months to January 1986 would be of the order of 1 per cent., the July 1986 uprating will add some £110 million to benefit expenditure on the basic retirement pension by the end of the financial year 1986-87. An estimate of expenditure had the uprating taken place in November instead will not be available until the retail prices index for May 1986 is published.

Review of Nursing Skill Mix

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list in the Official Report the districts and the units within each district which those engaged in the review of nursing skill mix have already visited, together with a list of those projected for such visits in the future;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the terms of reference of the review of nursing skill mix currently being conducted by his chief nursing officer on behalf of the National Health Service management board; what are the reasons for conducting this inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The purpose of the review of nursing skill mix is to obtain structured information about the levels and mix of nursing staff, related to costs and activity, and so far as is possible, outcomes and quality of nursing care in these areas with a view to improving it. The review will be a descriptive study which will take note of existing experience, highlight discrepancies and will possibly indicate where further work may be useful.

The review team have now completed their field work and visits have been made to the following district health authorities:

South Birmingham
Waltham Forest
Canterbury and Thanet
Cambridge (T)
Macclesfield
South Derbyshire
Portsmouth and South East Hampshire
York

All the above districts unite for the care of the mentally ill, the mentally handicapped, and the elderly, intensive care units and special care baby units were visited at Bloomsbury and Camberwell. In these two districts intensive care units and special care baby units only were visited. I am extremely grateful to all the staff in those districts who have contributed to the review.

The report is expected early next year.

Area Health Authorities (Funding)

Mr. Rathbone asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all English health authorities giving, for each, its funding during the present year as a percentage of its resources allocation working party entitlement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information in respect of regional health authorities is as follows:

Regional health authority	Revenue allocation as percentage of RAWP target 1985-86
Northern	97·0
Yorkshire	96·8
Trent	95·1
East Anglian	96·2
North West Thames	107·1
North East Thames	109·7
South East Thames	105·6
South West Thames	104·3
Wessex	95·7
Oxford	97·3
South Western	97·6
West Midlands	95·3
Mersey	99·9
North Western	98·2

Resource allocation to districts is a matter for regional health authorities. Regions are expected to demonstrate that their 10-year strategic plans make progress in improving equity of access to services, but full details of the funding position year by year are not held centrally.

Asian Mother and Baby Campaign

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the cost in the current financial year of awarding appropriate incremental increases and annual pay awards to linkworkers on the asian mother and baby campaign;

(2) if he will offer the same entitlement to incremental increases and annual pay awards to linkworkers on the asian mother and baby campaign as are available to other workers in the National Health Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: The asian mother and baby campaign is a pilot project for two years in each of 10 selected areas. As the linkworkers have been employed on a fixed-term contract which makes no provision for increments or pay rises, there are no appropriate increases to apply to them. However, it has been decided to increase the rate of pay of linkworkers with effect from 1 December 1985 by approximately 4½ per cent.

Students (Benefits)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the present criteria under which university students may qualify for welfare benefits.

Mr. Newton: University students, unless they fall into a group which is exempt from the requirement to be available for work, are generally excluded from supplementary benefit in term time but may qualify by being available for work in vacations. Overseas students are normally excluded throughout. Students are unlikely to qualify for family income supplement, which is paid to people in full-time work who have children, though a students's spouse may qualify. All students except certain overseas students are eligible for housing benefit if they pay rent and/or rates on accommodation which they occupy as their home. Students may be able to obtain full or partial remission of National Health Service charges, and free welfare foods, on low income grounds.

Health and Social Services (Co-ordination)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his policy on local co-ordination between local authority social services departments and health authorities.

Mr. Hayhoe: Health and local authorities are expected to collaborate closely on planning and operation of services of common concern to those authorities. This is essential to the cost-effective provision of a range of services to meet individual needs. A report of a working group set up jointly by the local authority associations, the National Association of Health Authorities and my Department to look for ways of improving collaboration was published recently and a meeting with representatives of the associations is arranged in January to discuss follow-up; a copy of that report is in the Library. Further guidance on joint planning and collaboration in the light of the recommendations of the joint working group will be published after consultations with health and local authority and other interests.

Trauma (Research)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to reduce the incidence of death following injury in those under 40 years of age; what research into trauma is sponsored by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Regardless of their age, every effort is made to save the lives of patients receiving treatment by the National Health Service following injury. The Department has recently assisted in funding a major research project into trauma arising from road accidents, and has published a report on the medical effects of seat belt legislation in the United Kingdom: a copy has been placed in the Library.

"Health Inequalities and Manchester"

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration he has given to the report, "Health Inequalities and Manchester", a copy of which has been sent to him; if there is any action he will be taking arising from the report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Health planning in Manchester is the responsibility of the Central Manchester, North Manchester and South Manchester health authorities which are now better funded and treating more patients than ever before. The right hon. Member may, therefore, wish to approach the chairmen of these health authorities for the information he seeks.

Queen Alexandra Hospital, Cosham

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the Portsmouth and South East Hampshire health authority has applied for additional funds for remedial works for the Queen Alexandra hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Department has received no such application. I understand that temporary winter repairs have been carried out to the roof of the Queen Alexandra hospital, Portsmouth. The Wessex regional health authority is now considering the situation, and will explore the available options for permanent remedial work next year. The funding of the work is a matter for consideration by the regional health authority.

Health and Personal Social Services Statistics

Mr. Ryder asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if there are any plans to publish health and personal social services statistics for England in 1985.

Mr. Whitney: Health and personal social services statistics for England 1985 edition will be published today. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has carried out any assessment of the implications for patients and pharmacists of the proposed new agreement between his Department and the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1985]: Implementation of the agreement would provide a sound basis for the future development of National Health Service pharmaceutical services by meeting patient's needs without being extravagant of resources. It would be to the benefit of the patient, the profession and the taxpayer.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration he has given to the joint policy statement on National Health Service expenditure sent to him by the British Medical Association, the Institute of Health Service Administrators and the Royal College of Nursing; what response he is making; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler [pursuant to the reply, 19 November 1985, c. 153]: Since the report was received details have been announced of the Government's plans for increased spending over the next three years in my reply of 12 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) at columns 162-163. Current spending on the hospital and community health services will increase by £650 million in 1986-87 to nearly £10·3 billion. Health authorities will also have available their growing cost improvement programmes which contribute significantly to the Health Service's ability to meet the pressures it faces—a point largely ignored by the report. Authorities will have to meet pay and price increases from within their resources but they should also be able to provide for more old people and improve services in line with Government objectives. Further increases of £470 million and £440 million are planned in 1987-88 and 1988-89, bringing total spending to £11·2 billion by the end of the period.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for Health plans to meet the sponsoring bodies to discuss with them their observations and the Government's decisions.

Mentally-handicapped Young Persons

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if the figures are yet available for each district health authority and for each regional health authority of the number of young people between the ages of 16 and 19 years living in long-stay mental handicap hospitals; and, for each authority, what is the number living in (a) units of 25 or more beds, and (b) units of under 25 beds at 31 December 1984;

(2) what is the number of children on short-term placements in long-stay mental handicap hospitals for each district health authority and each regional health authority as at 31 December 1984; and, for each authority, what is the number of units of (a) 25 or more beds, and (b) under 25 beds;

(3) what were the numbers of children in long-stay mental handicap hospitals at 31 December 1984 for each district health authority and each regional health authority; and, for each authority, what was the number living in units of (a) 25 or more beds and (b) under 25 beds.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985, c. 508]: Mental handicap hospitals and units are not classified by the length of time residents stay. The available information for all mental handicap hospitals and units is given in the table. Most of the small NHS mental handicap units in the community have fewer than 25 beds, but the table includes a few units with exactly 25 beds.

The figures include children and young people admitted for a few weeks, or an even shorter period, for short-term care or assessment, and those who spend part of their time at home and part in National Health Service care. Separate figures are not available centrally for these categories of residents.

As information on the 16-19 age group is not collected centrally, the table gives numbers of young people aged 16-18, which is the nearest equivalent.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Primary Schools (Grants)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria primary schools will have to meet in order to qualify for education support grants.

Mr. Dunn: The criteria by which bids by local education authorities for education support grants are considered were published in DES circular 5/85, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Special Education Needs

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the additional annual public expenditure which has arisen from the implementation of sections (4) to (10) of the Education Act 1981, relating to his identification and assessment of children with special education needs.

Mr. Dunn: It is not possible to identify this expenditure within the administrative expenditure of local education authorities.

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how much money has been spent on special education for each year since 1979; how many children with special education needs have been educated; and how many and what percentage of students with special education needs aged 16 to 19 years have received full-time education, in each local education authority for each year since 1979;

(2) whether he will give, for each year since 1979 (a) the cost of provision of full-time education for students aged 16 to 19 years with special needs, (b) the numbers and percentages of students aged 16 to 19 years with special needs receiving full-time education, (c) the numbers of requests for full-time education for students aged 16 to 19 years with special needs and (d) the number of complaints received from parents under sections 68 and 99 of the Education Act 1944 asking him to intervene or overrule a local education authority's decision.

Sir Keith Joseph: The information available is given in the table. I shall write to the hon. Member with a breakdown between local education authorities of the numbers in lines II and III of the table. No information is available about the cost of provision for young people with special educational needs other than that relating to all age groups in maintained special schools and units given in line I of the table; or about those aged 16 to 19 receiving full-time education in ordinary maintained schools, in non-maintained schools or in the further education sector. It is not possible to provide the percentage figures requested relating to the 16 to 19 age group.

Requests for full-time education between the ages of 16 and 19 are made to local education authorities, and no information is collected by my Department. Since August 1983, I have received 27 complaints about issues related to the provision of full-time education for young people aged 16 to 19 with special education needs.

* Figures for 1984 and 1985 are not comparable with earlier years or with each other because of changes in the way statistics were collected after the Education Act 1981 came into force in April 1983. Figures up to 1983 give numbers ascertained by LEAs under the Education Act 1944; the 1985 figure covers those with statements under the 1981 Act; the 1984 figure is a hybrid in a transitional year.

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the provision of full-time education for students with special education needs aged 16 to 19 years; whether he intends to produce a circular relating to the provision; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: I receive representations from time to time, both general and specific to certain cases. I am considering what general advice can usefully be offered.

Scientific Research

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what factors he took into account when he decided to allocate the sum of £15 million a year for scientific research over the next three years.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend decided to allocate an additional £15 million a year to the science budget to assist the research councils to follow up promising new developments in a variety of scientific fields and so provide more opportunities for talented scientists to pursue research in this country. The allocation of the additional money between the research councils and other bodies grant-aided from the science budget will be determined following advice from the advisory board for the research councils.

Educational and Vocational Courses (Books)

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funding is provided for book resources to support educational and vocational courses organised by the Manpower Services Commission.

Sir Keith Joseph: The payment made to a local education authority from Manpower Services Commission funds or from funds provided by the MSC to an intermediary for training purposes takes account of the full cost of operating the course, including essential non-teaching items such as books, materials and equipment.

School Places

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish figures to show the number of school places taken out of use by each education authority in London (a) between 1978 and 1982 and *(b)*since 1982; and if he will give the same information for Leicestershire.

Mr. Dunn: On the basis of returns submitted by local education authorities the figures are as follows:

The figures relate to numbers of maintained primary and secondary school places permanently taken out of use, taking account of transfers of places between the primary and secondary sectors.

University Lecturers

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many university lecturers have left the profession since 1979.

Mr. Walden: The numbers of full-time academic non-clinical lecturers and assistant lecturers, wholly university financed, who have left a university each year between January 1980 and December 1983 are shown in the following table. Information for 1984 is not yet available.

University Students

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what factors he bases his conclusion that the approximate cost of reducing the age of independence in respect of university students from 25 years to 21 years would be around £68 million.

Mr. Walden: £68 million is an approximate estimate of the cost in 1985-86 of reducing the age of independence to 21 for all mandatory award holders. It is based on an estimate of the number of dependent mandatory award holders in England and Wales aged 21 to 24 at about 100,000 and of the average net loss of parental contributions assessed in respect of students at about £680.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to introduce into the procedure of grant assessment a system for calculating the cost of living to university students who as part of their degree course are required to spend one year abroad in a high-cost country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The present method of assessing the mandatory grant payable to students already makes provision for those required to spend a year in a country with a high cost of living. Consideration is, however, being given to changing the present system, without increasing its overall cost, in order to make additional provision available in respect of countries with especially high costs.

Scientists

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the report which has been submitted to him by the advisory board for the research councils about the decrease in the numbers of scientists from research laboratories; and what action he proposes to take resulting from the findings of the report.

Mr. Walden: The "brain drain" inquiry of the advisory board for the research councils sought evidence from some 40 university and other research groups about the flows of natural scientists into and out of the United Kingdom. The inquiry found evidence of increasing losses overseas of talented students, post-doctoral research workers and more senior scientists. The findings of the inquiry were published last month and copies were placed in the Library.

In response to the findings, my right hon. Friend intends to add £45 million to the science budget compared with previous plans over the three years 1986-87 to 1988-89. My right hon. Friend also intends to increase the amount available to the University Grants Committee for the improvement of equipment in selected centres of research from £7 million to £10 million in each of the financial years 1986-87 and 1987-88 and to make the same provision in 1988-89. The additions to the science budget will be distributed following advice from the ABRC. The UGC will be responsible for distributing the selective equipment funds. My right hon. Friend hopes that together the additional provisions will provide more opportunities and better facilities for talented scientists to pursue their work in this country.

Course-related Expenses

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to arrange payments of course-related expenses to unemployed people who decide to undertake courses of further or higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Local education authorities already have discretionary powers to make grants to unemployed people who undertake courses of further or higher education but who do not qualify for a mandatory student award; and they can also remit fees in the case of their own institutions. In addition, under the so-called "21 hours rule", unemployed people can, subject to certain conditions, undertake part-time study for up to 21 hours a week without affecting their entitlement to supplementary benefit.

Social Work Courses

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the national advisory body for higher education is currently considering any proposal to reduce the number or scope of courses in universities or colleges leading to qualifications in social work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: No. The national advisory body for public sector higher education advises my right hon. Friend about the academic provision to be made in public sector institutions only. The NAB plans student numbers in terms of broad programme areas, not of individual subjects or courses. My right hon. Friend has not yet received advice from the NAB on the disposition of student number targets or financial resources in 1986-87.

Poundswick School

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what correspondence he has received about the Poundswick school dispute in Manchester; and what replies he has sent or will be sending.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Disabled Students

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 25 November, Official Report, column 397, about deaf, blind, physically handicapped and other disabled children, what he estimates would be the cost of collecting the information he was requested to give the House.

Mr. Dunn: In order to collect this information, it would be necessary to check the destination of every pupil who has left one of these schools since 1981. Since the Department does not know the form in which these schools keep their records, it is impossible to estimate the cost or feasibility of such an exercise.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Appeals Tribunals

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Attorney-General if he lays down any residential qualifications for chairmen of appeals tribunals; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: There is no residential qualification.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Attorney-General if he has made any recent changes in the procedure for the appointment of chairmen of appeals tribunals; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: There have been no recent changes in the procedure.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils (Women Workers)

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what percentage of workers currently covered by wages councils are women working part-time.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is not available in the form requested. We estimate that about four-fifths of workers covered by wages councils are female and about two thirds of all workers work part-time.

"Careers Bulletin"

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General what grade within the Civil Service the editor of Careers Bulletin is; and what percentage of her time it is estimated is devoted to editing Careers Bulletin.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information officer; approximately 60 per cent.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General how many members of the staff of the Department of Employment are directly involved in the publication of Careers Bulletin; what are their grades; and what proportion of their time it is estimated is devoted to Careers Bulletin.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Two, apart from the editor; principal and senior executive officer; 5 per cent. and 10 per cent. respectively.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General what was the estimated cost to the Department of Employment of publishing Careers Bulletin in 1982-83; and, in real terms, what was the cost for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General how many times a year Careers Bulletin is published; what is its purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Three times a year. Its purpose is to provide a means of communication between careers officers, careers teachers and the Department of Employment's careers service branch, with the aim of publicising and promoting good practice in careers work with young people. The content of the bulletin and the best means of producing and distributing copies widely to careers service staff and careers teachers are currently being considered.

Textile and Clothing Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the total number of jobs lost in the textile and clothing industry since 1960.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employment at different dates. Between June 1960 and June 1985 (the latest date for which figures are available) the total number of employees in employment in the textiles and clothing industries in Great Britain decreased by about 715,000.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Paymaster General how many people have been employed in the clothing industry in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and what is this figure as a percentage of the total manufacturing labour force in each of those years.

Mr. Alan Clark: Statistics of employees employed in the clothing industry are not available for the United Kingdom, but the Great Britain figures for the period for June 1975 to June 1985 are as follows:

Estimated numbers of employees in employment in the clothing industry in Great Britain*

June of each year	Number	As percentage of all employees in manufacturing industries
1975	311,900	4·2
1976	294,200	4·1
1977	300,400	4·2
1978	293,500	4·1

Tourism

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Paymaster General how the extra funding for tourism which he announced on 12 November, Official Report, column 445, will be allocated; on what terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I cannot give details on how the extra funds will be allocated at this stage. I have asked the British Tourist Authority and the English Tourist Board to submit details to me by Christmas on how they would propose to spend the funds. I have asked them to give additional emphasis in their new plans to improving employment opportunities, encouraging the dispersal of visitors throughout the United Kingdom and extending the tourism season.

WALES

Pay Settlements

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will define the phrase "excessive pay settlement" as used in the letter sent on 21 August by his Department to the North Wales provincial council for local authority services.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The level of pay settlements is a key element in the Government's economic strategy. Since pay accounts for around 70 per cent. of local government spending, it is important that settlements for local authority employers should be moderate and at a level the country can afford. In making my proposals for the 1986-87 rate support grant settlement in July I announced that current expenditure provision was estimated to be £1,368 million. The Government are not prepared to increase block support to finance pay awards which cannot be absorbed within this amount.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of local government current spending in Wales in 1983-84 was represented by spending under section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The Department does not collect information on current spending under section 137. However, total revenue expenditure under section 137 in 1983-84 was £2·9 million and represented 0·23 per cent. of total local authority revenue expenditure.

Farmers (Exceptional Weather Aid)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many farmers in Mid Glamorgan, Gwent and Wales, respectively, will receive exceptional payments pursuant to his statement of 28 November; and what he expects to be the average payment made per application and the maximum payment made on any single application.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The estimated numbers of farmers of three hectares and over who can qualify for assistance are as follows:

	Number
Mid Glamorgan	450
Gwent	430
Wales	6,000

The average payment for these farmers will be of the order of £250. Weather aid will also be provided for occupiers of less than three hectares. No limit is attached to the number of animals on which a farmer may claim.

Non-Departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Grist asked the Secretary of State for Wales what progress he has made in the review of major non-departmental public bodies under his control.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: In accordance with the arrangements outlined by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 19 November 1984, at columns 57-58, I have arranged for reviews of all the executive non-departmental public bodies under my control so that the main programme of work will be completed by April 1987. A review of the Wales Tourist Board has already been carried out; and over the next year or so reviews will be undertaken of the Welsh Development Agency, the Sports Council for Wales, the National Museum of Wales, the Development Board for Rural Wales, the National Library of Wales and the Land Authority for Wales.

PRIME MINISTER

Clothing and Textile Industries

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Prime Minister what information she has as to how the number of people employed in the clothing and textile industries compares with the numbers employed in the motor manufacturing industry and the coal mining industry both in the United Kingdom and throughout the European Economic Community.

The Prime Minister: The latest available data for most countries relate to 1983 and are given in "Employment and Unemployment 1985", published by the Statistical Office of the European Communities, a copy of which is in the Library. the relevant information for the textile industry is on page 146, for the clothing and footwear industry on page 147, for manufacture of motor vehicles and so on on page 143, and for extraction and briquetting of solid fuels and coke ovens (the closest available approximation to the coal mining industry) on page 134.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Prime Minister how the level of Government investment in the textile and clothing industries per capita employee in those industries compares to the level of Government investment per capita employee in (a) the coal mining industry, (b) the motor manufacturing industry, (c) the aerospace industry, (d) the shipbuilding industry and (e) computer manufacture in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

The Prime Minister: Information on Government support for investment is given in the annual reports of the Industrial Development Act 1982 (formerly the Industry Act 1972) of which copies are in the Library of the House. The totals for the clothing industry, coal mining, the motor manufacturing industry, the aerospace industry and computer manufacture are not separately identifiable. However, the reports do give a breakdown of Government support for investment by broader industrial sectors.

Statistics of employment in the industries concerned are published in the Employment Gazette, of which copies are also in the Library, but these statistics are not compiled on quite the same basis as statistics on Government support for investment.

Horticultural Research

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with the co-ordination between the Department of the Environment and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in respect of the identification of needs and derivation of priorities in respect of horticultural research.

The Prime Minister: Yes. There is close collaboration between the chief scientists of the two Departments in relation to research matters which are of mutual interest, but if my hon. Friend has any particular points in mind perhaps he would write to me.

Liverpool City Council

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister whether, pursuant to her answer of 29 November, Official Report, column 720, the information given by the Department of the Environment that the arrangements did not require Government approval was in response to representations from the commercial organisations concerned seeking Government approval; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The information was given in response to a request for observations from the organisations concerned.

TRANSPORT

M1 (Junction 12)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport on what date the junction 12 signpost on the southbound section of the M1 motorway between Wakefield and London was reported damaged; and on what date it will be repaired.

Mr. Ridley: The half mile advance warning sign at junction 12 was reported damaged following an accident on 15 November. The sign is due to be replaced in early January as part of the general sign replacement programme on this section of the M1.

A1 (Wetherby)

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now give a date for the commencement to works to improve the A1 north of Wetherby.

Mrs. Chalker: I shall write to my hon. Friend shortly about the prospects for a start of work on improving the A1 north of Wetherby.

Road Schemes

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress his Department has made in investigating the prospect of speeding up road schemes currently planned to start after 1986.

Mrs. Chalker: We are looking at ways of speeding up preparation of schemes in the light of the Civil Engineering Economic Development Committee's report "A Fairer and Faster Route to Major Road Construction". The additional funds we are allocating to the new construction programme will make some acceleration possible after 1986.

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the list of road schemes which the Department of Transport-Confederation of British Industry-Trades Union Congress review team examined in order to assess the economic benefits of accelerating construction, showing for each scheme (a) the first year economic benefits, (b) the discounted cost of bringing forward the scheme's completion by one year and (c) the net present value of advancing the scheme's completion by one year.

Mrs. Chalker: The Department of Transport schemes examined by the review team are listed in the annex to the Confederation of British Industry's report "The Fabric of the Nation", published in June 1984. I regret that the information requested for each scheme could be provided only at disproportionate cost. If the hon. Member is interested in a particular scheme, perhaps he will write to me.

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the report of the review team of the Department of Transport-Confederation of British Industry-Trades Union Council on the consequences for employment of £500 million worth of road construction.

Mrs. Chalker: I have seen the review team's report, which states that it came to no agreement about the precise number of jobs which could be created as a result of an increase in road construction activity.

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will show how his Department's trunk road new construction budget for 1986-87 will be allocated between (a) schemes to be started in 1986-87, (b) schemes started in 1985-86 and (c) schemes started in 1984-85 giving in each case the number of contracts involved.

Mrs. Chalker: I regret that it is not possible to supply the information requested. The allocation of resources between the various elements of the national road programme has yet to be finalised. Details will be published in the Supply Estimates to be presented to Parliament on Budget day.

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give his Department's latest forecast of capital expenditure on roads by English local authorities in 1985-86 and the provision made for such expenditure in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: The provisional forecast of net capital expenditure on roads by English local authorities in 1985-86 is £494 million. Provision for 1986-87 is £533 million. Final decisions on provision for 1987-88 and 1988-89 will be taken at the usual time, in the autumn preceding those years.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria Her Majesty's Government have for trunking roads in the Vauxhall constituency.

Mrs. Chalker: I have no such proposals.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans Her Majesty's Government have for increasing road capacity in the Vauxhall constituency.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans Her Majesty's Government have to allocate the £1·5 billion they have scheduled for trunk roads in London.

Mrs. Chalker: Details of the Government's current proposals for trunk road expenditure in the London area an on the M25, totalling some £900 million, are set out in the report "National Roads England 1985", a copy of which is in the Library.

Wardair (Transatlantic Scheduled Services)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now approve the application by Wardair to operate transatlantic scheduled services between Canada and regional airports in the United Kingdom, including Cardiff-Wales airport.

Mr. Michael Spicer: To date neither the Canadian Government nor Wardair has applied to operate scheduled passenger services other than to London, Manchester and Prestwick. Bilateral discussions with the Canadian Government will take place in January next, when there will be an opportunity to discuss the creation of wider opportunities for British and Canadian airlines.

Light Rail Transport Systems

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate which light rail passenger transport systems have received funding from central Government; and what was the amount of such assistance.

Mr. David Mitchell: The capital cost of the Tyne and Wear Metro has amounted to about £280 million. Of this some two thirds has been met by central Government grant. In addition, the first phase of the London Docklands light railway, currently under construction, will cost £77 million. It is funded equally by London Regional Transport and the London Docklands Development Corporation out of central Government grants; up to two-thirds of the LRT grant is recovered from London ratepayers.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to provide financial assistance for the proposed light rapid transit system in Greater Manchester.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am considering an application by Greater Manchester passenger transport executive for a grant under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968 towards the cost of its proposed light rapid transit system. The PTE has, however, acknowledged that it needs to undertake further work before the project can be fully appraised.

USA-USSR Communications Agreement

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what effect the agreement between the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics over communications in the north Pacific will have on British airlines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The agreement between the USA, Japan and the USSR was signed on 19 November 1985 and provides for new communication links between Anchorage, Tokyo and Khabarovsk when civil aircraft are in trouble on north Pacfic air routes, and for the use of a radio broadcasting station on Kamchatka as a navigation aid.

The agreement should help to reduce the danger of repetition of the incident involving the shooting down of a Korean airliner and will benefit the aircraft of all nations flying on north Pacific routes.

British Rail

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied that British Rail will be able to meet its financial targets in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have set the board the target of reducing its call on PSO grant to £635 million (in 1983 prices) in 1986-87. The freight and inter-city businesses have been set the target of earning a 5 per cent. rate of return on their assets, on a current costs accounting basis, but excluding interest charges, by 1988-89. I expect the board to make progress towards these targets during this financial year. I set a cash ceiling on the current year's PSO grant of £820 million (equivalent to £740 million at 1983 prices); I am pleased to say that I was able to agree a grant settlement £7 million below that ceiling.

Airlines (CAA charges)

Mr. Wiggin asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total sum of charges to British-based airlines by the Civil Aviation Authority during the last financial year; and what was the cost of the meteorological services included in this charge.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Revenue from charges for air traffic control services supplied by the Civil Aviation Authority totalled £173·2 million in the financial year ending 31 March 1985. Meteorological services included in these charges cost £15·5 million. The exact amount charged to British airlines cannot be calculated except at disproportionate cost. The CAA estimates, however, that about 50 per cent. of the charges were recovered from operators of British registered aircraft.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Officers

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to introduce regular health checks on serving prison officers.

Mr. Mellor: No, but the possibility is among matters being considered in a current review of occupational health arrangements in the prison service. Should any firm proposals emerge, staff and other interests will be consulted before their introduction.

Mr. Eric Alley

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list forthcoming visits to local authorities that have been arranged for Mr. Eric Alley, his Department's civil defence adviser, and the dates on which they are to take place.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The civil defence adviser will be visiting west Glamorgan on 19 December.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those local authorities which have received visits from Mr. Eric Alley, his Department's civil defence adviser; and when they took place.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In the course of his programme of reviewing local authority progress in civil defence preparedness, the civil defence adviser has visited the following counties:

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the conditions of employment of Mr. Eric Alley, his Department's civil defence adviser.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Mr. Alley's appointment is for three years in the first instance with the possibility of an extension. The post attracts a salary on the Civil Service principal scale.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the terms of reference of Mr. Eric Alley, his Department's civil defence adviser.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The civil defence adviser's main responsibility is to advise my right hon. Friend on matters affecting the civil defence functions of local authorities.

Government Wartime Headquarters

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether a site has been found for the central Government wartime headquarters in civil defence zone 81, in north Wales.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Yes.

Aircraft (Hijacking Incidents)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all aircraft hijacking incidents in the United Kingdom since 1970 which required a police presence or intervention; and if, for each incident, he will estimate the policing costs involved.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The incidents concerned are as follows. The additional cost to the police of handling the incidents could not be determined without disproportionate cost.

6 September 1970
An attempted hijack of an El Al Boeing 707 en route from Amsterdam to New York was foiled when one of the two hijackers was shot dead by armed sky marshals and the other was overpowered by the crew. The aircraft made a emergency landing at Heathrow airport where the second hijacker was taken into police custody.

11 January 1977
A lone hijacker threatened to blow up a TWA Boeing 747 over the Atlantic whilst en route from New York to London. The crew recognised the man as being mentally disturbed and were able to restrain him until after the aircraft landed at Heathrow where the police boarded the aircraft and took the man into custody.

26 February 1982
Five Tanzanians hijacked a Tanzanian Airways internal flight. After refuelling at Nairobi the aircraft travelled to Jeddah and Athens before finally arriving at Stansted on 27 February 1982. After negotiations the aircrew were released the following day and the five men surrendered to the police.

29 March 1985
A lone male British national who was being deported from the Federal Republic of Germany hijacked a Lufthansa Boeing 737 en route from Hamburg to London. The aircraft landed safely at Heathrow and after a period of negotiations the hijacker, who proved to be unarmed and seemingly mentally unstable, surrendered to the police.

Police Operations, Tottenham

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 136, when he intends to write to the hon. Member for Tottenham giving the information requested about police operations in Tottenham.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I wrote to the hon. Member on 28 November 1985 and have placed a copy of my letter in the Library.

Tactical Options Manual

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available to Members of Parliament and to police committees the tactical options manual.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The tactical options manual was prepared by the Association of Chief Police Officers as a guide to the range of tactics police forces might adopt in dealing with disorder. I understand that ACPO has no plans at present to publish the manual.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Commercial Staff

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary oif State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many commercial staff (diplomatic grades) are currently in post at British embassies, consulates and high commissions; how many of those have been in post longer than three years; and how many were recruited specifically because of their commercial expertise.

Mr. Renton: There are around 350 UK-based staff serving with diplomatic status in posts overseas in which they are wholly or mainly engaged in commercial work. Four years is the normal length of tour in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and some other countries. Three years is the standard tour elsewhere, except in a few particularly hard posts. About 50 of the staff in question have currently been in post for longer than three years. The diplomatic service generally seeks to recruit staff for a long-term career, rather than for specific posts or functions. There have been additional special competitions open to older candidates which have attracted officers at first secretary level from the private sector.

Joint Liaison Group Meeting (Peking)

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress was made at the recent joint liaison group meeting in Peking; whether agreement was reached on the right of abode endorsement to be placed in BN(0) passports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We are arranging for the text of the communiqué issued after the joint liaison group meeting to be placed in the Library of the House. I am happy to say that the Chinese side agreed in principle that the wording of the endorsement should be as follows:

"The holder of this passport has Hong Kong permanent identity card no (XYZ) which states that the holder has the right of abode in Hong Kong".

It is expected that formal agreement on this and other related matters will be reached at the next meeting of the joint liaison group.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Rifkind: The usual written forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present, 11 meetings of the Council are scheduled for December.

The Labour and Social Affairs Council will meet on 5 December and will discuss the draft directive on the protection of workers from noise at work and the draft decision on an action programme in education and training for technology—the COMETT proposals. There is a possibility that these two items may be agreed. Other items on the agenda include the draft directive on parental leave and leave for family reasons, and the Commission memorandum on political guidelines in the employment, education and training of young people. The Council will also consider two proposals to amend European social fund rules: (i) in order that fund support may be given to schemes where the jobs created are for self-employed people, and (ii) in view of the accession of Spain and Portugal.

The Economic and Finance Council is expected to meet on 9 December to discuss the annual report on the economic situation in the Community and an Economic Policy Committee report on labour markets and employment. The Council is also likely to consider the calculation of commercial interest reference rates which apply to export finance; abolition of tax borders; tax measures to encourage cooperation between firms in different member states; and a statement by the Belgian delegation concerning application of the treaty rules on competition to insurance.

The Agriculture Council is expected to meet on 9 and 10 December to consider cereal and rapeseed prices; the review of the sugar regime; sugar for the chemical industry; reform of the starch regime; GATT beef quotas and the beef balance sheet; disposal of intervention alcohol; the rationalisation of abattoirs; forestry protection; hormones; battery hens and possibly the annual premia for goats and mountain ewes and certain harmonisation issues in the veterinary/phytosanitary/foodstuff sectors. A further meeting is expected to take piace on 19 December to discuss perspectives for the common agricultural policy.

The Research Council will meet on 10 December and will discuss R&D programmes in the fields of materials and the environment together with a proposal for a programme of assistance for the development of endogenous scientific and research capacities in the developing countries. The Council will alsc consider a report from a seminar to be held on 3 and 4 December on an initiative for research in informatics applied to society and a progress report on the European Community's joint research centre multiannual programme 1984-87. There may also be a follow-up discussion to the European Council of 2 and 3 December on the European technological Community.

The Council will discuss, amongst other things, cooperation between member states and EC in developing links between customs computer systems to facilitate inter-Community trade.

The Internal Market/Consumer Council will look at questions related to the entry into force of the community patent convention (CPC) and the status of the proposed common patent appeal convention and any other problem that may arise at the conference on the CPC.

The Foreign Affairs Council will discuss proposals for further finance to support soeial measures taken by member states to ease the problem of restructuring the coal and steel industries.

The Council may review progress on EC-EFTA consultations to take account of enlargement. The Council will review progress in the negotiations on the future of the multi-fibre arrangement.

The Council will be asked to adopt the final series of non-quota measures proposed under the old ERDF regulation. The Council will discuss trade relations between the Community and Japan.

The Fisheries Council is expected to meet on 16 and 17 December to discuss 1986 total allowable catch quotas; 1986 quotas in certain third country waters; Norway pout; amendment of the fishing control regulation; various enlargement measures and possibly 1986 guide prices.

The Culture Ministers' meeting will receive a report from the Commission on the operation of resale price maintenance on books in the Community.

Uganda

Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to promote further the peace process in Uganda.

Mr. Rifkind: We believe that the prospects for a stable and prosperous Uganda depend on a reconciliation between the parties to the peace talks currently taking place in Nairobi. We wholeheartedly support these talks and wish them every success.

As an earnest of the importance we attribute to the peace process we have, with the agreement of President Moi, attached Major General Pollard to our High Commission in Nairobi. His role will be to offer advice on the military aspects of any settlement once agreement has been reached, and to recommend what form future British military assistance to Uganda might take.

We are also considering with other donors what economic assistance we intend to provide to help a new Government put Uganda back on the road to economic recovery.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

South Africa

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many British companies are known to his Department to be currently operating in South Africa.

Mr. Howard: My Department does not keep records of the companies operating in particular markets. However, under the EC code of conduct for companies with interests in South Africa, 171 United Kingdom companies submitted reports to my Department for the year ended 30 June 1984.

Dangerous Products (Information)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce a rapid information exchange system on dangerous products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The European Community has already introduced a system for the rapid exchange of information on hazardous consumer products under which member states advise each other through the Commission of consumer goods posing an immediate hazard against which they have taken action. Within the United Kingdom local authority enforcement agencies, in conjunction with the Government, run a regular national information service to keep each other up to date on potentially hazardous consumer products giving them concern and on prosecutions for supplying unsafe products.

Small Firms (Liquidations)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many small firms in England have gone into liquidation since May 1979.

Mr. Howard: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. There are no separate figures for either bankruptcies or company liquidations affecting small firms, figures for company liquidations are not available for England on its own, and there are no monthly bankruptcy statistics for England in 1979.

Pharmaceutical Products

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the United Kingdom trade balance in pharmaceutical goods in the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Channon: In the period from November 1984 to October 1985 the United Kingdom had a crude trade surplus of £824 million in medicinal and pharmaceutical products.

Advancement of Women

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has had any meetings with the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss the implementation of those parts of the conclusions of the Nairobi conference on forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women relevant to his Department; and if he has any future plans for such meetings.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1985, c. 17.]: My right hon. and learned Friend has not met the Equal Opportunities Commission in his present ministerial capacity since the Nairobi conference. I met Baroness Platt, chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission, to discuss women in engineering on 7 November 1984. I shall be meeting the Equal Opportunities Commission shortly to discss the participation of women in commerce as part of Industry Year 1986.

Goat Cheese

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the present consumption of goat cheese in the United Kingdom; and how much is imported in both volume and money terms.

Mrs. Fenner: I have been asked to reply.

There are no official statistics on the consumption of goat cheese in the United Kingdom and goat cheese is not separately identified in United Kingdom trade statistics. It is understood, however, that some 130 tonnes of goat cheese was exported by France to the United Kingdom in 1984. Information from the industry suggests that domestic production is very small.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Privatisation

Mr. Knox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the receipts to the Treasury have been from privatisation in each year from 1979-80 to 1984-85 inclusive, expressed in 1984-85 price levels, using the assumptions for the gross domestic product deflator given in footnote 2 to table 2.1 of the autumn statement.

Mr. Moore: Proceeds treated as special sales of assets expressed in 1984-85 prices for the years 1979-80 to 1984-85 were as follows:

1979-80	565
1980-81	521
1981-82	577
1982-83	533
1983-84	1,194
1984-85	2,091

Note:

Excludes advance oil payments from BNOC which net out to zero.

These figures are calculated using assumptions incorporated in table 2.1 of the autumn statement but not stated in footnote 2.

Inland Revenue Records

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 523, about asbestos at Bradford central depository for the Inland Revenue, if he will list the number of requests for information which have been received and not yet dealt with.

Mr. Moore: Seven thousand requests for information have been received since 2 November 1984. Tax offices have reconsidered these cases and normally have been able to deal with them without recourse to the papers held in the repository.

International Trade (Tax Arrangements)

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he plans to seek any amendment of the arm's length principle in tax arrangements for international trade in transfer price goods.

Mr. Moore: No. The arm's length principle is internationally accepted and we adhere to it both in our domestic legislation and in our double taxation agreements.

Child Tax Allowance and Benefit

Mr. Marlow asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1965 the weekly value at 1985 prices of child tax allowance and child benefit.

Mr. Moore: The table below gives the weekly value of child support to families paying tax at the basic rate. Child support covers child tax allowances, family allowances and child benefit. Values are expressed at November 1984 prices, since the general index of retail prices for the 12 months to November 1985 is not yet available. The weekly value shown for November 1985 at November 1984 prices is therefore provisional.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Colvin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to Her Majesty's Government's Customs and Excise in lost revenue if the value added tax threshold was raised to £50,000.

Mr. Brooke: It is not known how many traders would deregister if the threshold were raised to £50,000, but the best estimate that can be made in the circumstances is that the revenue cost would be between £100 million and £200 million a year.

SCOTLAND

Children in Care

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many parental rights resolutions were passed or rescinded annually; what was the proportion of these in respect of which parental objections were lodged; and what was the outcome of sheriff court hearings in respect of the latter group in each regional and island area.

Mr. John MacKay: Table 1 below gives the number of parental rights resolutions made and rescinded for each regional and islands area (except Strathclyde for which no information is available) for the three years ending 31 March 1984.

Regional Authorities (Public Services)

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make funds available to regional authorities in Scotland for the purpose of advertising the public services they provide; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: No. It is for authorities to determine within the resources available to them their own priorities for expenditure on particular items, including advertising the services they provide.

Teachers and Social Workers (Training)

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make funds available for the in-service training of teachers and social workers in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Provision for the in-service training of both teachers and social workers is included in local authorities' rate support grant relevant expenditure, although it is not separately identified.

In addition, so far as teachers are concerned, (i) the full-time equivalent of some 200 academic staff in colleges of education are engaged on in-service training; (ii) in 1984 my right hon. Friend introduced two schemes of assistance towards the expense of teachers attending approved in-service training; the specific grant available under these schemes for the current financial year is £763,000; and (iii) for the financial years 1985-86 and 1986-87 a total of about £2·5 million is available to education authorities in Scotland through the Manpower Services Commission's scheme for in-service training in the field of its technical and vocational education initiative.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the amounts of rate support grant paid to (a) all Scottish district councils as a group and (b) Glasgow district council in each of the years since 1978-79; and if he will express these figures at constant prices.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

	Glasgow district		All Scottish districts

1985-86	33,944	33,944	128,500	128,500

Notes:

(a) The figures for the years 1978-79 to 1982-83 are final; those for 1983-84 to 1985-86 will be varied following the next rate support grant order.

(b) The figures are in cost terms, which show expenditure adjusted for the effect of general inflation, using GDP market price deflator factors brought to a 1985-86 base.

(c) The figures comprise the three elements of rate support grant (domestic, resources and needs) and are in respect of each financial year. They reflect selective and general abatements of grant.

Motorways (Safety Barriers)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce concrete barriers for the central reservations of Scotland's motorways.

Mr. Ancram: No.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what undertakings have been given for the provision of safety barriers for the central reservations of Scotland's motorways.

Mr. Ancram: Safety barriers are provided where justified.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement about action being taken in Scotland against the spread of Legionnaire's disease.

Mr. Younger: Greater Glasgow health board has acted with commendable speed to track down the sources of this infection where it has appeared in Glasgow, and prompt action has been taken to prevent the spread of the disease there. We shall look carefully at what has happened in Glasgow to see if there are any general conclusions on which further action might be taken to prevent the spread of Legionnaire's disease elsewhere.

Senile Dementia

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been given by his Department to institutions and organisations for the study of the problems of senile dementia in each of the past five years.

Mr. Younger: Grants awarded by the Scottish Office for research into senile dementia since 1980 amount to some £220,000. It is not possible to give the information requested for separate years.

ENVIRONMENT

Council House Sales

15. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about progress with council house sales in Norwich during the last six months.

Sir George Young: Progress has been satisfactory. I have had no complaints, in that time, from Norwich tenants seeking to buy their homes.

27. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants since May 1979.

Sir George Young: From April 1979 to September 1985 about 665,000 dwellings were sold to sitting tenants by local authorities and new towns in England.

Crown Immunity

16. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations from the Institute of Environmental Health Officers concerning Crown immunity; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Housing Investment Programme

17. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the housing investment programme allocations for 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

33. Mr. Torney asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to announce the housing investment programme allocations for 1986-87.

Mr. John Patten: I hope to announce the housing investment programme allocations for individual local authorities before Christmas.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

19. Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the recent visit by the then Minister for Housing, the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) together with the hon. Member for Brent, South and the right hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Freeson) to see homeless families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in Paddington, he will make a statement on the provision of further resources for people in such accommodation.

Sir George Young: Homeless families want permanent accommodation as soon as possible. To that end we are making £3,253 million available for housing capital investment in 1986-87. The local authority share is £2,532 million, which is 9 per cent. up on this year. Of this, £1,465 million will be available for housing investment programme allocations to local authorities. Individual allocations will be announced shortly.

Local Authorities (Political Propaganda)

20. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate how much money was spent on party political propaganda by local authorities in 1984 and to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information necessary to estimate total expenditure by local authorities on publicity of a party political nature is not available. It is clear, however, that at least £20 million has been spent on publicity of this nature since this Parliament began.

Flats (Right-to-buy Sales)

21. Mr. Knowles asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to facilitate the sale of flats under the right-to-buy legislation.

Mr. John Patten: I have announced proposals for legislation in this Session to increase the discount on sales of flats by 10 per cent. Purchasers are also to have protection against unexpectedly high service charges for repairs and the right to a loan in respect of such charges in the early years of the lease.

Water Meters

22. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many domestic water meters have been installed in each of the past three years.

Mr. John Patten: About 20,000 over the three-year period.

Marine Nature Reserve

23. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce a decision on the first marine nature reserve.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that the Nature Conservancy Council is making progress and I would hope to be able to reach a decision on the first statutory reserve by next summer.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

24. Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the report prepared by the joint centre for land development studies on public rights of way, a copy of which has been sent to him, he is considering any changes to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mrs. Rumbold: We await further advice from the rights of way review committee, which commissioned this report.

Basildon (Town Centre Square)

25. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the hon. Member for Basildon, the Basildon development corporation and others about the roofing over the town centre square in Basildon.

Mr. Tracey: In August this year it was decided not to allow Basildon development corporation to proceed with the roofing of town square on the financial terms which were then proposed. At her request, on 25 November I met the chairman of the corporation, together with my hon. Friend and my hon. Friend, the Member for Billericay (Mr. Proctor) to discuss the corporation's concern about this decision and to see whether a way could be found of allowing the project to go ahead, I recognise the benefits which roofing town square would bring to the town centre, but I must also be satisfied with the financial aspects of any proposal.

Council of Environment Ministers

26. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the November meeting of the European Economic Community Council of Environment Ministers.

Mr. Waldegrave: I led the United Kingdom delegation at this meeting, which was held on 28 November.

On the draft directive on polluting emissions from vehicles the Council reached substantial agreement on a range of points left outstanding from its meeting in June 1985; this is, however, subject to general reserves by the two other member states and to a parliamentary reserve by the United Kingdom.

The Council held an exchange of views on the draft directive on the control of emissions to the air from large combustion plants, but without reaching decisions.

The Council discussed the chapter on the environment in the Commission's Green Paper on "Perspectives for the Common Agricultural Policy", giving a general welcome to the Commission's proposals; and held a preliminary exchange of views on the designation as European Year of the Environment the 12 months beginning on 21 March 1987.

Other items discussed included draft directives on the discharge of dangerous substances to water; the sulphur content of gas oil; a Community information system for the control and reduction of pollution caused by hydrocarbons discharged at sea; the use of sewage sludge in agriculture; pollution by waste from the titanium dioxide industry; and a proposed regulation establishing a scheme to provide forests in the Community with increased protection against fire and atmospheric pollution.

Animals (Protected Species)

28. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to add further species of animal to the list of protected species under the Wildlife and Countryside Act.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have no plans to do so at present.

I am, however, awaiting advice from the Nature Conservancy Council, which is conducting a quinquennial review of the operation of schedule 5 to the Act. I expect to receive its advice next year.

Housing Associations

29. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what actions are being taken by his Department to improve the performances of housing associations.

Sir George Young: Under section 1(2) of the Housing Act 1974 the Housing Corporation is responsible for exercising supervision and control over registered housing associations and for promoting and assisting their development. The corporation carries out a regular programme of monitoring visits to ensure that associations are conducting their affairs properly and that committees of management are exercising adequate control. To help housing associations to improve their performance, the corporation lays down guidelines and procedures and provides financial support for training and development.

Housebuilding

30. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future increase in the housebuilding programme.

Mr. John Patten: It is not the practice of my Department to make forecasts of future levels of housebuilding.

Local Authority Housing

31. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the recent report of the Institute of Environmental Health Officers on the effects of mould growing in damp housing, a copy of which has been sent to him, he has any proposals to assist local authorities to perform their statutory duties under the Public Health Act.

Sir George Young: The Government's public expenditure plans allow for expenditure of £2,532 million by local authorities on housing in 1986-87, an increase of £200 million over the provision for 1985-86. The distribution of housing investment allocations to local authorities for 1986-87 is currently being considered in the light of consultations with the local authority associations.

39. Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes discussing with the local authority associations the report of his Department's "Inquiry into the Condition of the Local Authority Housing Stock in England 1985".

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 2 December 1985.

43. Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in response to his Department's "Inquiry into the Condition of the Local Authority Housing Stock in England 1985", published last month.

Sir George Young: The report of the inquiry has been generally welcomed as an important contribution towards a better understanding of local authority housing renovation problems. Preliminary discussions have already been held with the local authority associations and more will follow.

51. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses were started and completed in Leicester in 1979 and 1984, respectively.

Sir George Young: The numbers of housebuiling starts and completions reported by Leicester in 1979 and 1984 appear in issues 59 and 74 of "Local Housing Statistics"; copies are available in the Library.

Local Authorities (Secrecy)

32. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the level of secrecy in local government and in particular the practice of some councils of excluding opposition parties from council decision-making processes.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government believe it is important for local authorities to conduct their business as openly as possible. To this end the Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985 was fully supported by the Government and will be effective from 1 April 1986. In addition, the Widdicombe committee of inquiry into the conduct of local authority business is considering the need to clarify the status and role of party groups in local authority decision-taking; and to ensure the proper participation and accountability of individual elected members in the decision-taking process. My right hon. Friend expects to receive the committee's main report in the early part of next year.

Urban Programme

34. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimated cost of the urban programme in England for the current financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: We estimate that the cost in public expenditure for the urban programme in 1985-86 will be £335 million. Local authorities receive from central Government 75 per cent. of the cost of financing their urban programme expenditure.

Land Disposal

35. Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to accelerate the disposal of unused and underused land in the ownership of public bodies.

Mr. John Patten: We are continuing to encourage public bodies to dispose of their surplus underused land. My Department has regular contacts with owning bodies to discuss land holdings.

In addition, on 19 November my right hon. Friend directed the owners of 21 pieces of unused or underused land to dispose of their interest in the land within four months. The Government are determined to bring about more releases of land, by directing further disposals in future months.

We also see an important role for the private sector in speeding up the release of underused publicly owned land. On 7 June this year my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State invited private sector bodies to draw to his attention sites that are possible candidates for directions to dispose of the land. He also made the computerised data base, containing records of sites on the register, available to the public in May 1985.

Disused Factories (Demolition)

36. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what future assistance is to be given to local authorities for the demolition of disused factories and restoration of these sites.

Mr. John Patten: Aid is available in the form of derelict land, urban development and European regional development fund grants.

Sports Council

37. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the Sports Council to discuss the implications of the abolition of the metropolitan counties and the Greater London council.

Mr. Tracey: The implications for sport and recreation of the abolition of the metropolitan counties and the GLC have been taken into account in the 1986-87 grant-in-aid settlement for the Sports Council announced recently. I hold regular meetings with the chairman of the council to discuss important issues of this kind.

Derelict Land

38. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the acreage of derelict land in the Greater London council area; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The latest information available on the amount of derelict land in England is that contained in the 1982 survey of derelict land. This showed that at 1 April 1982 there were just over 3,900 acres of derelict land in Greater London.

47. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of reclaiming derelict land in the inner cities.

Sir George Young: Resources totalling £69·7 million were spent on derelict land reclamation in 1984-85. Nearly a quarter of this was spent in the inner cities. This year I expect nearly £82 million to be spent and the high priority given to the inner cities will be maintained. The importance that the Government attach to inner city reclamation will be emphasised in a circular to local authorities to be issued shortly.

South Africa (Rugby Tour)

40. Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to meet officials of the Rugby Union to discuss the forthcoming British Lions tour of South Africa.

Mr. Tracey: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlisle) on 3 December 1985.

Berkshire Structure Plan

41. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has yet received from Berkshire county council submissions in respect of the new Berkshire structure plan.

Mr. Tracey: No. I understand that Berkshire county council will be meeting on 17 December to reach decisions on its proposals and I hope that it will submit its replacement structure plan to me shortly after that.

Canary Wharf

42. Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to evaluate the impact of the Canary wharf development in the London enterprise zone on the social and economic life of east London and its strategic significance for Greater London.

Sir George Young: None, but the London Docklands Development Corporation is currently considering the economic and social implications of the scheme.

54. Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the claims of the sponsors of the Canary wharf project in respect of the number of jobs which the project will create; and how many of these jobs are likely to go to local people.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has made no such assessment, but the London Docklands Development Corporation is currently examining the employment implications of the scheme with the prospective developers.

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the costs and results of any feasibility studies by the London Docklands Development Corporation for the development of Canary wharf.

Sir George Young: The London Docklands Development Corporation has allocated £300,000 for a range of feasibility studies into proposals for the development of Canary wharf. It is not yet possible, however, to estimate the total cost of this work because the contribution of the interested bodies with whom the corporation is having discussions may expand the scope of these studies.

Rent Arrears

44. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to differential levels of rent arrears in local authorities in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker) on Monday 2 December.

The information on rent arrears in different local authorities will be placed in the Library when it is ready.

Water (Nitrate Pollution)

45. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications he has received from water authorities for exemptions from the maximum permissible levels of nitrate pollution; and how many of these applications he has approved.

Mr. John Patten: Fifty six applications have been received from water authorities and water companies for derogation in respect of the nitrate parameter under the EC directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption (80/778/EEC). In accordance with the policy on drinking water quality set out by my hon. Friend the member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow), on 23 July 1985, at columns 455-56, 54 of these have been approved, subject to a number of conditions.

Football Authorities

46. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what subjects he expects to discuss at his next meeting with representatives of the football authorities.

Mr. Tracey: I shall be meeting representatives of the Football Association tomorrow to discuss preparations for the World Cup finals in Mexico next year and the implications of the recent UEFA decision to allow England's participation in the European Nations' Cup in 1988. Discussions on other football-related issues will continue as necessary in my working groups on measures to combat hooliganism and on the financing of safety improvement work. The next meetings of these groups will be early in the new year.

Construction Industry

48. Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of unemployed construction workers.

Sir George Young: The collection of unemployment statistics classified by individual industries was discontinued in May 1982.

Liverpool City Council

49. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met councillors from Liverpool to discuss the city council's funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has not met the council to discuss its funding.

Homes Insulation Scheme

50. Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the existing criteria for eligibility for the homes insulation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The criteria for eligibility for the homes insulation scheme are kept under review. My right hon. Friend has no plans for altering eligibility at present.

Inner Urban Areas

52. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the provision of resources to inner urban areas in the light of the report of the Archbishop of Canterbury's commission on urban priority areas, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Sir George Young: The Government's policy is to continue to provide resources to secure lasting improvements in inner urban areas through a range of initiatives and programmes. These include the urban programme, which has doubled in real terms since 1978-79; urban development grant, which is attracting more than £300 million in private investment to inner areas, while creating or safeguarding 17,000 jobs; derelict land grant, which has doubled in real terms since 1979-80; the urban development corporations, which are transforming disused land and buildings and bringing in substantial private investment—over £1,000 million in the case of the London Docklands Development Corporation alone; and the setting up of enterprise zones. Local authorities' need to spend is reflected in the distribution of rate support grant. Other Departments' programmes are also relevant to the needs of inner urban areas.

Rate Support Grant

53. Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the efficiency of the current method of distributing rate support grant and controlling capital expenditure.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am generally content that the block grant system meets its present objectives. However, there is room for improvement in the overall arrangements for financing local government, and I am now looking at all the aspects of this.

I have repeatedly acknowledged that the present capital control system is not working as it should. The system is currently under review in consultation with the local authority associations.

I hope to publish our preferred options for the future of the local government finance system, including capital controls, at the turn of the year.

Nature Conservancy Council and Countryside Commission

55. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to support the work of the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government will make further substantial increases in their grants-in-aid next year to further their work in safeguarding the natural heritage. The NCC will receive £32·1 million, an increase of £9·3 million and the Countryside Commission £17·7 million, an increase of £2·4 million, subject in each case to the approval of Parliament.

Rural Communities

56. Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about the problems facing rural communities; and what steps he is taking to alleviate them.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my hon. Friend the Minister for Environment, Countryside and Local Government receive numerous representations from individuals and interested organisations about the problems facing rural communities. They also meet regularly the chairman of the Development Commission, Lord Vinson. The commission has a statutory duty to advise Ministers on all matters relating to the social and economic development of rural England and to carry out measures likely to further such development.

To this effect the commission concentrates its efforts in designated "Rural Development Areas" where need is greatest. In each of these areas rural development programmes have been drawn up at the request of the commission and form a co-ordinated plan of action for all the local agencies involved as well as providing the basis for the commission's own spending programmes. These include a major advance factory building programme, grants to convert redundant buildings to workshop or craft use and through its agency COSIRA a full range of advice and assistance to small firms. The main thrust of the commission's social policies is to guide and support voluntary activity in the countryside which will contribute to community development and self-help. It also operates schemes to facilitate the provision of low-cost housing, to improve village halls, and to support village shops and rural transport services.

In recognition of the value of the commission's work the Government have increased their grant-in-aid for this year by £4 million to £28 million and similar additional resources have been announced for next year.

Planning Regulations

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will amend planning regulations so that change of use applications are not needed for the conversion of retail shops into restaurants or fast food outlets.

Mr. Tracey: In reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key), my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 2 December at columns 55-56, that he was publishing for consultation a report by a sub-group of the Department's property advisory group on the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) Order 1972. We shall need to consider the comments of interested persons and bodies before reaching conclusions on the sub-group's detailed proposals for amending the order.

Development Applications (Consultation)

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the level of public consultation on matters of permitted development.

Mr. Tracey: Yes. The Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1977 grants permission for various forms of mostly minor development which are of such a character that they can be carried out without the need for specific planning permission or public consultation.

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the general development order to include greater public consultation for local authority applications.

Mr. Tracey: Article 3 and class XIII of the first schedule to the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1977 grant planning permission to local authorities to carry out various, mostly minor forms of development, including works on land belonging to or maintained by them, for the purposes of any of the functions exercised by them on that land. It is open to the local authority to decide that in a particular case public consultation would be desirable because of the nature of the development proposed.

Sheltered Accommodation (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the ratio of places available in sheltered accommodation in Portsmouth per 1,000 people aged 65 years and over in each year since 1979.

Sir George Young: The available data on sheltered accommodation are the numbers of dwellings within each authority's area in April, reported in the annual housing investment programme returns. The numbers of these dwellings, including housing associations' and privately owned dwellings, per 1,000 people aged 65 or more in Portsmouth are as follows:

April	Number
1979	25
1980	39
1981	40
1982	40
1983	56
1984	60

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many designations have been made by the Nature Conservancy Council since 1973 to establish or extend sites of special scientific interest; whether any requests for designation have been declined or modified and in which areas these were located; and what percentage of the total present site of special scientific interest acreage such refusals and modifications constitute.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that the information is not readily available in this form and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

To date the NCC has notified 2,356 sites in Great Britain under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; of these, 1,691 were previously notified under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949.

A further 2,445 were notified under the 1949 Act; of these, 53 have been denotified and the remainder await re-notification under the 1981 Act.

The 1981 Act requires the NCC to consider representations or objections from owners and occupiers of sites not previously notified under the 1949 Act. In a few cases, the boundaries of proposed sites have been modified as a result. Details of such cases are not available, but the NCC considers that the percentage of land so affected is very small.

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of total hill and upland acreages in Scotland are currently designated as sites of special scientific interest; and on what proportion of this acreage the owner or occupier may not undertake schemes of drainage, re-seeding or the planting of trees.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not available. Notification of a site of special scientific interest does not itself prevent an owner or occupier from undertaking activities of the kind described. However, if the activities are specified as potentially damaging operations in the notification, they may not be carried out unless the Nature Conservancy Council has been notified in writing and one of the conditions in section 28(6) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 has been fulfilled.

Local Authority Finance

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total borrowing outstanding in respect of each local authority as at 1 April 1985.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today placed in the Library a table showing the total borrowing outstanding at 31 March 1985 in respect of each local authority in England for which the information is available. The borrowing is defined as external debt administered by the authority, including debt administered on behalf of other local authorities and public bodies. The sources of the figures are in most cases the CIPFA questionnaire on capital expenditure and debt financing statistics for 1984-85 (for long-term borrowing) and the DOE borrowing and lending inquiry for March 1985 (for short-term borrowing). In cases where authorities have not returned the CIPFA questionnaire for 1984-85 figures have where possible been updated from the 1983-84 questionnaire using the DOE borrowing and lending inquiries for the intervening period.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to which local authorities have borrowings outstanding to foreign banks and as to the value in each case.

Mr. Waldegrave: Local authorities provide information in aggregate form on the extent of their borrowing from and repayments to overseas lenders. This information does not distinguish banks from other overseas bodies. Details of individual authorities' transactions of the sort are subject to commercial confidentiality.

Rural Development Areas

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the approximate total population of those parts of the rural development areas designated by the Development Commission which do not fall within assisted areas.

Mrs. Rumbold: Approximately 1·8 million, representing about 75 per cent. of the total population living in rural development areas.

New Town Corporations

Mr. Hawksley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will take steps to permit the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration to investigate complaints against new town corporations.

Mr. Tracey: As stated in the Government's White Paper, Cmnd. 9563, published in July of this year, legislation to amend the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967 will be introduced, in due course, to extend the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration to about 50 non-departmental public bodies—including new town corporations.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Straw and Stubble Burning

57. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the model byelaws on combating the ill-effects of straw and stubble burning.

Mrs. Fenner: There has been a further encouraging fall in the number of complaints received by and incidents reported to my Department on straw and stubble burning associated with the 1985 harvest.

Austrian Wine (Adulteration)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will explain why district councils were not kept fully informed by his Department on the adulteration of Austrian wine, when county councils were so informed.

Mrs. Fenner: Diethylene glycol is not a permitted additive to wine and its presence is therefore illegal. Trading standards officers of county councils thus had a responsibility to discharge and it was necessary to provide them with appropriate information. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services was advised that no acute health risk existed. No action by environmental health officers of district councils was necessary and they were so advised by telephone on 12 July 1985.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if applicants for hill livestock compensatory allowance will be entitled to receive both hill livestock compensatory allowance and Forestry Commission subsidy in respect of the same acreage under changes announced in his statement of 28 November; and if hill livestock compensatory allowance paid under this new provision will differ from payments made in respect of non-afforested land;

(2) if the fact that an applicant for hill livestock compensatory allowance has already received Forestry Commission subsidy will in any way be prejudicial to his application for hill livestock compensatory allowance made in respect of afforested land under the changes announced in his statement to the House of 28 November; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will give details of the rule changes to allow afforested land to be taken into account in hill livestock compensatory allowance applications referred to in his statement of 28 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: Amending regulations have been laid before Parliament in draft, which, if approved, will give effect to the changes in the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme that I announced on 28 November. In relation to afforestation, we propose that where a recipient of HLCAs converts part of his eligible land to forest on or after 1 January 1986, the afforested area shall be treated as if it were eligible land, for a maximum of 15 years, in calculating the total allowances payable within the financial ceilings laid down in the HLCA regulations. This will not affect the rates of allowance for eligible animals. However, as I said on 28 November, we will be introducing special checks to prevent over-grazing in the areas concerned.

The fact that a person has previously received Forestry Commission grants will not of itself prejudice an application for HLCAs, although land afforested prior to 1 January 1986 will not be taken into account in HCLA calculations. Furthermore, the fact that an area of land is taken into account for HCLA calculations will not affect eligibility for Forestry Commission grants in respect of this land.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the increase in real and cash terms, in hill livestock compensatory allowances payable in each year from 1980 to date in the original less-favoured areas and from their inception to date in the new less-favoured areas.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Research and Development

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he proposes to announce the savings in programmes within his responsibility referred to in his statement of 28 November.

Mr. Jopling: I and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland will be making appropriate statements shortly.

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by what amount he expects the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service income for the year 1985-86 to be reduced as a result of the exemptions announced in his statement of 28 November.

Mr. Jopling: On the basis of throughput in 1984-85, it is expected that revenue from charges for hay and silage analysis would fall by some £6,000 as a result of the suspension of these charges announced on 28 November.

SOCIAL SERVICES

No Smoking Campaign

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with the chairman of the Health Education council on the National Opinion Poll survey on the effectiveness of national no smoking day 1985.

Mr. Whitney: Discussions have taken place at official level.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of recipients of housing benefit in each year since 1979 and at the latest date for which this information is available.

Mr. Major: The information requested is in the table, which is broken down into rent rebates, rent allowances and rate rebates since information is not readily available on the numbers receiving help with both rent and rates.

Housing benefit was not fully introduced until 1983-84. For each year from 1979-80 and 1982-83 inclusive, therefore, the number of local authority tenants, private tenants and all householders in receipt of supplementary benefit has been included in the figures for rent rebates, rent allowances and rate rebates respectively.

Housing benefit (and supplementary benefit equivalent) caseloads 1979-80 to 1984-85

Great Britain: Thousands

Year	Rent rebate	Rent allowance	Rate rebate
1979-80	2,630	690	5,400
1980-81	2,840	710	5,800
1981-82	3,350	800	6,560
1982-83	3,540	860	6,590
1983-84	3,900	1,080	7,520
1984-85	3,810	1,060	7,290

Figures for 1984-85 are provisional and are subject to revision in the light of local authorities' final subsidy claims for that year.

NHS (Racial Discrimination)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence he has received as to racial discrimination in the provision of National Health Service facilities since 1981.

Mr. Hayhoe: Officials of my Department are currently making a short series of visits to discuss with health authorities, community health councils and community relations councils the provision of health services for ethnic minorities, and if there is any evidence of conscious or unconscious racial discrimination appropriate remedial action will then be considered.

Nursing Manpower

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has now finished his consideration of the report of the National Audit Office on nursing manpower which was published on 24 August; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I welcome the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General on the control of nursing manpower in the National Health Service, but, as the Accounting Officer was examined by the Public Accounts Committee on 2 December, it would be inappropriate for me to make a statement at present.

Benefit Payments (Staff Levels)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans to increase the level of staff, facilities and space at Department of Health and Social Security offices to enable benefits of increasing numbers of claimants to be dealt with more swiftly.

Mr. Major: A comprehensive review of the staffing requirement for DHSS local offices was started in October 1985 and results are expected to be available in the second half of 1986. Meantime, work loads and staffing levels will continue to be monitored quarterly in accordance with the established complementing system, a process which recently resulted in the addition of 733 posts. The provision of office facilities sufficient for the effective transaction of business remains an important objective within the limits of the funds available.

Benefits (Overpayments)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of unemployment, supplementary or other social benefits that have been wrongly calculated by Department of Health and Social Security offices during the past five years and the number of cases in which claimants have been required to pay back excess monies which have been paid out to them by mistake.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why there has been a reduction of some 10,000 in the number of posts in offices of the Department of Health and Social Security since 1979; what particular grades of the Department of Health and Social Security staffing have been most affected by this reduction; and if he will list the numbers of officers who have been employed at the social security offices at Molineux house, Temple street, Wolverhampton, in each single year since 1979.

Mr. Major: Staff employed in local offices of the Department numbered 65,027 in April 1979 and 62,687·5 in November 1985. Total departmental figures were 98,369 and 92,849. The Government's policy regarding Civil Service manpower is to maintain a staffing level commensurate with work requirements. The reduction in DHSS local office numbers reflects reduced work loads resulting from, among other items, the introduction of housing benefit and statutory sick pay and the introduction of postal claims forms for certain groups of supplementary benefit claimants. The effect of this reduction on particular grades in local offices is shown in the table:

Grade	1 April 1979	1 November 1985	Difference	Percentage difference

The local office at Molineux house, Temple street, Wolverhampton was not opened until January 1981. Staffing, grade by grade, is given in the table:

Child Benefit

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the levels of child benefit which have been paid out to claimants in each year since 1979 and the average number of people who have claimed them in each year during the same period from the offices of the Department of Health and Social Security in Wolverhampton.

Mr. Newton: Child benefit is administered centrally, and there is no information specific to Wolverhampton.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement outlining the conditions of entitlement for supplementary benefit as they apply to persons in further education and especially advanced education.

Mr. Newton: There are a number of conditions of entitlement for supplementary benefit which apply to all claimants. Where a student is excluded from benefit, it is likely to be because of the condition which requires able-bodied people under retirement age to be available for work. A student on a full-time course of further education, whether advanced or not, is unlikely to fulfil this condition in term times, though he may fulfil it and qualify for benefit in vacations. A student who is in a group not required to be available for work (for instance, single parents and some disabled people) is eligible for supplementary benefit throughout the year including term-times. A person who is studying part-time may qualify for supplementary benefit if he is available for work and is prepared to leave his studies should an opportunity for employment arise.

Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme

Mrs. Roe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to change the arm's length principle for transfer pricing in the new pharmaceutical price regulation scheme.

Mr. Hayhoe: This is one of the detailed matters which is currently being discussed with the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry as part of the negotiations on the renewal of the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme.

Surgeons

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to seek to increase the ratio of general surgeons per 100,000 population in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hayhoe: Draft regional strategic plans provide for increases in consultants in general surgery.

Family Practitioners

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the Green Paper on the family doctor service.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Green Paper on primary health care is now expected to be published in the new year.

Supplementary Benefit (Religious Closed Orders)

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if religious persons in closed orders are entitled to supplementary benefit; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the eligibility for supplementary benefit of nuns and monks following the change of rules in 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Members of religous orders who are not being fully maintained by their order are entitled to claim supplementary benefit in the normal way. There was no change in the law in 1984, but fresh guidance was issued to local offices. This reminded them of the possible eligibility for supplementary benefit of infirm monks or nuns who had been placed in nursing homes where the order lacked adequate facilities to care for them and provide the necessary financial support.

Pharmaceutical Investment

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures he has taken to seek to encourage United States pharmaceutical investment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hayhoe: The promotion of inward investment is primarily the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. So far as my Department is concerned, the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme is intended not only to provide that medicines are available to the National Health Service at reasonable prices but also to encourage the growth of a successful, research-based pharmaceutical industry in the United Kingdom. In negotiating the renewal of the scheme with the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry, we shall seek to maintain the attractiveness of this country for pharmaceutical investment by British, American and other companies.

Mid-Downs Health Authority

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the percentage increase in funding for the Mid-Downs health authority, by year, for each of the last five years.

Mr. Hayhoe: For the five years since the establishment of Mid-Downs as a health authority in 1982, the information is as follows:

1982-83 1·5 per cent. increase
1983-84 no increase
1984-85 no increase
1985-86 0·9 per cent. increase
1986-87 projected 0·9 per cent. increase

These represent cash increases. The real terms value of these additions was maintained by annual inflation increases.

Child Abuse

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the present incidence of child abuse; and what steps are being taken to make estimates of the incidence of child abuse more widely available.

Mr. Whitney: Local authorities which have the responsibility for protecting children from abuse keep records of the number of child victims in their area, but these are not collected centrally. The Department has issued guidance on the records that local authorities should keep, and will be reviewing that guidance through a consultative paper, on the procedures used to handle such cases, which should be issued early in the new year.

Child Care Law

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what representations he has received in response to his consultative paper on child care law; and when he intends to introduce legislation based on the proposals contained therein;

(2) whether he intends to introduce legislation based on the proposals contained in his recent consultative paper on child care law before a decision is taken on the introduction of a system of family courts.

Mr. Whitney: The report of the interdepartmental working party reviewing child care law was published in October as a consultative document on which comments were sought by 15 January. A decision on the next steps will be taken in the light of responses to the consultative document. The establishment of family courts is a separate issue and is for my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor and my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy on the prevention of child abuse; what funds are devoted to it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Our policy on the prevention of child abuse is that the interests of the child must come first and that the agencies, and their staff, concerned with child abuse must keep that as their main objective in working with children who have been abused or who are at risk. Successful prevention must depend largely on the knowledge and skill of professional staff, and their adherence to thorough and agreed local procedures for co-ordination and action. The Government already have in hand a programme of work to help prevent child abuse cases and improve their handling. This includes a review of child care law, of the procedures for handling abuse cases, and of inquiries that follow serious abuse cases; the development of better methods to review the situation of all children in care; and the use of the Department's social services inspectorate to improve the supervision and management of social workers involved in child abuse cases. It is, however, not practicable to identify and total the overall expenditure on activities that involve staff in the range of agencies involved in child abuse work.

Repatriation Assistance

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy with regard to the granting of assistance for the repatriation back to their country of origin of applicants who have had their supplementary benefit converted to special hardship allowance.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

NHS (Annual Report)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why he disclosed the contents of "The Health Service in England—Annual Report 1985", at a meeting of the Conservative Medical Society prior to its official publication; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: My right hon. Friend spoke to a meeting of the Conservative Medical Society about the developments in the Health Service, on the basis of figures first published in an NHS statistical bulletin and subsequently in the NHS annual report. The purpose was to set out the improved performance of the Health Service in a number of important areas. For example, in 1984 the NHS treated more patients than ever before. Over 1983, in-patient cases were up 159,000 to 6·2 million; day cases were up 90,000 to 903,000; new outpatient attendances were up 197,000 to 8·5 million; total outpatient attendances were up 523,000 to 37·0 million; total accident and emergency attendances were up 166,000 to 13·8 million.

Married Women's Pensions

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in ensuring payment of pensions to married women qualifying by the abolition of the half-test; what further steps he is taking to bring their entitlement to the attention of possible beneficiaries; and whether he will take action to overcome any possible unfairness arising from the way in which contributors were credited into the national insurance scheme in 1948.

Mr. Newton: I am glad to say that we have now identified, and awarded pensions to, some 20,000 of the 25,000 married women we estimate will benefit from the abolition of the half-test, including some 600 who are living overseas. I am grateful to the Department's staff who have achieved this.

We remain anxious to hear from those we have not been able to identify from our records. To this end, we have arranged for advertisements in the national press, women's magazines and publications for retired people; for posters in DHSS local offices, post offices, citizens advice bureaux and doctors' surgeries; and for a special leaflet to be available to those who inquire. We have also written to all British embassies and high commissions, asking them to take appropriate steps to seek to inform women living abroad who may have an entitlement. It is important that anyone who thinks she may be entitled to a pension as a result of this change should contact us before 22 December 1985, since benefits cannot normally be backdated more than a year.

No one who actually paid contributions can be disadvantaged by the transitional arrangements made in 1948, when existing contributors were credited into the new scheme by a system of credits whose number depended on a randomly allocated suffix to their national insurance number. There may, however, be a very small number of cases in which the marginal effects of these arrangements operate to prevent the award of a pension for which the number of credits, as distinct from actual contributions, is a crucial factor. I regret that there is no practicable way of identifying these cases, but we will consider sympathetically any which are brought to our attention.

DEFENCE

Footpath 43, Menwith with Darley

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he closed footpath 43 in the parish of Menwith with Darley; under what powers he acted; with which local authorities and bodies representing users of the footpath he consulted prior to acting; and what opportunity members of the public had to object to his action.

Mr. Stanley: Footpath 43 in the parish of Menwith with Darley was stopped up and reprovided in accordance with sections 16 and 17 of the Defence Act 1842 on 1 October 1985, after consultation with North Yorkshire county council. The Act makes no provision for representations from members of the public.

9 and 14 Signals Regiments

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men of 9 Signals Regiment have been posted to other units since 3 February 1984.

Mr. Stanley: According to our records of those serving in 9 Signals Regiment on 3 February 1984, 338.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many former members of 9 Signals Regiment have been discharged before completion of their engagement since 3 February 1984.

Mr. Stanley: According to our records, of those serving in 9 Signals Regiment on or after 3 February 1984, 83 have been discharged from that regiment before completion of their engagements.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many former members of 14 Signals Regiment have been discharged since 3 February 1984.

Mr. Stanley: According to our records, of those serving in 14 Signals Regiment on or after 3 February 1984, 81 have subsequently been discharged from that regiment.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many former members of 14 Signals Regiment have been discharged before completion of their engagement since 3 February 1984.

Mr. Stanley: According to our records, of those serving in 14 Signals Regiment on or after 3 February 1984, 50 have subsequently been discharged from that regiment before completing their engagements.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many former members of the 9 Signals Regiment have been discharged since 3 February 1984.

Mr. Stanley: According to our records, of those serving in 9 Signals Regiment on or after 3 February 1984, 121 have subsequently been discharged from that regiment.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many members or former members of 9 Signals Regiment are yet to be discharged before completion of their engagement.

Mr. Stanley: This information could not be provided in respect of all former members of 9 Signals Regiment, except at disproportionate cost. Of the current members of the regiment, two are in the process of being discharged from that regiment before completing their engagements, and applications for discharge from a further five are currently being considered.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many members or former members of 14 Signals Regiment are yet to be discharged before completion of their engagement.

Mr. Stanley: This information could not be provided in respect of all former members of 14 Signals Regiment except at disproportionate cost. Of the current members of the regiment, discharge before completing their engagements is currently being considered in two cases.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many former members of 9 Signals Regiment have been subjected to interrogation since 3 February 1984;

(2) how many service men currently serving with 9 Signals Regiment have been subjected to interrogation since 3 February 1984;

(3) how many service men currently serving with 14 Signals Regiment have been subjected to interrogation since 3 February 1984.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether (a) men of 9 Signals Regiment charged with destroying classified material, or (b) any other members of that regiment were searched upon leaving their place of work prior to 3 February 1984.

Mr. Stanley: It is not our practice to give details of our security precautions at defence establishments.

BARPLAN

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list those groups of ports in the United Kingdom for which there exist contingency plans analogous to the one contained in BARPLAN for Barry, Cardiff and Newport;

(2) whether the BARPLAN document takes into account the transition-to-war measures contained in the 1983 United States-United Kingdom lines of communication agreement;

(3) if he will describe the status of the BARPLAN document sent to certain officers working for South Glamorgan and Gwent county councils by the Royal Navy Flag Officer, Plymouth.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

RAF Houses (Maidenhead)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Defence for how long the 38 Royal Air Force-owned properties off Heywood Avenue, Woodlands Park, Maidenhead, have been unoccupied; why they have not been used since their last occupation by Royal Air Force personnel; what is the loss in revenue so far caused by the non-occupation of these properties; what are the present plans for the future use or disposal of all of these properties or any of them; and if he will make it his policy to use these properties to house, with or without security of tenure, families in need of accommodation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: After the last property was vacated in April this year, these houses were passed to the Property Services Agency for disposal; for this reason occupancy in the interim period has been impracticable, so that there has been no loss of revenue. Their design precludes individual sale and the estate will be put on the market as a single lot in the very near future. It is Ministry of Defence policy to allow local authorities to lease temporarily vacant property, subject to guarantees about maintenance and repossession: where property is substandard and surplus to requirements, however, such occupation would only impede disposal and would not be in the interests of homeless people.

Meteorological Office

Mr. Wiggin asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the net cost of the Meteorological Office during the financial year ended April 1985.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The net cost of the Meteorological Office in the financial year 1984-85 on a fully cost-accounted basis was £47·5 million, after taking into account receipts from repayment services amounting to £20·9 million.

Mr. Wiggin asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the Sharp-Hansford report on the Meteorological Office.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No, but I shall consider doing so as soon as decisions have been taken on the recommendations in the report.

Enriched Uranium (Capenhurst)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Defence for what market highly enriched uranium from the Capenhurst plant is being produced.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 29 November 1985, c. 705]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the enrichment plant mentioned in the then Secretary of State for Defence's statement in June 1982, at columns 128-29. This plant is entirely separate from the facilities used for the production of enriched uranium for civil purposes. It produces uranium enriched to an intermediate level, which, after further enrichment in the United States of America, will satisfy all the foreseeable United Kingdom defence requirements for highly enriched uranium.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Primary Schools (Curricula)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he proposes to issue guidelines to appropriate local education authorities about establishing curricula for primary schools in inner city areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government's White Paper "Better Schools" envisages all schools, including inner city schools, offering a curriculum which is broad, balanced, relevant and differentiated, within the framework of appropriate LEA policies. Her Majesty's Inspectorate is currently issuing a series of curriculum discussion documents which cover the age-range five to 16 and offer guidance about the design of the curriculum as a whole and in its parts, including such matters as differentiation of work to meet the range of ability to be found in schools.

16-plus Examination

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science which people from outside Her Majesty's Government have been responsible for advising Ministers of his Department about his plans for merit and distinction awards in the 16-plus examination.

Mr. Chris Patten: Some 390 responses, from individuals and bodies both within and outside the education service, were received to the consultation paper on GCSE distinction and merit certificates issued last December. In the light of these, revised proposals are to be brought forward for further consultation.

Research Grants

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of research grants which have been given by his Department to academic and scientific institutions during the last six years; and what this number represented as a proportion of the applications for research grants submitted to his Department during the same period.

Mr. Dunn: Information on this is published annually by the Department in "List 1: Current Educational Research Projects supported by the Department of Education and Science", and copies for the years 1979 to 1985 inclusive are available in the Library. The number of research grants awarded to academic and scientific institutions by the Department during the last six years totalled 430. Information as to what this number represented as a proportion of the applications for research grants submitted to the Department during the same period is not available.

Pupils (Midday Supervision)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent meeting between representatives of local education authorities and officials of his Department about proposed legislation on midday supervision.

Mr. Chris Patten: The meeting formed part of the Department's consultation with the local authority associations on the proposal to add to the schedule of purposes specified in the Education Support Grants Regulations as those for which education support grants may be paid. Draft regulations incorporating this amendment have now been laid before the House as the Education Support Grant Regulations (Amendment) (No. 2) Regulations 1985. As a result of the meeting, a draft addendum to circular 5/85 was issued to the local authority associations on 27 November seeking their further comments. Copies of the draft addendum are available in the Library.

"securing the supervision of pupils in schools at midday"

Mathematics and Modern Languages

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to improve facilities in secondary schools for the teaching of mathematics and modern languages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Arrangements for the teaching of mathematics and modern languages are the responsibility of the local education authorities and the schools themselves. The Department's architects and building group has published design advice on secondary school accommodation.

Disabled University Students

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to introduce a maintenance payment system for disabled university students to enable them to retain accommodation which they occupy as a result of their disability and to introduce an additional allowance to reimburse students who can supply satisfactory medical evidence of special dietary needs for vouched items of expenditure on diet incurred wholly by reason of those needs.

Mr. Walden: There are no plans to change the present arrangements, which provide for a disabled student to be reimbursed up to a specified sum additional expenditure incurred by reason of his disability and in respect of his attendance on a course.

Married University Students

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to increase the present level of allowances for university students who are married to take into account requirements for dependent families or relatives.

Mr. Walden: The allowances for students' dependants are increased each year to reflect the change in social security benefit rates to which they are directly related.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table giving pupil-teacher ratios in England and Wales for (i) primary schools and (ii) secondary schools in each year since 1979.

Mr. Dunn: The figures for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales. The pupil-teacher ratios for maintained primary and secondary schools in England since 1979 are as follows:

January of each year	Pupil-teacher ratio in Primary Schools	Pupil-teacher ratio in Secondary Schools
1979	23·1	16·7
1980	22·7	16·6

1983	22·3	16·5
1985	22·2	16·1

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table giving the pupil-teacher ratio in Hertfordshire for (i) primary schools and (ii) secondary schools in each year since 1979.

Mr. Dunn: The pupil-teacher ratios in maintained primary and secondary schools in Hertfordshire since 1979 are as follows:

January of each year	Pupil-teacher ratio in Primary Schools	Pupil-teacher ratio in Secondary Schools
1979	22·5	15·9
1980	22·3	16·0

1984	22·4	16·1

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table giving the pupil-teacher ratio in Buckinghamshire for (i) primary schools and (ii) secondary schools in each year since 1979.

Mr. Dunn: The pupil-teacher ratios in maintained primary and secondary schools in Buckinghamshire since 1979 are as follows:

January of each year	Pupil-teacher ratio in Primary Schools	Pupil-teacher ratio in Secondary Schools
1979	24·2	16·8
1980	23·8	16·5

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Post Office (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will raise with the chairman of the Post Office a request that both the English and Welsh languages should be treated as official languages for the purposes of addressing mail within Wales.

Mr. Pattie: No, this is a matter for the Post Office board.

Motor Car Industry

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why he does not distinguish between wage claims and wage settlements in describing the position of the United Kingdom motor car industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. and learned Friend makes the appropriate distinction between a wage claim for negotiation and a wage settlement which may be subsequently agreed as a result of negotiation.

Pharmaceutical Investment

Mrs. Roe asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he has taken to seek to encourage United States pharmaceutical investment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Morrison: Medical products and biotechnology are among the key industry sectors in the United States from which it is aimed to attract investors through the Department's Invest in Britain Bureau's major promotional campaign — Britain Means Business. In collaboration with the public and private sectors, the bureau is conducting this campaign in addition to its normal activities and draws attention to the undoubted attractions of the United Kingdom to foreign investors, not least of which is the favourable business climate created by this Government.

To coincide with the Biotech '85 exhibition in Washington in October the Invest in Britain Bureau organised a successful seminar "Biotechnology — the national habitat" attended by more than 20 corporate executives and representatives of the two trade associations covering this sector of the pharmaceutical industry.

As a result of the Government's earlier efforts to encourage United States pharmaceutical investment, Damon Biotech announced recently that it intended to set up a £30 million biotechnology manufacturing facility in Livingston, Scotland to provide 300 jobs over the next four years.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has had any representations from British firms in the export market regarding the implication for United Kingdom export prospects of the recent increase in commission charged by the Crown Suppliers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Hong Kong Festival

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, pursuant to the answer of 28 November, Official Report, column 626, he has at any time requested the West Midlands county council to keep his Department informed of any business which might have been generated by that council's mission to Hong Kong in autumn 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: No. As the mission was not officially sponsored, no such request was made.

Electricity (Resale)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is Her Majesty's Government's response to the report by the Director General of Fair Trading on the resale of electricity by landlords; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Government expect to deal with this subject not by making overcharging a separate criminal offence but as part of the proposed new legislation on misleading price indications announced in my predecessor's statement of 4 March to the House. When the necessary powers become available under that legislation, we expect to introduce an order requiring those who resell electricity to give itemised bills which include a statement showing the number of units charged for, the rates applied and the statutory maximum rate. The general provisions of that legislation, under which it would be a criminal offence to give a misleading price indication or to fail to comply with an order, would then apply to those bills and the information given in them. The present civil remedy would also continue to be available.

The electricity supply industry, with the agreement of the Government, has decided not to abolish the daily availability charge as recommended in the report but, instead, to rationalise it throughout the United Kingdom on the basis that the maximum any tenant pays through the daily availability charge will be no more than he would pay through the domestic standing charge if he were a standard direct credit customer of his electricity board. The industry has satisfied itself that this will be a fair arrangement for both tenants and landlords and expects to introduce this change in the next general round of tariff changes, probably in the spring of 1986. The arrangements for itemised bills will also embrace the daily availability charge.

I understand that many electricity boards are discussing with their area electricity consultative councils what steps should be taken with regard to the report's recommendation that there should be increased publicity for maximum resale prices. In some areas, discussions have already taken place and in others the subject will be included as part of the normal discussions regarding the next general round of tariff changes. The Government recognise that additional publicity will be necessary for the new powers which I have outlined today at the time they become available and will consider the form this should take in due course. The industry has however already informed the Government of its willingness to play its part by incorporating details of the new arrangements in its own leaflets, showroom notices and other advertisements about the maximum resale price of electricity.

Grants (Job Creation)

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to the answer of 2 December, if, in the light of his letter to each right hon. and hon. Member detailing grants related to jobs in each constituency, he will now publish the same information in the Official Report.

ENERGY

British Gas (External Financing Limit)

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on revisions to the British Gas Corporation's external financing limit for 1985-86.

Mr. Peter Walker: BGC's EFL for 1985-86 was published in Cmnd. 9428 as −£352 million. The figure had been agreed with the corporation in November 1984. In the early part of this year, exchange rates were markedly lower than had been assumed. The cost to BGC of its gas purchases is closely linked to exchange rates, albeit with some delay. Although the rates have since improved, the corporation's gas costs for 1985-86 are expected to be higher than had been forecast when the EFL was agreed. I have, therefore, decided it would be right to set a new EFL and have agreed with the corporation a figure of −£176 million, which takes into account offsetting savings made by BGC. BGC's negative EFL reflects the net cash generated by the business and is a cssh surplus, retained by the corporation, although it counts as negative public expenditure. The change in BGC's EFL from −£352 million to −£176 million will be charged to the reserve and therefore will not affect the public expenditure planning total.

Sellafield (Separation of Facilities)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to implement a full physical separation of civil and military facilities and activities at Sellafield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Amongst other conclusions, the final declaration of the non-proliferation treaty review Conference recommended

"consideration of separation of the civil and military facilities in the nuclear weapons states".

Her Majesty's Government are considering this recommendation.

Natural Gas

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has held any discussions with representatives of the Norwegian Government concerning the purchase of natural gas by the British Gas Corporation.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: My right hon. Friend and I meet the Norwegian Minister for Petroleum and Energy from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest in relation to both oil and gas on the United Kingdom and Norwegian continental shelves. The most recent meeting was at the Anglo-Norwegian Co-ordinating Committee in Oslo on 21 November which I attended.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Plastic Bullets

68. Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has issued guidelines to chief police officers on the use of plastic bullets.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Guidelines were issued to chief officers of police in 1981 when plastic baton rounds were first made available to forces in Great Britain. They cover the following points:

Baton rounds are to be used only with the express authority of the chief officer of police (or, in his absence, his deputy), under the direction and control of a senior officer whom he has designated as officer in charge, and by police officers who have been trained in the use of the equipment and know its characteristics.

Baton rounds are to be used only as a last resort where conventional methods of policing have been tried and failed, or must from the nature of the circumstances obtaining be unlikely to succeed if tried, and where the chief officer judges such action to be necessary because of the risk of loss of life or serious injury or widespread destruction of property. Wherever practicable, a public warning of their use is to be given.

Only baton rounds and riot guns of a type authorised by the Home Office may be used for these purposes. Nothing in the guidelines will affect the principle, to which section 3 of the Criminal Law Act 1967 gives effect, that only the minimum force necessary in the circumstances must be used. The degree of force justified will vary according to the circumstances of each case.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Reform

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements have been made for the future of the ecology section following the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Tracey: This is a matter for the borough councils; I understand that a report on the ecology unit is being prepared for the London co-ordinating committee.

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his intentions for the transfer at abolition of property owned by the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Tracey: Proposals for the making of orders under section 100 of the Local Government Act 1985 were issued for consultation in September in my Department's second property memorandum. This proposed that orders should be made on general principles, transferring land and other property according to the statutory purpose for which it was held on 16 July 1985. These principles were designed to ensure that property needed for the continuing provision of inherited services would pass immediately at abolition to the appropriate successor authority. Other property, including that for which the appropriate successor has not been identified, would pass initially to the residuary bodies.

My right hon. Friend has now considered the responses to his published proposals. He has concluded that, as a first step, it is essential that a general order, applicable in all the seven areas concerned, should be made as soon as possible. The order would be based on the general principles set out in the second memorandum. It would deal also with contractual and other rights and liabilities, proposals for which were set out in the third memorandum issued on 12 November.

In some areas, proposals have been put forward that virtually all property should pass directly to successor authorities at abolition. This would include the categories of land which the second memorandum proposed should go to the residuary bodies. The making of any initial general order on the lines now proposed will not rule out the bringing forward of further orders to meet more closely the wishes of successor authorities. However, before making such supplementary orders, my right hon. Friend would wish to be satisfied (a) that the arrangements would not prejudice third parties' interests; (b) that there is unanimous support for the proposals from all the boroughs and districts; and where appropriate other successor authorities in the area concerned, and agreement as to the arrangements for dealing with such matters as shared occupation and the distribution of the proceeds from the disposal of land; and (c) that the arrangements are acceptable to the residuary bodies in terms of access to property which they may require for their own purposes such as administrative buildings and computers.

My right hon. Friend will consider proposals put forward by successor authorities in any area in the light of these considerations, and where appropriate will make supplementary orders under section 100. If such an order cannot be made before abolition, he will give early consideration to proposals by the appropriate residuary body under section 67 of the Act, so that orders can, where appropriate, be made under that section for the early transfer of property to functional successor authorities.

By proceeding in this way we shall provide a clear statutory framework for dealing with property, rights and liabilities at abolition, if alternative arrangements as described above have not by then been made.

My right hon. Friend will shortly invite the local authority associations to let him have their views on a draft of the proposed general order. In addition, discussions will be held with residuary bodies and successor authorities in each area both about the implications of the general order, and about the handling of proposals for the making of further orders.

Cresswell Crags

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received relating to the implications for the archaeological heritage of the possible development of the Cresswell Crags site in Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: A planning application from the Severn-Trent water authority for improvements to a water reclamation plant near Cresswell Crags was publicly advertised in May this year. The local planning authorities received notices of objection from at least 100 individuals and organisations, while my right hon. Friend received representations against these proposals from the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Sir J. Osborn), from Sheffield university and from the chairman of the Council of Europe sub-committee on arts and architecture.

On the advice of the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission my right hon. Friend scheduled Cresswell Crags as an ancient monument on 29 July, and on 12 August served a direction on the local planning authorities withdrawing their powers to approve this development while he considered whether the application should be called in.

Further discussions are now taking place between the Severn-Trent water authority, the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission, the local planning authorities and other interested parties, which my right hon. Friend hopes will bring about an acceptable solution.

Woolwich Prison

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigation has been made into the extent of soil contamination at the site of the new Woolwich prison; and what steps have been taken to deal with the problem.

Sir George Young: The Property Services Agency commissioned reports from a specialist laboratory and from the environmental safety group of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, Harwell. In the light of the reports' recommendations, some limited areas heavily contaminated with metal were identified. The contamination will be disposed of under controlled conditions. The greater part of the site will then be covered with clean fill to varying depths of up to 1·5 metres. The necessary work is scheduled to begin early in 1986.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public dividend capital has been allocated to each of the nationalised industries for which he is responsible in each of the past five years.

Mrs. Rumbold: None.

Pollution

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received the 11th report of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today received this report and will be giving it detailed consideration. I intend to make a statement very soon about the Government's proposals for strengthening waste disposal legislation and I am pleased to have the opportunity to consider the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution's views before so doing. A full response to the wider issues addressed in the report will follow as soon as possible.

Guildhall, Dartmouth

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he hopes to decide on the restoration of the guildhall windows at Dartmouth, the application form for which was returned to the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission on 1 May; if he will explain why no reply has yet been sent and no decision yet given; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The distribution of grants for the repair of historic buildings and monuments are the responsibility of the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission rather than of my right hon. Friend. I understand that although an application for grant was made to the commission on 1 May, complete information on the costs of the repairs work and their design were not submitted until 5 September. The commission will inform the applicants of its decision shortly.

Old Battery, Dartmouth Castle

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why it has taken three years to conclude negotiations with the estate of the late Mr. King, the former lessee of the Old Battery at Dartmouth Castle, with regard to compensation; and what estimate he has made of the potential income lost as a result of the delay.

Mr. Tracey: These negotiations were complicated by the fact that there were four separate interests in the property that had to be reconciled. No estimate has been made of potential income lost during the negotiations.

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment for how long the Old Battery at Dartmouth Castle has been empty.

Mr. Tracey: Four years.

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in the Official Report the use envisaged for the Old Battery at Dartmouth Castle; and what steps he is taking to see the premises are re-let at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Tracey: The Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission plans to open the Old Battery to the public in an improved presentation of Dartmouth Castle as a whole. These plans will seek to provide better refreshment facilities and new lettings are being urgently negotiated.

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will consult Dartmouth town council about the future use of the Old Battery at Dartmouth Castle.

Mr. Tracey: The Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission will, I am informed, consult Dartmouth town council about its plans.

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the factors which have resulted in the Old Battery at Dartmouth Castle being unoccupied for three years since the death of the former lessee.

Mr. Tracey: The factors were as follows: first, the late Mr. King's landlord, the South Hams district council, chose not to renew their lease from the Crown Estates Commission in 1981 and instead asked the Secretary of State who had guardianship of the monument to renegotiate a new lease between the freeholder and Mr. King.

Secondly, Mr. King died in 1981 before terms could be agreed.

Thirdly, Mr. King's estate claimed a protected tenancy facility entitling them to a renewal of the sub-lease.

Fourthly, management under guardianship was transferred from the Department of the Environment to the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission.

Fifthly, the Commission's plans to improve presentation of the monument were delayed by protracted negotiations with Mr. King's estate on the surrender value of the sub-lease.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the eligible expense limits applicable to home improvement grants in the light of changes in the costs of building materials since these limits were last set; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The eligible expense limits are kept under regular review to take account of variable factors such as inflation. We have received few representations about their present level and have no plans to revise them in the immediate future.

Catering Equipment (Import Penetration)

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the findings of the surveys being carried out by the Crown Suppliers and the Property Services Agency into import penetration of commodities used in the catering equipment industry; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Property Services Agency seeks to assist British firms to compete more effectively in those product areas in which import penetration is particularly high. The agency has commissioned a study to assess the degree of and reasons for import penetration in the commercial catering equipment industry.

A report is expected in January 1986. Within the constraints of commercial confidentiality, any significant findings will be brought to the attention of British manufacturers.

Weedon Aqueduct

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the latest cost of repairing the aqueduct at High Street, Weedon.

Mr. John Patten: Current repairs of the aqueduct at Weedon are being undertaken by the British Waterways Board within its general budget for waterways operation about which we do not require specific information.

North Oxford Canal (Emergency Works)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the extent of the emergency works being carried out on the north Oxford canal between Brinklow and the Hawksbury junction in Warwickshire; what is the cost; and whether there is any casual relationship between these repair works and those carried out in the area where the M69 crosses the canal near Anstey in Warwickshire.

Mr. John Patten: Repairs to Nettlehill cutting on the north Oxford canal are to be undertaken by the British Waterways Board at an estimated cost of £500,000 over two winters and from the programme of backlog work requiring specific grant aid from my Department. However, the start of this work has had to be deferred until January to tie in with the repair programme elsewhere in the area. There is no connection between the work on the cutting and any nearby road works on the M69 at Anstey where it crosses the Oxford canal.

Municipal Housing (Repair Costs)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each housing authority the estimated cost of repairs referred to in his Department's recent report on local authority housing stock; and if he will place the full submission from each authority in the Library.

Mr. John Patten: The Department's inquiry was undertaken with the primary objective of obtaining a picture at the national level of the condition of the local authority housing stock; the returns were completed and analysed with that in mind. We are now considering, in consultation with the local authority associations, what further information might appropriately be released, beyond that already given in the stock condition inquiry report.

Local Government Act 1985

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will state the number of outstanding applications for consent under the Local Government Act 1985 submitted by the Greater Manchester county council; and how many have been outstanding for (a) less than one month, (b) less than two months and (c) more than three months;

(2) if he will state the number of outstanding applications for consent under the Local Government Act 1985 submitted by West Midlands county council; and how many have been outstanding for (a) less than one month, (b) less than two months and (c) more than three months;

(3) if he will state the number of outstanding applications for consent under the Local Government Act 1985 submitted by West Yorkshire county council; and how many have been outstanding for (a) less than one month, (b) between one and two months and (c) three months or more;

(4) if he will state the number of outstanding applications for consent under the Local Government Act 1985 submitted by Tyne and Wear county council; and how many have been outstanding for (a) less than one month, (b) less than two months and (c) three months or more;

(5) if he will state the number of outstanding applications made by the Merseyside county council for consent under the Local Government Act 1985; and how many have been outstanding for (a) less than one month, (b) less than two months and (c) more than three months;

(6) if he will state the number of outstanding applications for consent under the Local Government Act 1985 submitted by South Yorkshire county council; and how many have been outstanding for (a) less than one month, (b) between one and two months and (c) and for three months or more;

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the number of outstanding requests for consent under the Local Government Act 1985 submitted by the Greater London council; and how many have been outstanding for (a) a month or less, (b) two months or less and (c) three months or more.

Mr. Tracey: The position regarding outstanding applications for consent under sections 91 and 92 of the Local Government Act 1985 and section 9 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 as amended by section 95 of the 1985 Act is set out in the table below:

Authority	Number of applications outstanding
	One month or less	Between one and two months	Over three months	Total outstanding
Greater London council	61	34	101	208
Greater Manchester council	39	6	28	75

Asbestos Removal

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to announce a decision under section 95 of the Local Government Act 1985 relating to repair work and the removal of asbestos being carried out at the Emerald club, 263 Hammersmith road, for which he gave his consent under section 8 of the Local Government Act 1985 on 19 February.

Mr. Tracey: A decision on this proposed contract will be reached as soon as possible. In the meantime the council's attention has been drawn to the existence of a general consent for the carrying out of emergency work in certain circumstances.

Mineral Damaged Land

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to give his decision on a contract for the monitoring and evaluation of mineral damaged land for which the Greater London council applied on 5 June.

Mr. Tracey: Further consideration will be given to this application when the council responds to the Department's request for further information.

Water Authorities (Civil Defence Plans)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports or representations he has received from water authorities pursuant to his request in May 1983 that they drew up civil defence plans by mid-1985; and if he will place copies of those reports or representations in the Library.

Mr. John Patten: Water authorities have reported their progress at April 1985 on drawing up civil defence plans. They expect to complete this task by the end of the year or within the following six months. I do not intend to place copies of these reports in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Facsimile Document Transmission

Dr. Cunningham asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will arrange for facsimile document transmission facilities to be installed in the House of Commons for the use of hon. Members.

Mr. Biffen: I understand that facsimile document transmission facilities have been available in the Post Office in Central Lobby since 20 November 1985.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Holy Trinity Church, Paddington

Mr. Dicks asked the hon. Member for Wokingham as representing the Church Commissioners, how much the Church Commissioners received from the sale of the Holy Trinity Church site at Bishops Bridge Road, Paddington; and whether the valuation of the site was based on its future use for residential purposes.

Sir William van Straubenzee: To give the information requested in the first part of the question would be in breach of the commissioners' normal commercial practice; the answer to the second point is yes.

"Faith in the City"

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, what input was made by the Church commissioners into the recent report, "Faith in the City", commissioned by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Sir William van Straubenzee: The commissioners gave both written and oral evidence to the commission. I am arranging for a copy of their written submission to be placed in the Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Q130. Mr. Forth asked the Attorney-General if he will give the estimated costs over a full year of the proposed Crown prosecution service; if he has received any estimate of the cost of the alternative salary structure proposed by the representatives of the legal staff involved; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: The estimated costs over a full year of the proposed Crown prosecution service are £115 million. This includes the additional costs of about £1·7 million arising from the revised salary and grading structure, and the package of other terms and conditions of service, which I detailed in my answer to the hon. Member for Warwick and Leamington (Sir D. Smith) on 13 November 1985 at column 172. The most comprehensive proposals for a salary structure for lawyers have in fact been put forward by the Council of the Prosecuting solicitors' Society of England and Wales pursuant to a resolution passed at its annual conference. Although the society does not have formal negotiating rights, its proposals were of course carefully considered. They would have increased salary costs by a further £1·7 million. I am confident that the salary structure which will now be used in the Crown prosecution service will recruit and retain sufficient staff of the appropriate quality.

TRANSPORT

Thames Water (Mogden Works)

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department expects to receive a copy of the report of the consulting engineers who have been commissioned by the British Airports Authority and Thames Water to investigate alternative options for the treatment and disposal of the sludge from Thames water's Mogden works; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Ridley: A study of options for the release of the Perry Oaks sewage disposal site to Heathrow airport has been commissioned jointly by the British Airports Authority and the Thames water authority. It will be for these bodies to decide whether to publish the report, but in any event I expect them to make the findings public and shall make an announcement at the time.

British Rail (Modernisation)

Mr. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total value of the capital investment programme approved for British Rail in connection with its five-year rolling programme of modernisation of the locomotive and carriage fleet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The British Railways Board corporate plan 1985 records that over the next five years it is planning to invest £716 million in traction and rolling stock. The Government have already approved projects totalling some £340 million, which will provide more than 90 new locomotives and 1,130 new passenger vehicles.

North Sea Oil (Support Vessels)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state for the latest available date such information as he has on the numbers of oil supply boats, crane barges, diving support boats and stand-by boats operating under foreign flags in the Scottish jurisdictional sector of the North sea; if he will list these by country; and if he will give comparative figures for each of the last five years.

Mr. Ridley: There is no Scottish jurisdictional sector in the North sea but the information for the United Kingdom sector is not available.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the number of oil supply boats, crane barges, diving support boats and stand-by boats operating under the United Kingdom flag in each of the continental shelf zones in the North sea belonging to Norway, Denmark, West Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands and France; and what are the comparable figures for each of the last five years.

Mr. Ridley: This information is not available.

Drivers (Testing)

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider establishing a post-test probationary period for drivers, during which a driver's maximum speed is limited to 50 miles per hour; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I have already considered introducing a probationary scheme for newly qualified drivers. Schemes in various countries have been examined including those involving a speed limit. But there is no clear evidence of road safety benefits.

It is an idea we shall continue to look at in the light of current evidence of any benefits which it might offer for road safety.

Motorway (Accident Statistics)

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents there have been involving loss of life on motorways in each of the past five years; and what information he has as to how many involved drivers of less than one year's post-test experience.

Mrs. Chalker: Information on fatal accidents on motorways in Great Britain is given in table 4 of "Road Accidents Great Britain 1984", a copy of which is in the Library. No information is recorded about the driving experience of those involved in road accidents.

Woolwhich Ferry (Traffic Forecasts)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the number of vehicles he expects to use the Woolwich ferry in the year 1986; and how many such vehicles originate or are destined for the London boroughs of Newham and Greenwich.

Mrs. Chalker: I do not have a forecast for vehicles using the Woolwich ferry in 1986, but an origin and destination survey carried out in 1984 indicated that at that time some 3,500 vehicles used the ferry on an average weekday. Of these, four fifths had origins or destinations outside Newham and Greenwich, with a fifth having both origins and destinations in those two boroughs.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the mileage of trunk roads for which he is responsible in the London boroughs of Newham and Greenwich, respectively, and the sums he has expended on capital or maintenance purposes for these roads in each borough.

Mrs. Chalker: There are 5·5 km of existing trunk roads in Newham. During 1984-5, about £275,000 was spent on their maintenance. Contracts have recently been let to construct the A406 South Woodford to Barking relief road, some 2 km of which lies within Newham.

There are no trunk roads in Greenwich.

M20 (Maidstone-Ashford)

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Transport if work on the Maidstone to Ashford section of the M20 is proceeding to schedule; and when it will be completed.

Mrs. Chalker: Draft orders for an interchange and the remaining alterations to side roads will be published on 6 December. The publication of the draft compulsory purchase orders will follow in the new year. Subject to the satisfactory completion of the remaining statutory procedures we are still on schedule to start construction in 1987 for completion in 1989.

M1 Motorway

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) on how many occasions closed circuit television cameras have been installed on the M1 between London and Wakefield; when they were installed; for what period of time they were used; for what specific purposes they were operated; when, in each case, they became inoperative; when they were removed; and what was the entire cost of the various operations in manpower and equipment;

(2) pursuant to the answer of 28 November, Official Report, column 670, on what date and for what reasons the closed circuit televison cameras were removed from the M1 motorway; why the supporting brackets were not removed with the cameras; when the brackets will be recovered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Temporary closed circuit television cameras have been used on several occasions for roadworks on the M1 motorway. They are operational during the critical period of the work for the purpose of aiding traffic management and deployment of emergency services. They are an integral part of the roadwork schemes and the costs and manpower involved are therefore not separately available.

They were in use on the M1 motorway for the roadworks at junction 14 during October 1985. They ceased operation on 4 November and were subsequently removed. Supporting brackets were removed from lamp columns at the same time but a small number mounted on special posts remain in position to await their re-deployment to a future roadworks site.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of unlit motorway exist on the M1 between London and Wakefield; which sections are unlit; and if he will identify the various authorities responsible for those sections.

Mr. Ridley: There are 104 miles of unlit motorway on the M1 between London and junction 39.

The following sections are unlit:

Newport Pagnell service area to junction 16.
Junction 17 to junction 24, except for a short section at junction 21.
Junction 26 to junction 39.

I am, as Secretary of State, the highway authority.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what tests were carried out on the highway drainage system on the M1 motorway in July between Leeds and Wakefield;

(2) what tests were carried out on the highway drainage system on the M1 motorway in June 1983 and December 1983 between Leeds and Wakefield.

Mr. Ridley: In June 1983, following mining subsidence on the M1 motorway just south of junction 41, inspections of the drainage using closed circuit television were carried out. At the same time, the levels of the drains were surveyed. As a result of these inspections, the drainage was reconstructed, between December 1983 and March 1984. The reconstructed drains were air-tested on completion, and inspected visually in July 1985, when they were found to be satisfactory.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport what type of drainage was installed on the M1 motorway between Leeds and Wakefield when it was constructed; and what frequency of inspection is carried out to ensure safety on the M1 carriageway and surrounding areas.

Mr. Ridley: When the M1 motorway between Leeds and Wakefield was constructed, the drainage system installed consisted mainly of gullies and sealed pipes leading to drainage outfalls. The gullies are inspected visually once a week, and if any ponding is observed, or if a complaint has been received, more detailed investigations are put in hand.

GLC (Taxicard Scheme)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of the failure by the London boroughs to reach an agreement on the scheme, he will now take steps to guarantee the future of the Greater London council taxicard service.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. My understanding is that the London boroughs, through the London co-ordinating committee, are continuing to work towards an agreement. We have repeatedly made clear the Government's view that the funding of concessionary travel, including Taxicard, is a matter for the local authorities.

Long Haul Flights (Route Licences)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in granting route licences for long haul flights, the Civil Aviation Authority imposes any conditions regarding the use of two-man crews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The crew composition is determined by the CAA certification standards of the aircraft and by flight time limitations, not by the conditions of route licences.

Both the CAA and the flight time limitations board are considering whether special rules are required for long-range two crew operations.

Helicopter Pilots

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the Civil Aviation Authority study of the working environment of North sea helicopter pilots is due to commence; what are its terms of reference; and what information he has as to when it will be completed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Civil Aviation Authority study of the working environment of North sea helicopter pilots is due to commence in January 1986 and is expected to be completed by the end of the year.

The CAA tells me that the study, which also involves Southampton university and the Institute of Aviation Medicine, will investigate the fatigue factors in North sea rotary wing operations. The terms of reference cover the noise, vibration and temperatures to which pilots are exposed in the course of their work.

Aircraft (Smoke Hoods)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if the Civil Aviation Authority has made any studies of the stowage and use of smoke hoods on board aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Safety matters are the statutory responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority and not of my right hon. Friend. The CAA has made a study and I understand that smoke hoods are commercially available which would enable cabin crew to fight in-flight fires. These types of hood are bulky and special training is needed in their use. They are not suitable for passengers.

From time to time, the CAA reviews the availability of devices which would be effective for passenger protection.

Aircraft (Halon Gas Flooding)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if the Civil Aviation Authority has made any studies of halon gas flooding on civil passenger aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Aviation safety matters are the statutory responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority, not of my right hon. Friend.

I understand that the Civil Aviation Authority is aware of the tests carried out by the US Federal Avaiation Adminstration on the use of halon 1301 gas, and the conclusion is that it does not offer an effective system for a typical post crash fire.

Seat Belts

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will respond to the recommendations made by the independent assessors commissioned by his Department in their report of the effects of compulsory seat belt wearing; and if he intends to publish a supplementary report.

Mrs. Chalker: I accept the recommendations. Durbin and Harvey's further study confirms the analyses contained in the main study report. I have placed copies of our response to the recommedations and the results of the supplementary study in the Library.

Oil Spillage (Report)

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish the report of the counter-pollution measures taken following a spill of oil from the Bridgeness, after the vessel grounded off the Pembrokshire coast on 16 June.

Mr. Ridley: The report is being published today. It gives an account of the action taken by my Department's marine pollution control unit and explains the limitations of at-sea clean-up techniques in dealing with the type of oil split on this occasion. A copy of the report will be placed in the Library of the House.

WALES

Hotel and Catering Industries

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many young people were employed in youth training schemes in the hotel and catering industries in Wales during November.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information requested is not available. However, the latest statistics show that from April to the end of September 1985 there were 253 youth training scheme entrants in the hotel and catering industries in Wales.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many vacancies were notified to the jobcentres in Wales during the month of November in the hotel and catering industries; and how many of these vacancies remain unfilled.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The number of vacancies notified to jobcentres in Wales during the quarter 5 August to 8 November in the hotel and catering industries was 3,911. The number of unfilled vacancies at 8 November in the hotel and catering industries was 758.

Housing (Financial Allocations)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of financial allocations for housing in Wales in 1986-87.

Mr. Mark Robinson: My right hon. Friend is making available to local authorities housing allocations totalling £141·3 million, an increase of almost 30 per cent. over this year's figure of £109·5 million. The allocatable total may be supplemented by individual authorities' use of the prescribed proportion of receipts which remain unchanged from 1985-86. This is a significant increase in the resources available for housing in Wales. Special allocations will be made to local authorities to help them to renovate the worst of the council housing stock and to reduce the backlog of renovation grant applications. In addition allocations will be made to encourage the repair of whole terraces or groups of houses, and to meet bids in full for expenditure under the Housing Defects Act. Special allocations will also be made under the priority estates programme, whose aim is to bring improved management to some of the most difficult council estates.

Furthermore, net provision for the Housing Corporation has been increased by almost 15 per cent. to £44·7 million thus recognising the vital role that the housing associations play, both in renovating the older stock and in providing new homes.

Copies of individual local authority housing strategy and investment programme bids and letters notifying them of their individual allocations will be placed in the Library.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia (Food Aid)

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he takes to ensure that grain given as food aid to Ethiopia reaches the people for whom it is intended; and if he is satisfied that it always does so.

Mr. Raison: We do all we can to ensure that food aid reaches its intended destination. Following standard practice the Ethiopian Government, through which most of our food aid passes, provides the world food programme (WFP), acting for the British Government in this case, with facilities to monitor, transport, storage and distribution of food aid. The WFP fulfils this obligation through a network of food monitors, including two from the United Kingdom who are financed by my Department. The remainder of our food aid passes through voluntary organisations which organise and monitor its distribution on our behalf. Although there may be occasional lapses, I am in general satisfied with the reports I receive.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Proportional Representation

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will seek to introduce proportional representation for Westminster elections for Northern Ireland constituencies.

Mr. Scott: No. The Government remain of the view that all Members of the United Kingdom Parliament should be elected on the same basis.

Hotel and Catering Industries

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many young people were employed in youth training schemes in the hotel and catering industries in Northern Ireland during November.

Dr. Boyson: An estimated 350.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many vacancies were notified to the jobcentres in Northern Ireland during the month of November in the hotel and catering industries; and how many of these vacancies remain unfilled.

Dr. Boyson: One hundred and eighty notified; 96 remain unfilled.

Hospital Development

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the hospital development schemes costing over £5 million in Northern Ireland (a) completed since May 1979 and (b) started since May 1979, giving for each the health and social services board, the number of beds involved, the completion date and the cost.

Mr. Needham [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1985, c. 46]: The hospital development schemes are as follows:

Project	Board	Start date	Completion date	Cost £ million	Number of beds
(a) Completed since 1979
Daisyhill hospital stage II	Southern	November 1973	March 1980	5·9	220
Belfast city hospital tower block	Eastern	1971	February 1984	69·5	583
(b) Started since 1979
Altnagelvin hospital, Londonderry	Western	November 1980	August 1988	8·5	78

HOME DEPARTMENT

British Broadcasting Corporation

13. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has discussed the Peat Marwick Mitchell and Co. management review with the chairman of the British Broadcasting Corporation board of governors.

Mr. Hurd: While considering the BBC's application last year for an increase in the television licence fees, the then Home Secretary discussed a number of matters relevant to the application, including the Peat Marwick Mitchell report on possible efficiency savings, with the chairman of the BBC's board of governors.

28. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed television programming with the director-general of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Hurd: I have not yet done so since becoming Home Secretary.

Criminal Statistics

15. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of recorded notifiable offences were cleared up by the police in the Metropolitan police district in 1979 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Giles Shaw: 108,907, or 21 per cent., of recorded notifiable offences were cleared up by the police in the Metropolitan police district in 1979 and, 119,565, or 17 per cent. in 1984.

29. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juvenile offenders received youth custody sentences in 1984; and by what percentage this exceeded the number who received borstal sentences in 1982.

Mr. Mellor: Detailed statistics of sentencing are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales". Statistics of sentencing for indictable offences are presented in chapter 7 of the 1984 issue (Cmnd. 9621) and table 7.16 gives the relevant figures. Statistics of sentencing of juveniles for all offences are given in the "Supplementary Tables", in volume 1, table S1.1(C), for magistrates' courts and in volume 2, table S1.2(C), for the Crown court. 2,300 persons aged 14 and under 17 were sentenced to youth custody in 1984, 50 per cent. more than were sentenced to borstal training in 1982.

30. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of all offenders released from youth custody centres and what proportion of juvenile offenders are reconvicted within two years.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information on juveniles and young adults reconvicted within two years of discharge from prison department establishments is published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales". (Information about those discharged in 1981 is given in tables 8(e), 8.4 and 8.5 of the latest issue for 1984, Cmnd. 9622). Figures for youth custody trainees are not yet available.

31. Mr. Guy Barnett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the absolute and percentage increase in the number of offences of robbery recorded by the police between 1979 and 1984.

Mr. Mellor: The number of offences of robbery recorded by the police increased by 12,400 or 99 per cent. between 1979 and 1984. Statistics of offences recorded by the police are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", and figures for recorded offences of robbery are given in table 2.10 of the latest issue for 1984 (Cmnd. 9621).

33. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of untried and unsentenced prisoners in England and Wales at the most recent convenient date; and by what percentage this has risen since the same date in 1984.

Mr. Mellor: On 31 October 1985, about 9,700 untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners were in prison department establishments in England and Wales, an increase of 2 per cent. compared with a year earlier.

42. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of untried and unsentenced prisoners in England and Wales at the most recent convenient date; and by what percentage this has risen since the same date in 1979.

Mr. Mellor: On 31 October 1985, about 9,700 untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners were in prison department establishments in England and Wales, an increase of 48 per cent. compared with 31 October 1979.

45. Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is recorded by his Department on the age, sex, residence and occupation of victims of crime.

Mr. Mellor: Information on individual victims of crime is not regularly collected centrally except in respect of victims of homicide. However, it is the usual practice of police forces to record the addresses of victims, and about half of all police forces regularly record their age and sex, but not, I believe, their occupations. The Department has recently carried out an ad hoc survey of such information for those forces that record it, and in due course the main results will be published.

More information is however collected in the British crime survey, which has been published.

73. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what use he makes of the criminal statistics as an index of the actual amount of crime at any time.

Mr. Mellor: The statistics published in "Criminal Statistics" provide a measure of the amount of crime as recorded by the police. They therefore do not provide a full picture of the amount of crime committed, and are supplemented by other relevant data, in particular the results of the British crime surveys.

Inner Cities

17. Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many major inner city disturbances occurred in each year from 1974 to date.

Mr. Hurd: There was one major inner-city disturbance in 1980, five in 1981 and four in 1985. There were no comparable instances of public disorder in the other years.

38. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his general policy towards policing of inner cities.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The policing of inner cities is a matter for chief officers. The essential features are that police officers should know the area which they police and understand those whom they serve and protect. Effective consultative procedures and training tailored to the realities in the inner cities are essential if the law is to be upheld and trust is to be maintained between the police and the community.

Shops Bill

19. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the number of representations he has received from members of the public and interested parties for and against the shopping on Sundays proposals contained in the Shops Bill [Lords] since the Bill was published.

Mr. Waddington: We have received 6,664 representations opposed to the Shops Bill [Lords] since its publication, and 24 in favour.

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has made any study of the additional costs and responsibilities for the police as a result of an extension of Sunday trading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The Association of Chief Police Officers has been consulted, but until the extent of any increase in trading can be assessed it is not possible to make any more precise estimate of these matters than is contained in the report of the Auld committee (paragraph 176 et seq).

Crime Prevention

20. Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans for further measures for crime prevention.

Mr. Hurd: Measures recently announced include the introduction of local crime prevention projects in five areas and the further development of crime prevention activity funded through the community programme. The Home Office Standing Conference on Crime Prevention is considering how best to implement the various recommendations contained in the recently published reports of its three working groups on car security, residential burglary, and revised guidelines for crime prevention panels. On 20 November I announced that the Prime Minister is to chair a crime prevention seminar in January involving representatives from key industries and organisations, which will take stock of progress so far and consider future measures.

34. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much additional finance has been made available by central Government to implement the recommendations of his Department's circular No. 8/1984 on crime prevention.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As circular 8/1984 pointed out, much crime prevention activity does not so much require new money, but rather a re-allocation of existing resources. However, the Government provide considerable funds for crime prevention projects in a number of ways, for example, through the Department of the Environment's urban programme and the Department of Health and Social Security's intermediate treatment programme. As part of the expansion of the community programme a substantial number of places are now available for crime prevention projects. The Home Office is also meeting the salary cost (£175,000) of the co-ordinators supporting the five local crime prevention projects announced by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 3 October.

43. Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to make any recommendations to the Metropolitan police on crime prevention and police efficiency as a result of the report issued by the National Institute of Economic and Social Research entitled, "Spending on Law and Order", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have read this report with interest. Its observations will be taken into account in developing policies for improving the efficient and effective use of police resources.

61. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his planned initiatives on the prevention of crime.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The existence of a strong and efficient police service, which the Government have done much to create, is essential to the development of good crime prevention practice. But commitment by the police alone is not sufficient and we are therefore working to extend the scope of crime prevention activity at local level and engage the support and co-operation of all sections of the community. To this end, my right hon. Friend has recently announced the local crime prevention initiative in five areas, which is designed to generate public confidence that crime and the fear of crime can be reduced by local preventive action. The inclusion of crime prevention as a central theme within the recently expanded community programme is another example of the Government's efforts to stimulate local preventive measures. We also devote considerable resources to crime prevention publicity, to training, to research and to dissemination of good practice.

Immigration

21. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next intends to meet the chief inspector of immigration concerning the correspondence from hon. Members on immigration matters.

Mr. Waddington: My right hon. Friend and I meet senior officials of the immigration and nationality department, including the chief inspector of the immigration service, as often as the conduct of public business requires. Correspondence from hon. and right hon. Members is one of the subjects which is discussed on some of these occasions.

SCOPE Report

22. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration the Government have given to the SCOPE report and its implications for civil defence planning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that the report by the International Scientific Committee on Problems of the Environment is due to be published in its final form later this year. We will consider its findings and their implications for civil defence planning very carefully.

Police Policy

23. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications for his police policy of the conclusions in the final report of the "Merseyside Crime and Police Survey", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This report was commissioned as a local survey of crime and policing in Merseyside and, although valuable in its context, I would not consider it appropriate to seek to apply its conclusions more generally.

Visas

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce a visa scheme for those wishing to visit the United Kingdom from outside the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The nationals of certain countries already need visas whenever they come to the United Kingdom. All immigration control arrangements, including the extent of visa requirements, are kept under continuous re-examination in the light of changing patterns of travel and traffic.

Civil Defence

25. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute an inquiry into the feasibility of a long-term civil defence programme of adapting existing buildings and incorporating shelters in new construction.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Under the current Civil Defence Regulations, local authorities are already required to plan for the adaptation of existing buildings and other structures as public shelters. To assist them undertake this substantial task the Home Office plans to establish pilot studies with the object of developing a suitable methodology. Simultaneously, as part of a continuing research programme, investigations will be maintained into shelter design, including low-cost means of adapting existing buildings for shelter.

26. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what improvements have been made to the Civil Defence college library.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The library's budget was almost doubled last year, to £3,000, and the hours when it is staffed during the week increased from 22 to 29½.

32. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to issue guidance on planning for a wartime rescue service.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This matter is under active consideration and we hope to issue guidance early next year.

39. Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidelines to local authorities on the adoption of the international civil defence insignia and identity card laid down in the Geneva convention.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Adoption of this symbol is one of the requirements of the protocols added in 1977 to the 1949 Geneva convention. Although these have not yet been ratified by Her Majesty's Government, we have agreed with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs that the Government should nevertheless adopt the symbol. Appropriate guidance will be issued accordingly.

46. Mr. Dover asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he hopes to release his new information booklet and film on civil defence; and what the costs will be.

69. Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he hopes to release his new film and information booklet on civil defence; and what the costs will be in each case.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I expect the film to be available around the middle of next year. One hundred thousand pounds has been allocated for its production. Printed public information material should be available at the same time, but no estimate of costs has yet been made.

50. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he hopes to have his information package on the police role in war available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is hoped to have this material ready early next year. It is intended primarily for the use of police officers in explaining the police role to civil defence volunteers.

54. Mr. Lewis Stevens asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much of the civil defence research programme has been undertaken outside of his Department during the financial years 1984-85 and 1985-86, by subject agencies, and costs.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Total extramural civil defence expenditure in 1984-85 was £178,235 and for 1985-86 is estimated to be £719,000. The details are as follows:

Subject	1984-85 £	1985-86 £
Improvised shelter studies	74,845	678,978
EMP effects	22,746	—
Radiation detection equipment	72,147	—
Training material	8,397	5,000
Warning and monitoring	—	35,000

55. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to issue training material for civil defence volunteers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is hoped that the bulk will be ready for issue next spring.

57. Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to seek to ensure that staff at the Civil Defence college understand the inner workings of local authorities.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Civil Defence college staff at all levels are in regular contact with the many local authority members and officials who attend courses at the college, and through the Civil Defence college liaison committee.

59. Mr. Andrew Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make his first regular report to the House on local authority civil defence performance.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Local authorities have been asked to complete plans under the 1983 regulations by the end of the year. We shall take stock in the light of those plans and prepare a staged programme for further action and shall report to the House at that point.

60. Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidelines to local authorities for the preparation of evacuation plans for the civil population living close to major service establishments, similar to the plans required by the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. Whilst the Government recognise that there are some common elements in planning localised evacuations whether in peacetime or war, they have no present plans for adding to existing guidance on the basis proposed.

63. Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to develop the work of the Civil Defence college.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The role and work of the college is currently being reviewed in the light of recent and likely future developments in civil defence policy and planning. The aim is principally to identify improvements in course arrangements, teaching content and, where practicable, facilities.

Identity Cards

27. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to introduce an identity card in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Government have no proposals to introduce identity cards in the United Kingdom.

Buses and Lorries (Speeding Offences)

35. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will examine ways of using evidence from tachographs to prosecute drivers of buses and lorries for speeding.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The evidence needed to support prosecutions for speeding is a matter for chief officers of police, who already have the technical assistance of speed detection devices.

Arrested Persons (Tottenham)

36. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied that all those young persons arrested and taken to the police station for questioning following the violence in Tottenham on 6 October last were given full advice as to their statutory rights and were accorded full access to solicitors, parents or friends within the time prescribed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Section 62 of the Criminal Law Act 1977 entitled an arrested person to have someone informed of his arrest, with no more delay than is necessary in the interest of the investigation or prevention of crime or the apprehension of offenders. There are no other relevant statutory requirements. Informal arrangements to operate some of the provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act and its associated codes of practice which will come into effect on 1 January 1986 in advance of that date have no statutory authority. If any of those arrested believes he was mistreated by the police in any way, it is open to him to make a formal complaint to the Commissioner, who will cause the matter to be investigated in accordance with the statutory requirements.

Crime and Deprivation

37. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has made any studies of the possibility of a correlation between the levels of crime in inner city areas and levels of unemployment and deprivation.

Mr. Mellor: Extensive research has not demonstrated a clear link between levels of unemployment and recorded crime. The latest British crime survey showed that inner city areas experienced a much higher rate of crime and vandalism, but there is no evidence to suggest that poor physical conditions in themselves contribute to greater criminality.

Murder (Penalty)

40. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to alter the fixed penalty for murder.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Thames Valley Police

41. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received any proposals for a further increase in the establishment of Thames Valley police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Thames Valley police authority has recently applied for an increase of 200 additional police posts in the authorised establishment of the force. We shall give careful consideration to the application in the light of advice from Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary.

Extradition

44. Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress made towards reform of the law and practice of extradition.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend intends to publish proposals on extradition and other criminal justice legislation early in the new year.

Television Licence Fee

47. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the resources currently available to detect the evasion of the television licence fee.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Consideration is now being given, in the light of recommendations made by independent consultants appointed to examine the present television licence collection and enforcement procedures employed by the Post Office, to the resources committed to detecting evasion and to their more efficient and effective use.

Probation Service

48. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many senior probation officers were employed in England and Wales in each of the years from 1980 to 1985; whether he has any proposals for the expansion of the probation service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The numbers of senior probation officers in England and Wales at 31 December in each of the years 1980 to 1984 and at 30 June 1985 were as follows. The Government provisionally plan for growth of about 1 per cent. in the probation service in 1986-87 to enable it to respond to an expected increase in its work load.

Numbers of Senior Probation Officers

	Numbers
31 December 1980	957
31 December 1981	966
31 December 1982	980
31 December 1983	1,020
31 December 1984	1,031
30 June 1985	1,038

Bodies (Forensic Identification)

49. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the new techniques developed at Leicester university for forensic identification of bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: These techniques enable parts of the genetic sequence of deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) isolated from human tissue or blood to be analysed in detail. The probability that two people exhibit the same genetic sequence is so remote that the sequence can be regarded as unique to an individual (other than an identical twin) and can therefore be used for identification purposes (the DNA fingerprint). The Home Office forensic science service is studying these techniques and has applied them to other body fluids and dried stains. The use of these techniques for forensic purposes is at an early stage but shows great potential.

Violent Crime

51. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the efficacy of sentencing powers currently available for crimes of violence, manslaughter and murder.

Mr. Mellor: Long prison sentences may be imposed for offences of violence, and the Government's policy on the release of life sentence prisoners and on the granting of parole is designed to reinforce their deterrent effect. We are satisfied that the maximum penalties currently available are sufficient to enable the courts to deal adequately with the worst cases, though the effectiveness of sentencing powers is not easy to measure and they are by no means the only relevant factor in preventing violent crime.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to implement paragraph 76 of the Nairobi conference document "Forward Looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women" relating to guidance to law enforcement and other authorities on dealing with women who are victims of violent crimes.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There is a comprehensive body of law on sexual offences in this country, and penalties for attempted rape and indecent assault against a woman have recently been very substantially increased in line with recommendations of the Criminal Law Revision Committee. Home Office circular 25/1983, issued in March 1983, gave comprehensive guidance to chief constables on the investigation of rape offences. It stressed the need for sensitivity and tact in the treatment of victims and encouraged chief constables to keep training needs under constant review.

Unlawful Killing

52. Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recent trend in crimes of unlawful killing.

Mr. Mellor: The trend in the incidence of offences initially recorded as homicide has been slightly upwards over the past decade, but particular years can show considerable variations in the number of type of homicide recorded. The number recorded in 1984 was less than that in either 1979 or 1980.

Community Policing

53. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on recent developments in community policing.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The essential features of what is known as community policing are that police officers should know the area which they police and understand those whom they serve and protect. Establishing consultative procedures at local level and training in each force have a significant part to play. The support and co-operation of the community is also important, particularly in the inner cities.

Nuclear Electromagnetic Pulse

56. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the working party looking into the problems of nuclear electromagnetic pulse to report to Ministers.

58. Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he hopes to extend guidance to local authorities on the effects of nuclear electromagnetic pulse.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As a first step the working party is identifying various types of electrical equipment likely to be vulnerable to this effect and the specific protection measures which might be necessary in each case. This is a complex subject, and it is unlikely that firm results will be available before early 1987. Some advice on the effect in regard to communications equipment has already been given to local authorities, and this will be extended when the conclusions of the working party and other research are known.

Police and Prison Officers

62. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to encourage the recruitment of prison and police officers from the ethnic minorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Chief officers of police are responsible for recruitment of police personnel. Both the police and prison services make substantial efforts to encourage recruitment from within ethnic minority communities; particular reference is made to them in all advertising material; from time to time special campaigns are mounted in areas of high ethnic concentration; regular contact is maintained with community leaders; and the prison service in particular enjoys ongoing assistance from job centre staff.

Nuclear Weapons

64. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Home Department when he expects to publish the review of the casualty and damage effects of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We expect to publish material dealing with the effects of nuclear weapons next year as part of our information programme.

Trespass

65. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Home Department if he will introduce legislation to make all forms of trespass a criminal offence.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans to do so, but my right hon. Friend would be prepared to consider giving support to a measure making it an offence, without reasonable excuse, to enter residential premises as a trespasser.

Rape Victims

66. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Home Department if there has been any change in Metropolitan police procedures which encourage victims of rape to report to the police; and what has been the effect of such changes.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Metropolitan police have taken a number of initiatives to improve procedures for dealing with rape victims. These include a special training scheme for police officers in sexual offences investigation technique; police assistance in the training of victim support scheme volunteers for the long-term counselling of rape victims; advice about birth control methods; and arrangements for victims to receive priority appointments at a number of hospitals with clinics specialising in sexually transmitted diseases. Disposable sterile clothing has been introduced for victims whose own clothing is taken for examination, and the police intend to open a number of special "victim examination suites" with shower facilities for the victims of rape and serious sexual assault. It is hoped to introduce the first of these in Brentford shortly.

No evidence is available as to whether these changes have affected the number of offences reported.

Prison Places

67. Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current adequacy of prison places available to support judicial sentencing policy, particularly for crimes of violence.

Mr. Mellor: The prison system will continue to find room for all those committed to it by the courts.

Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984

70. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on progress in implementing the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984; and what discussions he has held with chief constables about necessary staffing resources for this.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Most of the remaining provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 will be implemented on 1 January 1986. Police preparations for this are well advanced. The Government have always recognised that the provisions of this Act may in some instances create increased demands on police resources and my right hon. Friend has said that he will consider on their merits bids from chief officers for variations in establishments resulting from implementation. Approval has already been given for adjustments in establishments in a number of forces, for reasons associated with the implementation of the Act.

Police Establishments

71. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the chief inspector of constabulary about force establishments.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Police authorities are responsible for fixing the authorised establishment of forces, subject to my right hon. Friend's approval and he looks to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary for advice on applications from provincial police authorities. My right hon. Friend will shortly be considering a number of applications for increases in force establishments.

Age of Consent

72. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the age of consent.

Mr. Mellor: We have at present no plans to change the age of consent.

Car Sirens

74. Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department over what distance police car sirens used in the Metropolitan police area can be heard under normal circumstances and under the most unfavourable circumstances.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that under normal conditions in a busy London street the electronic METSOUND audible warning system can be heard by a pedestrian at a distance of between 200m. and 300m. The performance of the equipment is, of course, less satisfactory under less favourable conditions, but it is not possible to give precise estimates of performance characteristics under such conditions.

Greenham Common

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley on the incident which took place at Greenham common between the police and members of Cruisewatch in the early hours of Tuesday 26 November.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable of the Thames Valley police informs me that shortly after midnight on 26 November a missile convoy returned to Greenham common air base. Demonstrators had gathered outside and, as the convoy entered the base, paint was thrown at police officers manning the gates. Four police officers had paint thrown in their faces and were subsequently treated in hospital. Nine other officers suffered damage to their uniforms and a police vehicle was also damaged. Eight people were arrested as a result of this incident and, of these, six have been charged or reported for summons for offences including criminal damage, wilful obstruction and assault on a police officer.

Sporting Events (Control of Alcohol etc.) Act 1985

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the measures introduced in the Sporting Events (Control of Alcohol etc.) Act 1985.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Act has been in force for only three months and it is therefore too soon to make any firm assessment, but the police believe that it is making a useful contribution in dealing with the problem of football hooliganism.

Woolwich Prison

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects work to start on the new Woolwich prison; and when the first inmates are expected to be in residence.

Mr. Mellor: The advance works are due to start early in the new year with the main construction beginning in January 1987. The first intake of prisoners is expected in the latter part of 1991.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the operational requirement for the new Woolwich prison provides for 60 per cent. of the inmates to be housed in double cells.

Mr. Mellor: The provision of double cells for some prisoners is desirable on control or medical grounds. In the context of the Woolwich design, the savings on building costs have allowed us, within the budget for the project, to adopt a galleried solution to the design of the living blocks, which experience has shown to have many operational advantages. They also make an appreciable contribution towards achieving value for money for the project as a whole, bearing in mind the high development costs of the site, and towards the delivery of the announced and costed programme of prison building and refurbishment, of which Woolwich is an essential component.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any alterations have been made to the layout of the staff housing at the new Woolwich prison, in the light of the representations from the London borough of Greenwich; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The original housing proposals associated with the Woolwich project have been considerably revised during the development of the design. The London borough of Greenwich suggested in relation to the layout of the housing estate a staggering of the building line, and this has been incorporated into the current proposal.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff housing units are now planned as part of the new Woolwich prison development.

Mr. Mellor: We currently plan to provide 48 three-bedroom houses and seven four-bedroom houses. The level of provision will be kept under review in the light of any future changes in the requirement for staff housing associated with the new prison.

Swansea and Cardiff Prisons

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the recognised capacity of Swansea prison and Cardiff prison, respectively; and what is the number of prisoners currently being held at each prison.

Mr. Mellor: On 29 November the certified normal accommodation and population of Her Majesty's prison and remand centre Cardiff and Her Majesty's prison Swansea (including the remand centre unit) were as follows:

Establishment	CNA	Population
Cardiff	339	464
Swansea	241	280

Drug Offences

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his latest proposals to deal with drug offences.

Mr. Mellor: As my right hon. Friend announced in answer to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 19 November, at columns 141-42, a statement of the Government's proposals is available in the Library and in the Vote Office.

Obscenity

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish the proportion of convictions for offences involving obscene publications, including pleas of guilty in (a) magistrate's courts and (b) Crown courts over the past 10 years:

(2) how many cases have been brought to trial in the Crown court on counts alleging obscenity in each of the past 10 years; how many were guilty pleas; how many were not guilty pleas; and how many not guilty pleas resulted in conviction.

Mr. Mellor: The information available to me, which may be incomplete, is published annually under offence classification 86 in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" in volume 1, table S1.1(A) for magistrates' courts and in volume 2, table S2.1(A) for the Crown court. The figure of persons found guilty includes cases where the defendant pleaded guilty. Reliable information on plea is not available.

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is currently considering a reform of the definition of obscenity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My hon. Friend the Member for Davyhulme (Mr. Churchill) has introduced a Bill to amend section 1 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959 and we shall be considering the proposals very carefully.

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his assessment of the present level of obscene publications; and if he will give comparable figures for the past 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: The information available does not allow any reliable assessment to be formed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to implement paragraph 85 of the Nairobi conference document "Forward Looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women" relating to the control of pornography.

Mr. Mellor: Since 1979 the Government have introduced or supported a number of measures to strengthen the law. My hon. Friend the Member for Davyhulme (Mr. Churchill) has introduced a Bill to amend section 1 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959 and we shall be considering the proposals very carefully.

Crime (Incidence)

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if his Department has made any study of the relationship between the incidence of crime, and of different types of crime, and (a) the different days of the week, (b) public holidays and special events, (c) the seasons and (d) the weather; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if his Department has made any study of the incidence of crime on Sundays; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Evidence from police statistics and crime surveys suggests that the incidence of different types of crime fluctuates according to opportunity, which may itself be affected by any or all of the factors mentioned by the right hon. Member, but no specific research has been undertaken.

Demonstrators

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will call for reports from chief constables on the operation of manoeuvres designed temporarily to incapacitate demonstrators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. The overriding principle—set out in section 3 of the Criminal Law Act 1967—is that no more force shall be used than is reasonable in the circumstances. The tactics adopted to control a particular instance of public disorder are a matter for the operational judgement of the chief constable of police concerned.

Police Officers (Fatalities and Injuries)

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state for each year since 1973 the number of police officers killed or injured on duty.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Information on the number of police officers injured on duty is not held centrally. The number of officers killed on duty is as follows:

	Number
1973	12
1974	4
1975	5
1976	5
1977	13
1978	14
1979	10
1980	5
1981	10
1982	15
1983	16
1984	15
1985*	7

* up to 3 December.

Chemical and Biological Weapons

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the revised version of the "Protect and Survive" pamphlet will be published; and if it will include advice on protection against chemical or biological weapon attack.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Next year; work is in hand on protection against chemical attack and guidance will be issued when this is complete. The Government consider the use of biological weapons to be highly unlikely.

Housebreaking

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek powers to make housebreaking and theft from a home a serious arrestable offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Burglary and theft both carry sufficiently serious penalties to render them arrestable offences as defined by section 24 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. If in any particular instance the offence involved any of the consequences listed in section 116(6), it would count as a serious arrestable offence. Those consequences include causing substantial financial gain to any person, or serious financial loss to any person—and the section provides that loss is serious for these purposes if, having regard to all the circumstances, it is serious for the person who suffers it.

This approach recognises that the gravity of instances of an offence may vary greatly from case to case. It would not be right to add burglary and theft to the list in schedule 5 to the Act (which includes treason, murder and very serious sexual assaults) of offences which count in all circumstances as serious arrestable offences.

PRIME MINISTER

Central Scotland

Q28. Mr. Craigen asked the Prime Minister when she next plans to pay an official visit to central Scotland.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Low-paid and Pensioners

Q42. Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Prime Minister what is the Government's estimate of the number of low-paid and pensioners who have become eligible to claim supplementary benefit because income tax deductions have reduced their net weekly spending power below the relevant supplementary benefit cut-off levels.

The Prime Minister: The available information, derived from family expenditure survey data covering people in private households, suggests that the number of people, including pensioners, currently eligible to claim supplementary benefit because of income tax deductions is negligible. People in full-time work are not eligible to claim supplementary benefit, regardless of the level of their earnings.

USSR (Visit)

Q67. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister whether she has received an invitation to visit the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have not received such an invitation.

European Summit

Q85. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the outcome of the European Council of Heads of Government on 2 and 3 December.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement that I made today.

Disarmament Conference

119 Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about the United Kingdom's role in the conference on disarmament in Europe.

The Prime Minister: We and our allies are working for agreement at the conference on disarmament in Europe on practical confidence and security building measures that would reduce tension and the risk of surprise attack through increased openness about normal patterns of military activity.

Cabinet Papers

129 Mr. Madel asked the Prime Minister whether she has yet reached any conclusions as to whether it will be necessary to withhold any Cabinet papers of 1956 on grounds of national security when it is time to publish them under the 30-year rule; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Under the provisions of section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958 as amended by the Public Records Act 1967, official records of 1956 will be available for public inspection in the Public Records Office by January 1987, unless the Lord Chancellor has by then prescribed that they should be withheld for a longer period. In accordance with normal practice, any applications for approval to withhold Cabinet or other records on any of the criteria laid down by the Lord Chancellor will not be considered by him Until nearer the time.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Brunivels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 December.

Mr. Holt asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 December.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 December.

Israeli Espionage

Mr. Marlow asked the Prime Minister is she will ask the Security Commission to examine and report on measures being taken to prevent Israeli espionage within the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so. In any case a reference to the Security Commission would not normally be made unless it was known, or there was good reason to believe, that a breach of security had taken place.

Heads of Government (Entertainment Costs)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister what has been the total cost of entertaining foreign heads of Government for each of the past six years.

The Prime Minister: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman shortly.

Prime Ministerial Travel (Aircraft Use)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister on how many occasions since 1979 Ministry of Defence aircraft have been used for Prime Ministerial foreign travel; on how many occasions civil aircraft were used; and what was the cost in each case.

The Prime Minister: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman shortly.

EC Meetings

Mr. Deakins asked the Prime Minister how many European Economic Community meetings since the Milan Summit meeting for the purpose of developing the formal and informal structures of the European Economic Community have been attended by the Foreign Secretary, other Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers and United Kingdom officials based in the EEC, respectively.

The Prime Minister: The Intergovernmental Conference has met six times at ministerial level. The United Kingdom has been represented by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs or by my hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State, the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind). There have also been 11 preparatory meetings of officials.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Winnick asked the Paymaster General if he will state the percentage of those unemployed for 12 months and more in each region of the United Kingdom, the level in April 1979 and the percentage difference between the figures in the regions.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table gives the available information. The comparisons are affected by the change in the basis of the count in October 1982, and the 1983 Budget provisions which mean that some men, mainly aged 60 or over, no longer need to sign on at unemployment benefit offices to receive benefit.

Unemployed over 12 months as a percentage of total unemployed

Mr. Winnick asked the Paymaster General if he will state the total number in each region who are at present in Manpower Services Commission or other state schemes involving temporary employment of all kinds, including the youth opportunities programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: The youth opportunities programme no longer exists. Periods of employment do not exceed a year for most participants on the community programme and the community industry scheme. A regional breakdown of total numbers employed under these measures, whether for more or less than a year, is as follows:

Region	Figures for October
London	12,111
South East	13,856
South West	10,484
Midlands	30,911
Wales	11,843
North West	26,427
Scotland	22,566
Northern	17,103
Yorkshire and Humberside	20,186
Total for Great Britain	165,487

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General (1) what is the total number of 17-year-olds in full-time work as a percentage of that age group;

(2) what is the total number of 16-year-olds in full-time work as a percentage of that age group.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information in the precise form requested is not available. The latest available relevant estimates are shown in the following table:

Young people in Great Britain in January 1985

	Numbers	Per cent.
Age 16 years*
Total population	870,000	100
of which:

	Numbers	Per cent.
(a) in full-time education of YTS, or claimant unemployed	740,000	85
(b) other: mainly employed outside YTS†	130,000	15
Age 17 years*
Total population	895,000	100
of which:
(a) in full-time education or YTS, or claimant unemployed	470,000	53
(b) other: mainly employed outside YTS†	425,000	47

* Ages as at 31 August 1984.

† Mainly those in employment but excluding those employed under the youth training scheme and including some who were seeking work but not claiming benefit and others who were neither employed nor seeking work—for example, because of domestic responsibilities. This group is obtained by subtracting from the total population of the age group those estimated to be in full-time education or in the youth training scheme and the claimant unemployed: no subdivision is available showing numbers in full-time or part-time employment.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Paymaster General if he will list in order those parliamentary constituencies in which unemployment has been reduced by 5 per cent. or more since June 1983, giving the percentage reduction in each case.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The table shows those parliamentary constituencies where unemployment has been reduced by five per cent. or more between June 1983 and October 1985. The change will be affected by seasonal factors and by the 1983 Budget provisions, which meant that certain men mainly aged 60 and over no longer need to sign on to obtain benefit. Comparisons over the period cannot be made for a few parliamentary constituencies where the figures are affected by the late conversion of some unemployment benefit offices to the computerised system of counting claimants.

Hotel and Catering Industries

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Paymaster General if he will arrange to meet the chairman of the English Tourist Board to discuss the job opportunities for young people in the hotel and catering industries and how these can be promoted to reduce unemployment.

Mr. Trippier: The English Tourist Board has already taken steps through its comprehensive "Handbook of Careers in Tourism and Leisure" to promote to young people the wide range of job opportunities available in the hotel and catering industries. The handbook, published in June, has been distributed to careers advisers and to secondary schools throughout England and will be re-issued annually, together with information about relevant college courses and qualifications. In addition the ETB is in the process of producing a video on careers in tourism including in hotels and catering. I fully support these and the ETB's other initiatives to promote training and career opportunities in the tourism industry which are the subject of regular discussions between my Department and the board.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Paymaster General if his Department will make a television film or video on the job opportunities for young people in the hotel and catering industries.

Mr. Trippier: The Manpower Services Commission, in conjunction with the hotel and catering industry training board, has produced two videos "Working in Popular Catering" which was launched in September this year and "Working in Hotels" launched just over a year ago. Both are aimed at young people interested in careers in the hotel and catering industries and are available through the MSC's careers and occupational information centre, Sheffield. The English Tourist Board is also in the process of producing a video on careers in tourism which is expected to be available early next year and will include a section on careers in hotels and catering. This is designed to be used in schools' careers education programmes and will be also sold through the MSC's careers and occupational information centre.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Paymaster General what steps his Department takes to promote the job opportunities in the hotel and catering industries.

Mr. Trippier: My Department is already active through the jobcentre network and local authority careers service in promoting the job opportunities for young people in the hotel and catering industries and in tourism more generally. The statutory hotel and catering industries training board which my Department sponsors also plays a major role in the provision of information about hotel and catering jobs. Through the youth training scheme and other Manpower Services Commission programmes such as the job training scheme my Department seeks to ensure that young people are equipped with the skills and training needed to benefit from the increasing number of job opportunities which the hotel and catering industries have to offer.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Paymaster General how many young people were employed in youth training schemes in the hotel and catering industries in England during November.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is not available. However, the latest statistics show that from April to the end of September 1985 there were 5,135 youth training scheme entrants in the hotel and catering industries in England.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Paymaster General how many vacancies were notified to the jobcentres in England during the month of November in the hotel and catering industries; and how many of these vacancies remain unfilled.

Mr. Alan Clark: The number of vacancies notified to jobcentres in England during the quarter 5 August to 8 November in the hotel and catering industries was 71,716. The number of unfilled vacancies at 8 November in the hotel and catering industries was 17,239.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Paymaster General what steps are taken by his Department to alert careers officers in schools to the job opportunities for young people at all levels in the hotel and catering industries.

Mr. Alan Clark: Hotel and catering is covered in "Occupations '86", the careers and occupational information centre's annual guide to opportunities and trends in employment which is issued free to all careers officers. In addition, my Department has written to all principal careers officers drawing their attention to the report by the enterprise unit on the tourism and leisure industries; and has arranged for officials of the hotel and catering industries training board to talk to regional meetings of principal careers officers about opportunities in the industry.

SCOTLAND

Glasgow University

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps in conjunction with the University Grants Committee and the university court to seek to ensure the continuance of a social work department at Glasgow university.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Government do not determine the range of education provision offered in universities, and do not intervene in decisions taken by individual universities and the University Grants Committee in that regard.

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps in conjunction with the University Grants Committee and the university court to provide funds to establish a linguistics faculty at Glasgow university.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The funding, through the University Grants Committee, of universities throughout Great Britain is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amount of rate support grant paid or payable to each regional, islands and district council in Scotland for each of the years from 1979-80 to 1985-86 expressed in constant 1985-86 prices.

Mr. Younger: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply of 3 December by my hon. Friend to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman). The information has been placed in the Library.

Housing Support Grants

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amount of housing support grant paid or payable to each district and islands council in Scotland for each of the years from 1979-80 to 1985-86 at both current prices and expressed in constant 1985-86 prices.

Sheriff Courts

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of, and how many, defendants who have pleaded not guilty to offences tried in the sheriff courts have been convicted in each of the past five years.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is given in the table below:

Hotel and Catering Industries

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will arrange to meet the chairman of the Scottish Tourist Board to discuss the opportunities for young people in the hotel and catering industries and how these can be promoted to reduce unemployment.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to meet the chairman of the Scottish Tourist Board. On the occasions when he or my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State meet the chairman they are heartened by the progress of the board in helping to increase visitor numbers and to improve the quality of service provided by hotel and catering businesses. The Government believe that the board's actions will further extend employment opportunities for young people in these industries.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department will make a television film, or video, on the job opportunities for young people in the hotel and catering industries.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My Department has no plans to do so.

The careers and occupational information centre of the Manpower Services Commission, in conjunction with the hotel and catering industry training board, has produced two videos "Working in popular catering" and "Working in hotels" which are aimed at young people who are interested in a career in the hotel and catering industry.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are taken by his Department to alert careers officers in schools to the job opportunities for young people in the hotel and catering industries.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In the light of the report "Pleasure, Leisure and Jobs: The Business of Tourism" published in July by the Government's enterprise unit, my Department wrote to the heads of all careers services in Scotland to draw their attention to the scope for employment in the expanding field of tourism and leisure, of which the hotel and catering industry is a part. A representative of the hotel and catering industry training board subsequently made a presentation at one of the regular meetings which my officials have with the heads of all careers services in Scotland.

The hotel and catering industries are also covered in the annual guide to opportunities and trends in employment produced by the Manpower Services Commission's careers and occupational information centre. This guide is available to all careers officers for use in the individual guidance and counselling work in schools and with unemployed young people.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people were employed in youth training schemes in the hotel and catering industries in Scotland during November.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is not available. However, the latest statistics show that, during the six months ended 30 September 1985, there were 768 youth training scheme entrants in the hotel and catering industries in Scotland.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vacancies were notified to the jobcentres in Scotland during the month of November in the hotel and catering industries; and how many of these vacancies remain unfilled.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Vacancy notification analyses by industry are not available monthly. The number of vacancies in the hotel and catering industries notified to jobcentres in Scotland during the quarter 5 August to 8 November 1985 was 10,021. The number of unfilled vacancies at 8 November in the hotel and catering industries was 1,541.

Civil Defence

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list in the Official Report those local authorities which have, since 1 December 1983, received approvals for grant aid for the purpose of establishing, equipping or maintaining an emergency centre pursuant to regulation 5(c) of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) (Scotland) Regulations 1983; and if he will state the nature of the scheme, its total cost and the total amount of civil defence grant paid or payable and whether the approval is in principle or final;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report those local authorities which have, since 1 December 1983, received approvals for grant aid for the purpose of establishing, equipping or maintaining an emergency centre or centres pursuant to regulation 4(1)(b) of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) (Scotland) Regulations 1983; and if he will state the nature of the scheme, its total cost and the total amount of civil defence grant paid or payable and whether the approval is in principle or final.

Mr. John MacKay: Approval in principle has been given since 1 December 1983 to proposals to adapt existing premises as emergency centres as follows:

Under regulation 5(c) of 1983 regulations

District councils	Estimated cost £
Berwickshire	104,000
Ettrick and Lauderdale	80,000
Roxburgh	98,000
Tweeddale	*72,000

* A joint regional council standby and district council emergency centre.

Under regulation 4(1)(b) of 1983 regulations

Regional councils	Estimated cost £
Borders	*72,000
Tayside	360,000

* A joint regional council standby and district council emergency centre.

Grant at the rate of 75 per cent. will be payable on the approved costs of these projects and also on the cost of any necessary feasibility studies for these and other projects being considered by local authorities.

NHS Management (Griffiths Proposals)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement about his plans for the implementation of the Griffiths proposals for National Health Service management in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: In reply to my hon. Friend the member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Corrie) my right hon. Friend announced the issue of a circular about the implementation of the general management function in the Scottish Health Service. Since then, all 15 health boards have appointed general managers at board level. A study of unit management has been commissioned as the basis for decisions on how general management can best be developed in units and its results are expected in April 1986. The Health Service policy board has been established under my chairmanship and includes two members with extensive management experience in industry. Work is continuing on further aspects of developing general management.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amount of rate support grant paid to each local authority area in Scotland in each of the years 1978-79 to 1985-86, expressed in constant 1985-86 prices.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1985, c. 202]: The information has been placed in the Library.

School Closures

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish a table giving figures region by region of the schools which have been closed since 1979, as a result of the drop in the school rolls.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to the reply, 25 November 1985, c. 435]: The information set out in the table relates to gross figures of closures and not the balance of closures over new openings. The figures cover the period January 1979 — July 1984, the latest date for which information is currently available, and are based mainly on returns provided by individual education authorities. They do not include temporary closures or closures of nursery or special classes or departments within a school. I am unable to say which closures were effected as a result of falling rolls.

THE ARTS

Film Industry

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister for the Arts how much money the British film industry has received from the Government over the last six years.

Mr. Luce: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

CIVIL SERVICE

Advancement of Women

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Minister for the Civil Service what steps he is taking to implement section 79 of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward-looking strategies for women, which states that Governments should take all appropriate measures to ensure for women, on equal terms with men and without discrimination, the opportunity to represent their Governments at all levels on delegations to sub-regional, regional and international meetings.

Mr. Luce: The appointment of representatives of Her Majesty's Government to overseas delegations and meetings is a matter for Ministers with responsibility for those delegations or the subject matter of the meetings in question. As far as my responsibilities go, the Government's equal opportunity policy toward civil servants applies as much to such appointments as to other public service appointments.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC Budget

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer which amendments and modifications to the 1986 draft European Economic Community budget by the European Assembly involve increased expenditure.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to document 10444/85 which contains the European Parliament's amendments and modifications to the draft budget for 1986. This document, together with an explanatory memorandum, has been deposited in the House in the usual way.

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, why, in the light of the statement of 28 November, Official Report, column 666, that increased non-obligatory expenditure in connection with the accession to the European Economic Community of Spain and Portugal represented a threat to budget discipline, Her Majesty's Government did not use its veto to oppose the revised draft EEC budget for 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Community budget procedure is governed by article 203 of the treaty of Rome, which provides for qualified majority voting by the Council at all stages. No single member state is therefore in a position to prevent adoption of the budget.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Consultant-Junior Doctor Ratio

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the consultants to junior doctors ratio in hospitals in each year since 1979; and what plans he has to bring about changes to the ratio.

Mr. Hayhoe: The consultant to junior ratios in hospitals for the years 1979 to 1984 in England are shown in the table:

*Ratio—consultant: junior doctors

	Ratio
1979	1:1·78
1980	1:1·76
1981	1:1·76
1982	1:1·75
1983	1:1·74
1984	1:1·69

* Whole time equivalents, excluding locums.

I am considering what further action would be appropriate to achieve the object of providing a greater proportion of patient care by consultants.

Sickness Benefit (Hereford and Worcester)

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out in the Official Report a table showing how many recipients of long-term sickness benefit residing in Herefordshire were, in each of the years 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985 to date, referred to the regional medical service for independent medical examinations; how many of these were declared fit for work in their usual occupations; how many were delcared fit for limited work in alternative and unspecified occupations; and how these figures compare with the other social security divisions in the county of Hereford and Worcester.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information is available only at disproportionate cost.

Nurses (Costs)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the average cost to the National Health Service of employing (a) a National Health Service nurse and (b) an agency nurse in terms of cost per hour worked;

(2) to what extent National Health Service hospitals rely on utilising the services of agency nurses, in terms of (a) the number of agency nurses employed and (b) expenditure by health authorities on employment of agency nurses, in total, and as a proportion of their staffing costs;

(3) what information he has about the number of agency nurses employed from time to time by the National Health Service who are also full-time National Health Service nurses.

Mr. Hayhoe: The number of agency nursing and midwifery staff employed in the National Health Service in England at 30 September 1984 was 3,750 in whole-time equivalent terms. The total expenditure by health authorities on such staff in 1984-85 was £40·2 million (provisional) representing 0·6 per cent. of their staffing costs.

In view of the many variable factors involved—such as the differing rates of commission paid to agencies—it is not possible to provide any accurate comparable figures. The indications are, however, that on average there is little difference between the cost of a directly-employed nurse in the National Health Service and an agency nurse.

We have no information about the number of agency nurses employed in the National Health Service who are also full-time NHS nurses.

Contraceptive Pill (Prescriptions)

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be in a position to announce his new guidelines to doctors on the circumstances in which they can prescribe the contraceptive pill to girls under 16 years without informing their parents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I hope to announce revised quidance shortly.

Drug Addiction

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has about the use of electro-acupuncture in the treatment of heroin, methadone and cocaine addiction; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what information he has as to when trials were conducted into the use of electro-acupuncture in the treatment of heroin, methadone and cocaine addiction; with what results; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The results of a comparative trial on the use of neuro-electric therapy and oral methadone in managing opiate withdrawal conducted at the Bethlem Royal hospital were published in the British Journal of Psychiatry in 1984. Electrostimulation was markedly inferior to methadone withdrawal treatment. However, the researchers suggested the need for further research. I am aware that a study is presently being undertaken by the National Institute for Mental Health in the United States of America.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report his Department's estimates of the number of (a) pensioner households, (b) families with children and (c) other households, who have (i) suffered a reduction in their housing benefit entitlement and (ii) lost all entitlement to housing benefit, as a result of changes to the tapers, minimum payment rules and high rent area authorisation formula, respectively, at April 1983, April 1984, November 1984, April 1985 and November 1985; and if he will also give his estimate of the cumulative savings made as a result of these changes.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his Department's latest estimate of the number of households receiving certificated housing benefit who are receiving assistance towards amenity charges from the local authority as part of the Housing benefit scheme; and what proportion of these are receiving (a) up to £1 a week, (b) £1 to £2 a week, (c) £2 to £3 a week and (d) over £3 a week towards amenity charges.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information necessary to make such an estimate is not currently available to the department.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his Department's latest estimate of the number of local authorities operating local schemes under the housing benefit scheme, the number of households receiving enhanced benefit under such local schemes, the average value of such enhancements and the total cost of such enhancements to the authorities.

Mr. Major: The latest information from authorities' subsidy claims for 1985-86, which updates that given in my predecessor's reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 29 April at column 48, indicates that 284 authorities are currently running local schemes at a total cost of just over £35 million. Information is not collected centrally on the number of households receiving enhanced benefit or the average value of the enhancement.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the gross income level at which (a) rent rebate or allowance and (b) rate rebate would cease to be payable at 1985-85 needs allowance levels to (i) a single pensioner, (ii) a pensioner couple, (iii) a family whose head of household is in employment, with one dependent child and (iv) a family whose head of household is in employment, with two dependent children, who in each case is paying (A) the average local authority rent and (B) the average local authority rate, given, respectively, rent tapers of 17 per cent., 21 per cent., 26 per cent. and 29 per cent., and rate tapers of 6 per cent., 7 per cent., 9 per cent., and 13 per cent.

Mr. Major: The gross income levels at which rent rebates or allowances and rate rebates would no longer be payable are as follows:

Table A Rent rebates of allowances

	Gross income (£'s) with a taper of
	17 per cent.	21 per cent.	26 per cent.	29 per cent.
(i) a single pensioner	94·35	85·63	78·50	75·40
(ii) a pensioner couple	116·85	108·13	101·00	97·90
(iii) MC with 1 child (one earner)	153·45	143·65	135·64	132·16
(iv) MC with 2 children (one earner)	171·83	161·29	152·68	148·94

Table B Rate rebates

	Gross income (£'s) with a taper of
	6 per cent.	7 per cent.	9 per cent.	13 per cent.
(i) a single pensioner	92·31	86·06	77·73	68·75
(ii) a pensioner couple	114·81	108·56	100·23	91·25
(iii) MC with 1 child (one earner)	155·76	148·08	137·84	126·82
(iv) MC with 2 children (one earner)	171·26	163·44	153·01	141·78

MC=Married couple.

Notes:

1. The following rent and rate levels respectively have been assumed for the various household types: £13·80 and £5·20 for (i) and (ii); £15·40 and £6·20 for (iii); £16·50 and £6·30 for (iv).
2. The current minimum benefit level of 50p for both rents and rates has been used throughout.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of households, respectively, receiving (a) certified and (b) standard housing benefit and containing non-dependant, in respect of whom deductions from housing benefit are made; and if he will estimate the proportion in each case who are subject to either the higher or the lower rate of non-dependant deduction.

Mr. Major: We estimate that there are between 400,000 and 500,000 householders receiving certificated housing benefit who have deductions made from their housing benefit in respect of non-dependants. A similar number receiving standard housing benefit has deductions made from that benefit for the same reason.

Information is not available regarding the level of non-dependant deductions made from housing benefit.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his Department's latest estimate of the proportion of (a) pensioner households, (b) households with dependent children and (c) other households who are taking up their entitlement to rent rebates, rent allowances and rate rebates under the housing benefit scheme, showing the division of these between standard and certificateded benefit.

Mr. Major: Reliable estimates of the take-up of standard housing benefit are not expected to be available until early next year when data from the 1984 family expenditure survey have been analysed. The 1983 family expenditure survey is not regarded as reliable in this respect as it was carried out in the same year as the changeover to the new scheme.

We expect take-up of certificated housing benefit to be close to 100 per cent. since entitlement is automatic on a householder successfully claiming supplementary benefit.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his Department's latest estimate of the number of households (a) eligible to receive and (b) receiving housing benefit supplement and the average amount of housing benefit supplement payments made.

Mr. Major: We estimate that about half a million people are eligible for housing benefit supplement.

Information from local authority subsidy claims for the 1983-84 financial year — the latest available date — indicated that there were 228,000 households receiving housing benefit supplement. The average weekly payment was £2·42 per week.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the latest estimates of the number of households receiving housing benefit in Great Britain, showing (a) the division between standard and certificated cases, (b) the division between home owners, council tenants and others, (c) the division between pensioner households, families with children and others, (d) the number receiving rent rebates or allowances only, (e) the number receiving both a rent rebate or allowance and a rate rebate and (f) the number receiving a rate rebate only.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are his Department's latest available figures for 1985 on (a) the number of cases on which a review of housing benefit entitlement has been requested, (b) the number of cases referred to a review board hearing, (c) the number of such cases in which the authority's original decision was (i) altered and (ii) upheld and (d) the number of cases referred to review boards involving representations about (A) eligible rent and rates, (B) non-dependants or sub-tenants (C) overpayments and (D) other matters.

Mr. Major: The latest available figures are for the period 1 January 1985 to 30 September 1985 and are taken from returns from around 7 per cent. of all authorities.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's latest estimate of the number of additional staff employed by local authorities as a result of the introduction of the housing benefit scheme.

Mr. Major: Local authorities have been asked to provide estimates of the number of additional staff required to administer the housing benefit scheme only in its first year of operation in 1983-84. Their 1983-84 subsidy claims indicate that about 3,750 additional staff were employed to administer the housing benefits scheme.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the authorities which have (a) requested and (b) received authorisations to operate a high rent area scheme (i) for public authority and private tenants, (ii) for public authority tenants alone, (iii) for private tenants alone and (iv) for class authorisations and to identify, in respect of class authorisations, the particular type of dwelling for which each authorisation was granted.

Cancer

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were suffering from cancer in each of the last five years in the Portsmouth and South-East Hampshire health district.

Mr. Whitney: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys handles statistics of registrations of newly diagnosed cases of cancer; this provides the nearest available information on the number of people suffering from cancer.

The table shows these registrations for the latest available five years.

Number of registrations of malignant neoplasmas; Portsmouth and South East Hampshire health district/district health authority 1978-1982

Area of usual residence	Year	Number
Portsmouth and South East Hampshire health district	1978	1,925
	1979	1,750
	1980	1,974
	1981	2,203

1978 ICD 8th revision 140—209
1979–1982 ICD 9th revision 140—208

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money has been specificaly allocated to cancer research in the last five years.

Mr. Whitney: The main Government-funded body supporting cancer research is the Medical Research Council which receives an annual grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science.

During the last five years, the Department of Health and Social Security has provided support for research related to cancer amounting to £6·4 million.

I understand that the Scottish Home and Health Department has provided £1·3 million for research in this area during the same period.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have died from cancer in each of the last five years in the Portsmouth and South Hampshire health district.

Mr. Whitney: The table shows the number of deaths from malignant neoplasms (ICD 9th revision 140-208) occurring to residents of the Portsmouth and South East Hampshire health district in each of the last five years.

Deaths from Cancer (ICD 140-208) in the Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Health District /District Health Authority, 1980-84

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the number of those of working age receiving supplementary benefit in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the West Midlands region and (c) the Walsall area, the numbers in May 1979 and the percentage difference in the three groups.

Mr. Major: The information is as follows:

(thousands)

	May 1979	Latest available date	Percentage increase
United Kingdom	1,215	3,155 (February 1985)	160
Midlands region*	204	584 (July 1985)	186
Local offices situated in Walsall	6·4	21·5 (July 1985)	236

Source: United Kingdom figures: Quarterly statistical inquiries. Midland region and Walsall figures: 100 per cent. count of cases in action at local offices.

* Figures are for whole Midlands region, since the West Midland social security region no longer exists.

Heating Additions

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what basis heating additions are calculated.

Mr. Newton: Supplementary benefit claimants who need to spend extra on heating may receive additional weekly payments known as heating additions. Details of eligibility and of the amounts payable are contained in regulations 11-12 and schedule 4 (part I) of the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1983, (S.I. 1983 No. 1399).

Crown Immunity

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has now received about the effects of Crown immunity on standards of health and safety in hospital buildings.

Mr. Hayhoe: A small number.

Disabled Persons (Access)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date he laid a report before Parliament on improving access for disabled persons under section 7 of the Disabled Persons Act 1981; and if he will make a statement on the progress made subsequent to that report.

Sir George Young: I have been asked to reply.

No such report has been made. Instead, as an alternative to implementing section 6 of the Disabled Persons Act 1981, new building regulations were laid before Parliament on 2 April 1985 and became operational on 1 August. These require that new offices, shops, single-storey factories, educational and public buildings should be accessible to disabled people.

We propose to recast these requirements into the functional form of the new simplified building regulations 1985. A draft approved document is being prepared, giving practical solutions for meeting the access requirements and there will be public consultation in due course.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Court of Human Rights

Ms Harman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to reach a settlement on the substantive issue in the case of Harman v. The United Kingdom in the European Court of Human Rights; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps the Treasury solicitors are taking to reach a settlement on the question of costs in the case of Harman v. The United Kingdom in the European Court of Human Rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Proceedings before the European Commission of Human Rights are confidential and it would not be appropriate to make a statement. The hon. Member's solicitors are well aware of the progress of discussions. We hope that these will lead to the friendly settlement of her application to the Commission.

Plutonium

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to ensure that all plutonium exported from the United Kingdom since 1979 has been transferred in accordance with article III of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Renton: As my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Luce) said on 18 February to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas):

"Before an export licence is issued, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is responsible for obtaining appropriate assurances from the Government of a receiving state regarding peaceful and non-explosive use, application of International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, standards of physical protection and conditions for retransfer. British Nuclear Fuels plc is responsible to the Department of Energy for the storage and accountancy of all safeguards material in its possession."

These guidelines still appley.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the countries from whose Governments his Department has received the appropriate assurances referred to by the then Minister of State, the hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Luce) on 18 February, Official Report, column 360, in respect of transfers of plutonium for civil use in each year since 1970;

(2) if he will list the countries to which plutonium intended for civil purposes has been transferred from the United Kingdom in each year since 1970.

Mr. Renton: Since 1970, plutonium (in consignments larger than gramme quantities) intended for civil purposes has been exported to the following countries:

Belgium
Canada
France
Federal Republic of Germany
Italy
Japan
Switzerland
United States of America

All the material involved is subject to bilateral and International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards agreements which provide for the plutonium to be used for peaceful purposes.

Peace Organisations

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which organisations claiming to be working for peace have been refused grants-in-aid from his Department.

Mr. Eggar: In awarding grants-in-aid to non-governmental organisations we have regard to whether their purposes are in accordance with our foreign policy objective, including the preservation of international peace with freedom and justice. Many organisations would claim to be working for peace to a greater or lesser extent. Some applicants have been refused, but we do not maintain a comprehensive list of such refusals. I should be happy to write to the hon. Member about any specific organisation he has in mind.

Advancement of Women

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many senior diplomatic figures have been appointed from outside the Foreign Office in each of the last five years; and how many of these were women.

Mr. Eggar: There has been one such appointment during the period: Sir Oliver Wright, a former member of the Diplomatic Service, was appointed ambassador to Washington in 1982.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many civil servants of each grade are in the Diplomatic Service; and how many of these are women.

Mr. Eggar: The required figures are tabulated as follows:

Diplomatic Service grade	Total officers in grade	Of whom women
10	545	289
9	773	250
8	50	7
7E	474	75
7D	79	14
6	294	21
5	439	29
4	288	12
Senior grade	154	1

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many diplomats Britain has sent to the United Nations in the current year; and how many of these are women.

Mr. Renton: In 1985 four United Kingdom-based staff with diplomatic status have been posted to the United Kingdom mission to the United Nations in New York and eight to the mission in Geneva, including one woman to each.

There are currently 22 diplomatic staff in New York, of whom three are women, and 20 in Geneva, of whom one is a woman. Figures for all United Kingdom-based staff are: 46 in New York (18 women) and 37 in Geneva (12 women).

Dame Ann Warburton was the permanent representative in Geneva until her retirement from the Diplomatic Service in October.

MBFR Talks

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any progress has been made in the 37th round of the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The head of the United Kingdom delegation to the mutual and balanced force reduction talks (MBFR) in Vienna has today presented a new Western proposal to the East. Britain has played a key role in formulating this proposal which takes up the concept of a time-limited agreement involving modest reductions of US and Soviet troops put forward by the East in its proposal of 14 February, and builds upon the areas of agreement which already exist between the two sides. The main features of the new Western proposals are as follows:

(i) initial reductions of 5,000 US and 11,500 Soviet troops;

(ii) a subsequent collective commitment by NATO and the Warsaw pact and by the USSR and the United States not to increase their forces within the reductions area for three years;

(iii) a package of associated measures to allow for the monitoring of overall compliance with the agreement and to verify force levels of the participating countries as exchanged following initial reductions.

For many years, prior data agreement has been the principal stumbling block to progress in Vienna. By offering to accept reductions and a subsequent no-increase commitment without insistence upon prior agreement on data between the two sides, the West is making a major effort to take the Vienna negotiations forward. I hope that the East will now respond in a similar vein.

NATO (Barrier Defence)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has made any proposals within the Northern Atlantic Treaty Organisation for the provision of a barrier defence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: My right hon. Friend has made no proposals to NATO for a physical barrier defence. I also refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Deakins) on 18 March, at column 407.

Equipment Losses

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list all operational equipment losses including helicopters and aircraft for each year since 1980 and for each of the three services.

Mr. Stanley: The figures for operational equipment losses for all three services during the years 1980-85, but excluding losses in the Falklands conflict, are as follows. These include losses during training.

	Royal Navy	Army	Royal Air Force
1980
Fixed wing aircraft	1	2	21
Helicopter	3	4	2
1981
Fixed wing aircraft	1	—	20
Helicopter	5	—	1
*1982
Fixed wing aircraft	1	—	23
Helicopter	3	5	—
1983
Fixed wing aircraft	4	1	24
Helicopter	3	1	1
1984
Fixed wing aircraft	3	—	17
Helicopter	2	2	1
1985†
Fixed wing aircraft	1	—	15
Helicopter	3	2	1

* Excluding losses in the Falklands conflict.
† Interim figures.

According to available records, one Saracen armoured personnel carrier, two FV432 armed personnel carriers, and one Ferret scout car have also been lost in 1981, 1984 and 1985, respectively.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list all operational equipment losses during the period 3 April 1982 to the date of ceasefire in the Falklands in June 1982.

Mr. Stanley: During the period 3 April 1982 to the cessation of hostilities in the Falklands, the following major equipments were lost:

	Equipment losses
Royal Navy
(a) Ships	HMS Sheffield, HMS Ardent, HMS Antelope, HMS Coventry and RFA Sir Galahad
(b) Aircraft	6 Sea Harriers
(c) Helicopters	3 Lynx
	9 Wessex
	5 Sea Kings
Royal Marines	2 Gazelles
	1 Scout
Army	1 Gazelle
Royal Air Force	3 harriers
	3 Chinooks

The SS Atlantic Conveyor was also lost, as was a combat engineer tractor. One additional RAF Harrier, originally counted as lost, has since been repaired.

RAF Personnel

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of training a fast jet navigator for the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The average cost to the Ministry of Defence of training a student navigator to the point when he joins an operational fast jet squadron is approximately £1 million (at 1984-85 prices).

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many navigators serving with the Royal Air Force have left the Royal Air Force since January 1985 in each month and in total, or have expressed a desire to leave the service;

(2) how many navigators in the current year have expressed a desire to leave the Royal Air Force without completing their engagements;

(3) how many navigators have left the Royal Air Force since January without completing their engagement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Sixty-nine navigators have left the service during the current year, 30 of whom have left on premature voluntary retirement. During the same period, 46 navigators have indicated a desire to leave on PVR at some future date.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many pilots have left the Royal Air Force since January, in each month and in total, or have expressed a desire to leave the service;

(2) how many pilots have expressed a desire to leave the Royal Air Force without completing their engagement;

(3) how many pilots have left the Royal Air Force since January without completing their engagement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: 147 pilots have left the service during the current year, 58 of whom have left on premature voluntary retirement. During the same period, 89 pilots have indicated a desire to leave on PVR at some future date.

Leukaemia and Lymphatic Cancer

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has made any assessment of the relative incidence of leukaemia and lymphatic cancer in children living near the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment in Aldermaston and the Royal Ordnance Factory, Burghfield, compared with the incidence of those diseases in other parts of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My Department is aware of suggestions that there is a higher than expected incidence of such illnesses in these areas. The Ministry of Defence is of course interested in any soundly based scientific research into the incidence of radiation related illnesses in the vicinity of its establishments. So far we have seen no evidence to suggest that there are any links between our establishments and cancer of any kind. Furthermore, the amounts of radioactivity originating from the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment, Aldermaston and the Royal Ordnance Factory, Burghfield are very low indeed and the maximum radiological doses associated with them would not exceed one thousandth of the annual limit recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection for members of the public, including children. The ICRP's recommendations are endorsed internationally and have been confirmed as acceptable for the UK by the National Radiological Protection Board, which is advised by the Medical Research Council.

Departmental Staff (Payments)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the payment of his Department's civil servants during emergency situations.

Mr. Heseltine: A study of payments to Ministry of Defence civilians in emergency situations has been carried out by Mr. J. Hansford. His report has been received and studied, and his conclusions are being followed up. A copy of his report has been placed in the Library, and it is published as an open government document.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fish (Mercury Levels)

Mr. Alton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what are the levels of mercury found in the fish in Liverpool bay; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) what are the levels of mercury found in fish in the Irish sea; and whether he will make a statement;

(3) if his Department has undertaken any studies into the effects of human consumption of fish with unacceptable levels of mercury found in them; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he is satisfied that the official environmental quality standard of 0·3 mg. of mercury per kilo is a safe level;

(5) if he intends to renew the licence granted to the North West water authority for the sea dumping of mercury under the Dumping at Sea Act 1974 when that licence expires.

Mr. Gummer: As part of its comprehensive programme for the protection of the marine environment, my Department regularly undertakes studies to monitor the level of mercury in fish landed from Liverpool bay and the Irish sea. These studies indicate that in 1984 the average mercury level in fish from Liverpool bay was 0·27mg/kg, whilst in fish from the Irish sea it was between 0·27 and 0·1mg/kg. These levels are lower than the environmental quality standard of 0·3mg/kg laid down by EC directives 82/176 and 84/156 on mercury discharges, which is designed to set a safe level for the protection of the marine environment. My Department has also conducted three studies of the relationship between high intakes of mercury from fish and blood concentrations of mercury in man. The conclusion of these studies was that we should follow the WHO advice on the intake of mercury. The situation in Liverpool bay is under close surveillance and no further licence for the disposal of sewage sludge to sea will be issued to the North-West water authority until the relevant information has been fully evaluated.

Equal Opportunities Officer

Mr. Janner asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the applicants for the post of equal opportunities officer in his Department, were (a) white males, (b) white females, (c) males of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin or (d) females of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin.

Mr. Jopling: It is not the practice to fill posts of this nature by inviting staff to apply for them. Existing staff in personnel units have been designated as equal opportunity officers on the basis of their overall suitability and not on the basis of sex or ethnic origin. Equal opportunity matters are not their sole responsibility.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department spent on advertising in national and local newspapers, on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85; and what is the amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86.

Dr. Boyson: The information as requested is not available except at disproportionate cost. However, total figures for all forms of advertising for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments are as follows:

Expenditure 1984-85	2,090,000
Budget 1985-86	2,689,188
Expenditure 1985-86 (to date)	1,595,318

WALES

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has yet received the report of the panel investigating library status under section 207(5) of the Local Government Act 1972; and when he expects to make a decision on the matter.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The panel has completed its inquiries and is now finalising its report which I expect to be submitted for consideration early in 1986.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department spent on advertising in national and local newspapers, on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85; and what is the amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information requested is as follows:

1984-85 Expenditure	66,300
1985-86 Budget	171,000
Expenditure to date	117,000

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Distress for Rent Rules

Mr. Conway asked the Attorney-General if he will amend the distress for rent rules 1983 so as to require certificated bailiffs to issue a detailed inventory when levying a notice of distress; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: The prescribed notice of distress, in form 5, already requires the goods seized, distrained or impounded by a certificated bailiff to be specified in an inventory, which is part of the form, when the form is issued to a tenant by the bailiff on levying a distress, in accordance with rule 12(2) of the distress for rent rules 1983. Further amendments to the rules are under consideration.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Building Societies

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement about the proposed building society legislation referred to in the Gracious Speech.

The Solicitor-General [further to the answer given by the Minister of State, Treasury, on 7 November 1985, c. 3]: I can provide the following information.

The Government issued a consultation paper last year seeking views on the way in which conflicts of interest and anti-competitive practices could be avoided if building societies and other financial institutions were to offer conveyancing services to the public. Following that consultation, the Government have concluded that there is no difficulty in principle in such institutions providing conveyancing to persons to whom they are not also offering a loan. However, the Government are not satisfied that lending institutions could safely be permitted to offer both conveyancing and a loan in the same transaction. It is therefore proposed to prohibit lending institutions from providing conveyancing, either directly or through a subsidiary company in which they hold a majority stake, to those who are also borrowing from them.

The Government are also examining the possibility of estate agents providing a combined service of sale and conveyancing to vendors, and of lending institutions providing conveyancing to borrowers from them through associated companies in which the lender holds only a minority shareholding. Consultation on those matters is not yet complete.

It is also proposed to set a number of other conditions to ensure proper consumer protection. In particular, institutions will be required to ensure that their conveyancing work is supervised by a qualified person; and adequate arrangements will have to be made to protect the consumer against negligence or fraud on the part of those providing the service. Details will be announced in due course, after further consultations with the interests concerned.

Mr. Lester asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the provision to be made in the Building Societies Bill for the conversion of building societies to company status.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Government have made it clear that the new building society legislation should allow building societies to become companies, subject to the approval of their members. In view of the complexity of the issues, however, we have decided to publish a consultative paper setting out proposals, on which comments are invited by the end of January.

General provision for the conversion of building societies into companies is made in the Bill as published today and, in the light of the consultation, detailed provisions will be brought forward during the passage of the Bill. Copies of the consultative paper have been placed in the Library.

Investment (GDP)

Mr. Skinner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the level of investment per person as a share of real gross domestic product in the following countries at the latest available date: (a) Japan, (b) West Germany, (c) France and (d) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The figures requested are as follows:

	1984	Current prices
		Investment (gross fixed capital formation)	Investment as a per-centage of GDP	Population (million)
(a)	Japan (yen billion)	82,049	28·0	120·0
(b)	West Germany (DM million)	354,580	20·2	61·2
(c)	France (Franc billion)	810·1	18·9	54·9
(d)	United Kingdom (Sterling million)	55,319	17·3	56·5

Scotch Whisky

Mr. Sims asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any safeguards have been included in European Community proposals on the respective treatment for tax purposes of different types of spirit to ensure that Scotch whisky is not placed at a competitive disadvantage as a result of subsidies granted to other imported spirits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The EC proposals for harmonising the structure of the taxation of spirits would provide for the same rate of VAT to be charged on home-produced and imported spirits and for a single specific rate of excise duty. France would be permitted to retain for a limited period a reduced rate of excise duty on a quota of rum from the French Overseas Departments, and Denmark would be allowed a transitional period to abolish the ad valorem element in their excise duty on spirits.

The question of unfair competition by subsidies is outside the scope of these harmonisation proposals.

Taxes Act 1979

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many applications have been made to the Board of Inland Revenue for the out of time admission of an election under the provisions of section 154(2) of the Taxes Act 1979; in how many cases the late election was accepted; and in what circumstances such late elections are accepted;

(2) how many applications have been made to the Board of Inland Revenue for the out of time admission of a claim under the provisions of section 264 of the Taxes Act 1970; in how many cases the late claim was accepted; and in what circumstances such late claims are accepted.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Income Tax

Mr. Silvester asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the cost of introducing an income tax rate of 15 per cent. to apply to half the present 30 per cent. tax rate band, leaving other tax rates undisturbed;

(2) what changes would be necessary to higher rate bands to ensure that no tax benefit accrues to higher rate taxpayers if a lower rate band is introduced at 15 per cent. to apply to half the present 30 per cent. tax-rate band.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Public Works Loan Board

Mr. Alton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rate of interest is currently charged by the Public Works Loan Board on loans to local authorities.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Public Works Loan Board lends to local authorities at both fixed and variable rates of interest. Fixed rates are published regularly in the London and Edinburgh Gazettes, copies of which are available in the Library. Variable rates are quoted to borrowers on application to the board.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Precautions Act 1971

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had, as part of his review of the Fire Precautions Act 1971, on the effects of extending designations to include hostels and houses in multiple occupation.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The current review of the Fire Precautions Act 1971, which was the subject of a consultative document published on 23 July 1985, is primarily concerned with the statutory arrangements for securing reasonable standards of fire safety in occupied buildings. No detailed consideration has yet been given to what new occupancies might be designated if the new system proposed in the consultative document were to be adopted. However, there would be full consultation with all the interested organisations before any such designation orders were made. From time to time representations have been made that some types of hostels and other houses in multiple occupation should be designated under the 1971 Act as requiring a fire certificate, but it has been so far decided that it would be wrong to contemplate any new designations while the Act is being reviewed.

Equal Opportunities Officer

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the applicants for the post of equal opportunities officer in his Department were (a) white males, (b) white females, (c) males of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin or (d) females of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin.

Mr. Hurd: It is not the practice to fill posts of this nature by inviting staff to apply for them. The heads of two personnel management divisions have been designated as equal opportunity officers on the basis of their overall suitability and not on the basis of sex or ethnic origin. Equal opportunity matters are not their sole responsibility.

Foreign Visitors

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors from Pakistan were refused entry in August, September and October; how many in each month were granted temporary admission pending consideration of representations by hon. Members; and what are the comparable figures for 1984.

Mr. Waddington: Information about persons seeking leave to enter the country as visitors who are refused leave to enter at United Kingdom ports and those whose removal is deferred pending representations, is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The numbers of citizens of Pakistan who were refused leave to enter and subsequently removed in August, September and October in 1984 and 1985 are as follows:

Month of removal	1984	1985
August	155	155
September	138	153
October	149	151

South West Africa People's Organisation

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representatives of the South West Africa People's Organisation have been detained or arrested under the Prevention of Terrorism Act.

Mr. Hurd: No one has been detained or arrested by virtue of his or her connection with SWAPO. One of the hundreds of people briefly examined by the police at the ports this year is known to have been a representative of SWAPO.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what terms Mr. Shapua Kaukungua of the South West Africa People's Organisation has been allowed to enter and work in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Mr. Kaukungua was appointed as the London and Western European representative of the South West Africa People's Organisation in 1976. In November of that year he was admitted to the United Kingdom for 12 months on condition that he took no employment other than with the organisation and he has since been granted further leave to remain on that condition.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department spent on advertising in national and local newspapers on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85; and what is the amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86.

Mr. Hurd: The information requested is not readily available. I will reply as soon as possible.

Civil Defence

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters have been sent out to local authorities by Mr. Eric Alley, civil defence adviser to the Home Office, since 1 October; with which authorities Mr. Alley has engaged in correspondence; and if he will publish the text of all correspondence in the Official Report.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1985, c. 275]: Between 1 October and 20 November the civil defence advisee wrote to Avon, Greater Manchester, Kent, Mid-Glamorgan (two letters), North Yorkshire, Tyne and Wear, Warwickshire and West Glamorgan (two letters) county councils; and Carmarthen district council. Whilst it would not be appropriate to publish the correspondence in the Official Report, I have placed copies in the Library.

Fraud

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable as to the number of new investigations started by the City of London police company fraud squad for each year since 1979; how many of those investigations have been completed since 1979; how many of these investigations have led to prosecutions; and how many of these investigations have been referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1985, c. 29]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police for the City of London that from 1 January 1979 to 31 October 1985, 450 fraud investigations were commenced; of these 321 cases have been completed, 112 cases have resulted in prosecutions, and 133 cases have been referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable as to how many of the investigations commenced by the City of London's police company fraud department have been referred to the Department of Trade and Industry or to the City solicitor for assistance; of these how many have been completed; and how many led to prosecution.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1985, c. 29]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police for the City of London that from 1 January 1979 and to 31 October 1985, 110 cases were referred to the Department of Trade and Industry or the City solicitor or both, and of these 78 cases have been completed, resulting in 47 prosecutions.

ENERGY

Euratom Treaty

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy if there is any disagreement within the European Economic Community on the interpretation of articles 81 and 84 of the Euratom treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: There is no disagreement between the United Kingdom and the European Commission over the interpretation of articles 81 and 84 of the Euratom treaty.

Civil Nuclear Facilities

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to reach agreement with the European Commission over article 36 of regulation 3227/76 about the safeguarding of civil nuclear facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the written question of the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 25 July 1985.

Nuclear Reactors (Safety)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will indicate the specific time periods in which the radioactive material produced in (a) Calder Hall and (b) Chapel Cross nuclear reactors has been subject to the full safeguards procedures as set out in the 1977 tripartite safeguards agreement between the United Kingdom, Euratom, and the International Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Goodlad: The safeguards procedures set out in the 1977 tripartite safeguards agreement between the United Kingdom, Euratom and the International Atomic Energy Agency are not applicable to material in facilities which are excluded for national security reasons. The Calder Hall and Chapel Cross nuclear reactors fall into this category and the material produced in them is not subject to the terms of the agreement.

Fast Reactor Programme

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the future plans for the fast reactor programme beyond 1990.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy announced on 16 January 1984, at columns 47-48 that the United Kingdom had joined a European collaboration for the joint and long-term development of fast reactors through signature of an intergovernmental memorandum of understanding with France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and Belgium.

I subsequently reported on 24 May this year, at columns 586-87, that the Government's general policies on the United Kingdom's participation in the collaboration had been set out in a letter from the Secretary of State for Energy to the chairman of the UKAEA, copies of which are available in the Libraries of both Houses.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much public dividend capital has been allocated to each of the nationalised industries for which he is responsible in each of the past five years.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: None.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much his Department spent on advertising in national and local newspapers, on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85; and what is the amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86.

Mr. Peter Walker: In 1984-85 my Department budgeted and spent the following on advertising:

Press £1,572,000
TV £1,302,000

In 1985-86, £75,347 has been spent on press advertising to date. The main advertising spend will occur in January to March 1986 with press and television advertising to support Energy Efficiency Year. I anticipate total advertising expenditure to be approximately

Press £2 million
TV £1·9 million

Magnox Reactors

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer, Official Report, 25 November, column 412, to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) if he will specify which Magnox reactors were the origin of the spent fuel and plutonium to which he referred.

Mr. Goodlad: the information is as follows:

Civil Reactors:
Berkeley
Bradwell
Dungeness A
Hinkley Point A
Hunterston A
Latina
Oldbury
Sizewell A
Tokai Mura
Trawsfynydd
Wylfa

Military Reactors:

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Budget

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the United Kingdom's overseas aid budget for the last five years to each recipient country in terms of per capita in each such country.

Mr. Raison: This information is contained in the 1981 to 1985 editions of "British Aid Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library of the House. The relevant tables are numbered 15 in the 1981 and 1982 editions and 26 in the 1983, 1984 and 1985 editions.

Relief Agencies

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the Government's contribution to relief agencies in (a) Honduras, (b) Nicaragua, (c) El Salvador and (d) Guatemala, both in terms of gifts in kind and funding of programmes; which organisations received such aid, giving amounts in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: The British Government's response to appeals for assistance to Central America from international relief organisations for the financial years 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 (to date) was:

Financial year	Organisation	Amount (£)	Principal beneficiary

£100,000 was provided in 1985-86 for Guatemalan Refugees in Mexico.

Britain also supported small development projects co-financed with British voluntary agencies as follows:

International Planned Parenthood Federation

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what purpose funds paid by his Department to the International Planned Parenthood Federation are intended.

Mr. Raison IPPF provides family planning information and services in poor countries. ODA's grant is a contribution to the federation's work programme.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is satisfied that none of the funds made available through his Department to the International Planned Parenthood Federation are used to finance programmes involving elements of compulsory abortion and sterilisation and that none of the funds are used to substitute staff and resources which are used in such programmes.

Mr. Raison: The International Planned Parenthood Federation provides support for family planning associations, which are bound by the federation's overall policies. These clearly state that abortion is not a method of family planning and that individuals should not be coerced into practising family planning. I know of no evidence that any family planning association runs a compulsory abortion or sterilisation programme. The question of substitute staff and resources does not therefore arise.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the International Planned Parenthood Federation concerning compulsory sterilisation programmes in El Salvador.

Mr. Raison: I saw the federation's secretary general and other officials in February. The federation's programme in El Salvador was one of the issues raised, and I was assured that it had no element of coercion.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will cease the funding of the International Planned Parenthood Federation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: The Government intend to continue their support for the International Planned Parenthood Federation. They remain convinced that population issues are an important aspect of economic and social development, and that the fund has a significant role to play.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Head Teachers (Secondary Schools)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if financial assistance would be granted to head teachers of secondary schools for additional responsibilities resulting from his proposed system of teacher appraisal; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The offer tabled in the Burnham committee on 12 September and constructed on the Government's conditional willingness to see an extra £1,250 million spent on teachers' pay would have provided for the introduction of systematic arrangements for appraisal of performance and would have given head teachers substantial pay increases of about 18 per cent. The unions rejected this offer after just 20 minutes' consideration.

University Grants Committee

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives of the University Grants Committee; and what subjects were discussed.

Sir Keith Joseph: I last met the University Grants Committee on 1 November 1984 when a number of issues were discussed, including the committee's advice, published in September 1984, on "A Strategy for Higher Education into the 1990s". Since that date I have had several meetings with the chairman of the University Grants Committee.

Equal Opportunities Officer

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many of the applicants for the post of equal opportunities officer in his Department were (a) white males, (b) white females, (c) males of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin or (d) females of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin.

Sir Keith Joseph: It is not the practice to fill posts of this nature by inviting staff to apply for them. Existing staff in personnel units have been designated as equal opportunity officers on the basis of their overall suitability and not on the basis of sex or ethnic origin. Equal opportunity matters are not their sole responsibility.

Primary and Secondary Schools

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish a table showing for (i) primary schools and (ii) secondary schools in England and Wales expenditure per pupil in constant price terms for each year since 1979;

(2) if he will publish a table setting out expenditure per pupil for (i) primary schools and (ii) secondary schools in Hertfordshire in constant price terms for each year since 1979;

(3) if he will publish a table setting out expenditure per pupil in constant price terms for (i) primary schools and (ii) secondary schools in Buckinghamshire in each year since 1979.

Mr. Dunn: The net institutional expenditure per pupil in primary and in secondary schools in Hertfordshire, Buckinghamshire and in England as a whole in each year since 1979 is set out in the table:

Net Institutional Expenditure per pupil

(1985-86 Real Terms)*

	Primary			Secondary
Financial year	Hertfordshire LEA £	Buckingham-shire LEA £	England‡ £	Hertfordshire LEA £	Buckingham-shire LEA £	England‡ £

* Real terms are the cash expenditure for each year repriced using the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator.
† 1983-84 is the latest year for which actual figures are available.
‡ Since 1979-80 responsibility for primary and secondary education in Wales has rested with the Secretary of State for Wales.

Vocational Education

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has issued any guidance to professional bodies in order to help them improve their contributions to vocational education.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend has not issued any formal guidance, and would not expect to do so unless the final report of the review of vocational qualifications (expected in April 1986) indicates that such guidance might be desirable. However, my right hon. Friend does on occasion address gatherings organised by professional bodies, at which he may raise issues relating to their contribution to vocational education. In particular, he raised several such issues in his Rivers lecture on 14 November last, a copy of which I am sending to the hon. Member. In addition, officials of the Department and Her Majesty's inspectors have regular contact with the major professional bodies concerned with vocational education, in the course of which they may give guidance on my right hon. Friend's views and policies.

Remuneration of Teachers Act

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration he is currently giving to seeking the repeal of the Remuneration of Teachers Act; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The local authority association expressed to me last March their dissatisfaction with the present pay machinery. I have made it clear that I am prepared to consider the case for change but that before coming to a firm view on the matter I would want to be satisfied that any new arrangements would offer the prospect of being a real improvement on the existing ones. I still await the detailed submission of such a case by the local authorities.

Pupil Achievement (In-school Factors)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals are currently being considered by his Department to initiate research intended to throw further light on in-school factors that affect the performance and achievement of pupils.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received a number of proposals in this area, in particular as a result of his statement of 14 November 1984, at columns 696-97, in which he expressed his willingness to consider such proposals in detail.

Handicapped Children

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take to assess the extent to which the provisions of the Education Act 1981 relating to special educational needs for handicapped children have been complied with.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is already monitoring implementation of the provisions of the Education Act 1981 through routine statistical returns, reports from Her Majesty's inspectors, contacts between officers of the Department and local education authorities and voluntary bodies and by means of a major research project based at the University of London Institute of Education. The report on this project is due to be presented in September 1986.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much his Department spent on advertising in national and local newspapers, on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85; and what is the amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Department spent £18,544 on press advertising and nothing on television advertising in 1984-85. Budgeted expenditure to date in 1985-86 is £26,049 on press advertising and nothing on television advertising.

Special Education Needs

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East of 2 December, Official Report, column 13, whether the figures referred to are derived from form 7; whether this form distinguishes between children already in receipt of a statement and those for whom a statement could be considered appropriate by the school; and whether he will place a copy of the relevant form from which the figures are compiled in the Library.

Mr. Dunn: The numbers of pupils with statements of special educational needs in mainstream and special schools given in the answer of 13 June at columns 514-18, were derived from form 7 and form 7M, respectively, for January 1984.

Before 1984 pupils were not classified as having special education needs but were ascertained as handicapped under the provisions of the Education Act 1944. The returns for January 1984 fell during the period when transitional arrangements under the 1981 Act applied, because authorities were not legally required to have completed their issue of statements until 31 March 1984. Accordingly, form 7 in January 1984 required schools to include in their returns, pupils already in receipt of statements and those who were previously ascertained as handicapped but had not yet received statements. These two categories of pupils were not distinguished in the return: to do so would have increased the complexity of the form to an unacceptable degree.

The form 7M returns for special schools (other than hospital schools) for both 1984 and 1985 did not ask schools to distinguish pupils with statements from others. All pupils in these schools are assumed to have statements. Copies of the relevant forms and notes for guidance have been placed in the Library.

Engineering and Technology Programme

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide figures to illustrate the equipment costs of the engineering and technology programme for 1985-86 and 1986-87 broken down between the university and public sectors, respectively.

Mr. Chris Patten: The current estimate of institutional expenditure on equipment for phases 1 and 2 of the engineering and technology programme in 1985-86 and 1986-87 is as follows:

Financial Year	Universities	£m Public Sector
1985-86	*3.95	—
1986-87	2.74	1.93

* Including £0.43m for the Open University

Grant for 1986-87 is subject to parliamentary approval. Allocations under phase 2 of the programme are provisional pending the receipt of information from institutions concerning additional industrial support made available to them.

The above figures do not include provision made in 1985-86 for equipment expenditure in later years of the programme.

Further Education

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the sum of money available for capital spending on advanced further education, other than for the advanced further education major building programme, in 1986-87.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend has not yet decided the allocation of the total available for capital expenditure on advanced further education in 1986-87 between major building and other items.

Architectural Schools

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from individuals and organisations regarding the future of the architectural schools in higher education establishments in the regions; what decisions have been made on any closures which may result; and what criteria will govern such a decision.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have received some 350 representations from hon. Members, organisations and individuals regarding the future of the schools of architecture. As yet, no advice has been submitted by the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education (NAB). Consideration of provision in the Northern Ireland region is a matter for the University Grants Committee (UGC). No decisions have been taken.

I will consider the NAB's advice against the criteria determined by the transbinary architecture group and the recommendations made by the architecture intakes working party. I will, of course, give full consideration to the views expressed in the representations against the possible closure of individual schools.

THE ARTS

English National Opera

Mr. Favell asked the Minister for the Arts what assistance he is giving to the English National Opera to cover the deficit incurred in its 1984 tour of the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The English National Opera Company's tour of the USA in 1984 was an artistic success and increased American interest in British arts. However, it incurred a financial loss of some £750,000 because promises of local support did not materialise.

Like my predecessor, I have been impressed by the company's efforts to eliminate its tour deficit during the last year. I am happy to say that it has now raised over £421,000 towards this, and in recognition of its fund-raising effort and of the special circumstances the Government are making an exceptinal contribution to the company of £200,000 in the current financial year towards the balance. This contribution is being found from within the existing 1985-86 Supply Estimates provision for Class V, Vote 10, subhead B4 (research, surveys and other assistance). With these sums, the company should be able to eliminate the remaining deficit at an early stage.

PRIME MINISTER

Soviet Union (Jews)

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Prime Minister whether the President of the United States of America was able to report progress over the plight of Jews in the Soviet Union when he briefed her in Brussels following his summit with Mr. Gorbachev.

The Prime Minister: No progress in this area has been reported as a result of the Geneva summit. President Reagan raised the issue with Mr. Gorbachev and started a dialogue on Soviet Jewry and other human rights issues which will be continued at subsequent United States/Soviet meetings. There is no doubt about the importance the United States Administration attach to progress on human rights. I am sure, however, that the approach which the President has adopted is the right way to generate the mutual trust without which little progress can be made on matters of such sensitivity to both sides.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Golding asked the Paymaster General if he will take steps to develop the current job release scheme so that voluntary early retirement could commence at 60 years for men and 58 for women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Measures such as the job release scheme are kept under review, but we have no plans at present to change its current scope.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General what has been the effect on employment of the changes in national insurance contributions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar) on 25 April 1985 at column 980.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General how much his Department spent on advertising in national and local newspapers, on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85; and what is the amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A total of £6,670 was spent by the Department on advertising in 1984-85. This was for announcements of a routine nature in local newspapers.

The amount spent to date in 1985-86 is £18,102.

Training Allowance

Mr. Welsh asked the Paymaster General what was the training allowance for individuals on training opportunities schemes at skillcentres in November 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The weekly personal allowance paid by the Manpower Services Commission for full-time trainees aged 19 and over, including skillcentre trainees, on the training opportunities scheme and its main successor the job training scheme for each of these years is shown in the table. In addition to the personal allowance, trainees receive a credit of national insurance contributions, a midday meal allowance (or free meal) and assistance towards travel costs over and above the first £4 per week. Further allowances for an adult dependant and a contribution towards the cost of living away from home may be available depending on individual circumstances.

Weekly personal allowance

November	£
1982	36·70
1983	38·00
1984	38·00
1985	38·00

Business Closures

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General how many business closures have been reported to him since May 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the five-year period between 1 January 1980 and 31 December 1982 there have been 690,000 business closures and 830,000 business openings in the United Kingdom. These figures are derived from registrations and deregistrations for VAT.

Detailed figures were published in the 23 August 1985 edition of British Business, a copy of which is in the Library. As the article explains, the estimates are subject to revision as more information is received.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Foulkes asked the Paymaster General if he will list all the changes which have occurred in the method of compiling employment, unemployment and vacancy statistics since 1979; and if he will estimate the quantitative change in those statistics which has occurred as a result.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1985, c. 77]: Employees in employment, the self-employed and Her Majesty's forces are estimated separately, and together comprise the employed labour force. Since 1979 there have been changes in the methodology for estimating the first two elements of the employed labour force. In 1979 the estimates for employees in employment were based on the census of employment, updated by applying proportionate changes in the numbers of employees as estimated from sample surveys of employers. Estimates for the self-employed were obtained from the census of population, updated to 1975 by applying proportionate changes in self-employment from counts of national insurance cards; self-employment was assumed unchanged since 1975.

The first change in methodology since 1979 was the use of labour force survey (LFS) results to produce new estimates of self-employment for 1975 to 1979. These were published in the Janurary 1982 Employment Gazette. The LFS data were used in place of the discontinued information from the national insurance card count.

When provisional results from the 1981 census of employment became available at the end of 1982, they showed that the application of changes estimated from sample survey data to the previous, 1978, census figure was producing substantial underestimates of the number of employees in employment. The methodology was reviewed and a supplementary set of estimates, which included an undercounting allownace based on the average rate of shortfall which had developed between 1978 and 1981, was introduced. At the same time the conventional assumption that the level of self-employment had remained constant since the date of the latest LFS data were reviewed. As there were reasons for expecting some continuation of the upward movement in self-employment, a supplementary series which assumed a continuation of the rate of growth observed between the latest two surveys, was introduced. The reasons for, and full details of, these changes in methodology were set out in the June 1983 Employment Gazette.

Data from the 1983 labour force survey confirmed that the supplementary figures provided more accurate estimates than the basic series. The estimates for employees in employment were revised, using LFS data for 1981 and 1983 to assess the current extent of underestimation from the sample survey of employers. The self-employment series was updated at the same time. As the Department could now produce estimates in industrial and regional detail incorporating the adjustment for underestimation, estimates not incorporating the adjustment were no longer published and the term "supplementary" was no longer used. An article explaining the basis of the new estimates was published in the July 1984 Employment Gazette.

When the estimates of both employees in employment and the self-employed were updated to take account of results from the 1984 LFS and revised data from the 1983 LFS the figures for self-employment showed exceptional growth between 1983 and 1984 and the Department's statisticians considered it inappropriate to assume that this rate had continued. The estimates of self-employment for dates after June 1984, which will be reviewed when the 1985 LFS data become available next year, now incorporate the assumption that average rate of increase between 1981 and 1984 is continuing. An article describing these estimates was published in the March 1985 Employment Gazette.

The estimates of the numbers in the employed labour force following each of these changes in methodology are compared with those published immediately prior to the change in the following table. Some of the differences shown in that table result from the changes in the data available as well as methodological changes.

Monthly unemployment count

The unemployment count is based on administrative records and is inevitably subject to occasional changes in coverage as a result of changes in the way benefits are paid or in "signing on" arrangements. The following five such changes since 1979 have had a discernible effect on the figures for adult unemployment and have been taken into account in a consistent series of seasonally adjusted estimates according to the coverage of the current count of benefit claimants. This series was introduced in the July 1985 Employment Gazette.

(1) In October 1979, fortnightly attendance at unemployment benefit offices was introduced and the estimated effect was to add about 20,000, both to the unemployment count used at the time, based on registrations at jobcentres, and the claimant figures introduced later.

(2) In November 1981 the higher long-term rate of supplementary benefit was introduced for men over 60 who had been on supplementary benefit for over one year. Over the following 12-month period, this removed an estimated 37,000 men, again from both the registrant and claimant series.

(3) In October 1982 registration at jobcentres became voluntary, saving administrative costs and eliminating the need for unemployed people to attend both a jobcentre and an unemployment benefit office in order to get their benefits. The previous count of registrants at jobcentres became incomplete and it was necessary to move to counting claimants at unemployment benefit offices. This reduced the count by 190,000 on average as a result of three factors: (i) computerisation of count and improved accuracy with more up-to-date record keeping of those becoming and ceasing to be unemployed (estimated effect 78,000); (ii) exclusion of registrants not claiming benefits (−135,000); (iii) inclusion of severely disabled (+23,000). Details of the change were published in the September and December 1982 issues of Employment Gazette and figures on the new claimant basis back to 1971 were then published.

(4) The 1983 Budget provisions enabled 162,000 men, mainly aged 60 and over, to receive national insurance credits or the higher long-term rate of supplementary benefit without attending an unemployment benefit office. The effect accumulated between April and August 1983.

(5) In July 1985, a reconciliation between the Department of Health and Social Security's records and the Department of Economic Development's computer records of claimants showed discrepancies in the figures for Northern Ireland. The corrective action resulted in the unadjusted figures for July and August 1985 being 5,700 and 5,150 lower respectively than would otherwise have been the case.

In addition, the change in school leaving regulations in November 1980 affected the total claimant series later introduced, but not the seasonally adjusted series of adult claimants nor the registrant series in use at the time.

Young people leaving school are now assumed to be in full-time education until the beginning of the following school term and not entitled to benefit. From 1982 a separate count of non-claimant school leavers registered at careers offices has been conducted in June, July and August when the numbers are significant.

There have also been a few other minor changes and some temporary distortions, for example as a result of industrial action in the local offices. It was also thought that the introduction of taxation of unemployment benefits in July 1982 may have had some effect on the unemployment figures but none was evident. Similarly, the introduction of payment of unemployment benefit wholly in arrears from July this year has so far had no discernible effect.

Vacancies at jobcentres

Since 1979 there has been one change in the way statistics of vacancies at jobcentres are compiled. From October 1985 the published vacancy series was brought into line with the data the Manpower Services Commission use for operational purposes. The main change in coverage was the inclusion of "self-employed" vacancies. These vacancies are not opportunities created by an individual for his or herself—they are open to the general public, and reflect the change towards contracting out work that would previously have been carried out by employees. The new definition excludes vacancies handled by professional and executive recruitment, and separately identifies community programme vacancies which are now excluded from the seasonally adjusted series. The overall effect of these changes was to increase the total unfilled vacancies by about 6,000 and to reduce the seasonally adjusted series by some 15,000. Details of the changes were published in the October 1985 Employment Gazette.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Monklands, East

Mr. John Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the total amounts offered to firms in the Monklands, East constituency under regional industrial grants for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Brittan: Because information about payments under the old RDG scheme is not computerised, it cannot be provided on a constituency basis. However, information about RSA offers in previous years can be provided on a constituency basis, and the details for RSA in the Monklands, East constituency are as follows:

	Value of offers £'000
1975/76	90
1976/77	396
1977/78	nil
1978/79	20
1979/80	263
1980/81	568
1981/82	230
1982/83	120
1983/84	158
1984/85	299

Mr. John Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of the amount of £1,328,000 stated to have been offered to firms in Monklands, East constituency referred to in his letter to the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East dated 27 November.

Mr. Brittan: For reasons of commercial confidentiality, publication of the details of assistance to individual firms is limited in accordance with the arrangements announced by the then Secretary of State for Industry on 31 July 1974. But I am able to say that the amount of £1,328,000 referred to breaks down as follows:

	No. of offers	Value £'000
RDG II	24	1,048
RSA	3	280

Grants (Paisley)

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much of the money offered to firms in Paisley, North under the assisted areas scheme has been taken up.

Mr. Peter Morrison: So far £161,370 has been paid to companies on offers totalling some £1,687,700 made between 29 November 1984 and 31 October 1985 under regional selective assistance and the new regional development grant scheme in the constituency of Paisley, North. Payments are normally spread over a number of years, and further payments can be expected.

Regional Industrial Policy (Copeland)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will itemise the £252,700 offered under the new regional industrial policy to firms in the constituency of Copeland.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Two offers were made under the transitional arrangements as part of the new regional policy changes introduced on 29 November 1984. I would have difficulty in supplying itemised information to the hon. Member. All offers of grant above £5,000 are published in due course in British Business, but it would undermine the commercial confidentiality on which the scheme is based to make this information available in advance of publication.

Nationalised Industries (Public Dividend Capital)

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much public dividend capital has been allocated to each of the nationalised industries for which he is responsible, in each of the past five years.

Mr. Pattie: The information requested is as follows:

	British Shipbuilders £ million	Post Office £ million
1980-81	110	—
1981-82	107	5
1982-83	70	—
1983-84	274·9	—
1984-85	189	—

British Steel does not receive public dividend capital.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much his Department spent on advertising in national and local newspapers, on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85; and what is the amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

United States Export Controls

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the arrangements relating to United States export controls referred to in the reply of 23 November, Official Report, column 332, takes the form of a written agreement; and what degree of detail is involved.

Mr. Howard: The arrangements which my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade announced on 23 November 1984 were confirmed in writing in a confidential exchange between the United Kingdom and United States authorities. They are principally procedural, intended to reduce the scope for major disputes through consultation.

ENVIRONMENT

Equal Opportunities Officer

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the applicants for the post of equal opportunities officer in his Department were (a) white males, (b) white females, (c) males of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin or (d) females of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: It is not the practice to fill posts of this nature by inviting staff to apply for them.

The posts of equal opportunities officer in my Department are held, ex officio, by the head of the personnel management (central policy) division for central DOE, who is white female, and by the head of staff resources division of the Property Services Agency, who is white male.

Derelict Land

Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the amount of derelict industrial land now available for reclamation; and what plans exist to reclaim it.

Sir George Young: The 1982 survey of derelict land showed that there were 45,700 hectares of derelict land in England, of which 34,300 were considered by local authorities to justify reclamation. This year £82 million is available to reclaim derelict land compared with £23·5 million in 1979-80. Priority is given to schemes designed to reclaim urban land for an industrial, commercial or private housing end use.

Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to encourage private firms to reclaim derelict industrial land; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Grant is available to private firms to reclaim derelict land. In assisted areas and derelict land clearance areas derelict land grant is paid at the rate of 80 per cent. of the net loss incurred; in other areas it is 50 per cent. Demand from the private sector remains high and the resources made available have more than doubled in the last two years to £5 million in 1985-86.

Urban Development Grants

Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent on urban development grants in each year since 1982; how much it is proposed to spend in each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Up to the end of 1983-84, 44 projects assisted with urban development grant (UDG) had started on site. These projects involved public expenditure estimated at £16 million and private sector investment of £73 million. In 1984-85 a further 56 projects, involving public expenditure of £28 million and private investment of £100 million, started. In 1985-86 so far, 33 projects have started involving public expenditure of £17 million and private investment of £109 million. Thirtysix other projects have been approved for grant but have not yet started; these would involve public expenditure of £16 million and private investment of £57 million. Spend in future years will depend on the quality and number of projects submitted and the extent to which they address the objectives of UDG.

These figures demonstrate that UDG is levering into inner urban areas significant private investment which would not otherwise have taken place there.

Housing Investment Programme (Lambeth)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what housing investment programme allocation he intends to make to Lambeth for 1986-87.

Sir George Young: Housing investment programme allocations for individual authorities for 1986-87 have not yet been decided.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department spent on advertising in national and local newspapers, on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85; and what is the amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: During the financial year 1984-85, my Department, including the PSA, spent £1,207,000. For the financial year 1985-86, the budget is £995,000. Expenditure to date is £395,000.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, with reference to appendix 1 of the London Docklands Development Corporation's five-year operational plan published in January, whether the projections shown were made within the constraints imposed by the Government's external financing limit; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will state the expenditure at the London Docklands Development Corporation on (a) the acquisition of the land and (b) on reclamation carried out on the land by 31 March, referred to in the 1984-85 annual report and accounts in the category being reclaimed;

(2) if he will state the expenditure on acquiring and reclaiming the land referred to in the 1984-85 London Docklands Development Corporation annual report and accounts in the categories awaiting development, being developed, in use-released to developers and in use-environment and community.

Sir George Young: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the London Docklands Development Corporation in the second question. LDDC's expenditure on acquiring and reclaiming the land referred to in its 1984-85 annual report is as follows:

	Acquisition £ million	Reclamation £ million	Total £ million
Awaiting development	12·645	13·688	26·333
Being developed	8·340	8·579	16·919
In use/released to developers	4·248	3·185	7·433
In use/environment and community	3·463	6·051	9·514
Being reclaimed	17·112	11·691	28·803

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) of the total land acquired by the London Docklands Development Corporation since the initial vesting, on how much reclamation had not been completed by 31 March;

(2) of the land which was initially vested in the London Docklands Development Corporation in the orders of 1981, on how much reclamation had not been completed by 31 March.

Mr. Waldegrave: Reclamation of 67 hectares of the 237 hectares of land initially vested in 1981 had not been completed by 31 March 1985. Of the 199 hectares of land acquired by LDDC since initial vesting, reclamation was not complete on 158 hectares by 31 March 1985. The 225 hectares of land in question is the same as the total of 556 acres of land in the categories "awaiting reclamation" and "being reclaimed" in the LDDC's 1984-85 annual report and accounts.

GLC and Metropolitan County Councils (Staff)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the responses received to his Department's proposals in the consultation paper arising from the Local Government Act 1985 regarding early retirement arrangements for staff of the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 11 November at column 23.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department intends to review the operation of waste disposal in London after the new arrangements have been in operation for 18 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Section 10(1) of the Local Government Act 1985 places a continuing duty on my right hon. Friend to ensure that the arrangements for waste disposal are satisfactory.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department intends to lay the statutory order referred to in his Department's recent press release on waste regulation and disposal.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Waste Regulation and Disposal (Authorities) Order 1985 (S.I. 1985/1884) has been laid before Parliament today.

Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what use he intends to make of his powers under section 10 of the Local Government Act 1985 to establish single authorities for waste regulation and disposal where they consider that there would be advantage in joint arrangements between boroughs or districts but no satisfactory arrangements were made before 15 November 1985.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1985, c. 255]: I said that I would be prepared to consider alternative arrangements for waste disposal operations in the London boroughs of Bexley, Greenwich, Lewisham and Southwark if the two reasons which made it advantageous to have joint arrangements between all four boroughs ceased to apply.

The first reason concerned the arrangements for the existing contract for waste disposal serving Bexley, Greenwich and Lewisham. These boroughs and the contractor have now reached agreement on the future of the contract so that joint arrangements are no longer needed.

The second reason was the need to ensure adequate future waste disposal arrangements in the longer term for Bexley, which would not on its own be a sensible unit. The London borough of Bexley and Kent county council have now reached an agreement whereby Kent will act as agent for Bexley.

Since the advantages to be secured by joint arrangements between Bexley and the other three boroughs have thus been achieved in other ways, it is only necessary to consider the need for joint arrangements between these three boroughs. The agreement made by them on 14 November 1985 for their own waste disposal operations meets this need satisfactorily.

In these circumstances it is no longer necessary to set up a single authority for waste disposal operations for all four boroughs. The Waste Regulation and Disposal (Authorities) Order 1985 (S.I. 1985/1884) which has been laid before the House today, accordingly makes no provision for an authority for these four boroughs. All four boroughs, however, form part of the area of the London Waste Regulation Authority.

GLC (Seaside and Country Homes)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the responses received in support of his Department's proposals for future arrangements for the Greater London council's seaside and country homes; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: No. It is for those making responses to decide whether or not to make them more widely available.

GLC (Housing Renovation)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that the Greater London council's renovation programme to its transferred housing stock will be maintained at its current level after 31 March; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: It will be for the boroughs to decide the level of their renovation programmes to the transferred housing stock.

Liverpool City Council

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what talks he or his officials have had with Philips and Drew concerning Liverpool city council's financial arrangements; what was the substance of the exchanges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 29 November, at column 720, and on 4 December at column 242.

Local Authorities (Loan Interest)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the average rate of interest paid by local authorities on loans raised by them in the first half of the current financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government do not collect information on the average rate of interest paid by local authorities on loans until after the end of the financial year. Moreover, such information as is then collected does not distinguish between loans according to the period in which they were raised.

Housing and Planning (Legislation Proposals)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a list of all outstanding legislative proposals relating to housing and planning, giving the date and form of announcement of each proposal.

Mr. John Patten: The proposals which have been announced are set out in the table. The Bill will not necessarily include all proposals which have been the subject of consultation. It is always open to the Government to include in a Bill proposals which have not been the subject of consultation.

Legislative proposals relating to housing and planning

Note: In addition, consultation papers were issued by the Scottish Office on 17 May and 31 July 1984 on simplified planning zones, planning control over hazardous development and improvements and amendments to the planning system.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the organisations which have received the letter from his Department dated 29 November relating to innovative approaches to the management and ownership of local authority housing stock—proposals for legislation; and if he will place copies of the responses in the Library.

Mr. John Patten: The letter of 29 November relating to innovative approaches to the management and ownership of local authority housing stock—proposals for legislation, was sent to the following bodies:

Association of District Councils
Association of London Authorities
Association of Metropolitan Authorities
Greater London Council
London Boroughs Association
Housing Corporation
Institute of Housing
National Consumer Council
National Federation of Building Trade Employers
National Federation of Housing Associations
National Federation of Housing Co-operatives
National Tenants Organisation
New Towns Association
SHAC
SHELTER

I do not propose to put copies of the responses in the Library.

Housing (Debt Charges)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the procedure by which a local authority is or can be relieved by him of debt charges on housing which is demolished.

Mr. John Patten: This procedure applies only to local authorities receiving housing subsidy. If an authority can show, from a full consideration of the alternatives, that demolition is the best course on housing and financial grounds, it can apply to the regional office of my Department for a determination that subsidy should continue to be paid on the outstanding loan debt on the demolished housing and that subsidy should be paid on the costs of demolition. Such an application should normally be made before the decision to demolish is taken. Among the alternatives all local authorities are expected to consider is disposal of the housing or of the cleared site to the private sector. In some cases this will realise enough money to pay off the whole of the loan debt.

Widdicombe Inquiry

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to submit evidence to the Widdicombe inquiry on the roles of officers and members in local government.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today placed in the Library copies of a joint submission made by my Department, the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office on the respective roles of elected members and officers in local government.

SCOTLAND

Selective Financial Assistance

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the total amounts offered under the various selective financial assistance schemes at 1984 prices to companies in Scotland for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Younger: The total amounts of selective financial assistance at 1984 prices offered to companies in Scotland for each of the past 10 financial years are shown in the table below:

	Value of offers (£ million)
1975-76	70·3
1976-77	67·8
1977-78	47·9
1978-79	75·8

1981-82	50·7
1982-83	63·8
1983-84	67·0
1984-85	81·7

Notes (1) The figures include assistance under Section 7 and Section 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 and its predecessors.
(2) Current price values were converted to 1984 prices using a gross domestic product market prices deflator.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the total amounts offered, at 1984 prices, of selective financial assistance to firms in the Rutherglen constituency for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Younger: The total amounts of regional selective assistance at 1984 prices offered to firms in the Rutherglen constituency for each of the past 10 financial years are shown in the table below.

1981-82	2,772
1982-83	583
1983-84	78

Notes: (1) The figures include assistance under Secion 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 and its predecessors. Figures for Section 8 assistance on a constituency basis are not available.
(2) Current price values were converted to 1984 prices using a gross domestic product market prices deflator.
(3) Figures for the years 1976-77, 1980-81 and 1984-85 cannot be released as to do so would disclose confidential information relating to individual establishments.

Government Funding

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report all the voluntary bodies in Scotland which have received direct Government funding over the past five years and the total amount of such funding.

Mr. Younger: The total amount of the grants paid by the Scottish Office to voluntary bodies in each of the last four years is as follows:

1981-82	104,436,456
1982-83	123,353,973
1983-84	131,359,441
1984-85	145,567,067

Comparable information is not readily available for 1980-81. Lists of the bodies in receipt of grant are voluminous so I am sending them to the hon. Member and placing copies in the Library.

Liquidators

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many small firms in Scotland have gone into liquidation since May 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. It is not possible to separately identify those company liquidations involving small firms.

Between 1 April 1979 and 31 October 1985 there were 3,001 company liquidations in Scotland. This figure includes both compulsory liquidations and also creditors' voluntary liquidations.

Stobhill Hospital

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of all categories of staff currently employed at Stobhill hospital.

Mr. John MacKay: In 1984-85 the equivalent of 2,138 whole-time staff were employed at Stobhill hospital. Details in respect of the current year are not available centrally.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many gynaecological patients were admitted to Stobhill hospital maternity unit from Kilsyth in each year for the past five years.

Mr. John MacKay: Gynaecological patients are not generally admitted to maternity units. On the basis of the latest available information, however, the total number of patients from Kilsyth who were discharged from the Stobhill maternity unit in each of the last five years was as follows:

	Number
1980	181
1981	188
1982	172
1983	176
1984	142

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many gynaecological patients were admitted to Stobhill hospital maternity unit from Cumbernauld in each year for the past five years.

Mr. John MacKay: Gynaecological patients are not generally admitted to maternity units. On the basis of the latest available information, however, the number of patients from Cumbernauld who were discharged from the Stobhill maternity unit in each of the last five years was as follows:

	Number
1980	461
1981	620
1982	532
1983	518
1984	510

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland which hospitals will provide maternity services for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth in the event of the maternity unit at Stobhill hospital closing.

Mr. John MacKay: This would be for the Greater Glasgow health board to consider, in consultation as appropriate with the Lanarkshire health board, and to explain in any submission to my right hon. Friend for approval to close the unit.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department spent on advertising in national and local newspapers, on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85; and what is the amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86.

Mr. Younger: The total spent by the Scottish Office on advertising in national and local newspapers and other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85 amounted to £516,505. The amount spent on television advertising during the same period was £187,950.

The amount budgeted for advertising in newspapers and printed journals in 1985-86 is £496,800 of which £324,662 has been spent to date. The budget for television advertising is £140,000 of which £97,919 has been spent.

Leukaemia

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will conduct an inquiry into the incidence of leukaemia deaths in the Rosyth dockyard area.

Mr. John MacKay: I am considering how best the necessarily complex statistical and epidemiological analysis of claims made about the incidence of leukaemia near Rosyth dockyard and other defence establishments in Scotland can be undertaken.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of deaths caused by leukaemia in the Dunfermline district, the Fife region and Scotland for each year since 1970.

Mr. John MacKay: The numbers of deaths in which the underlying cause of death was recorded as leukaemia are given in the table. Figures for Dunfermline district are not readily available on a comparable basis prior to 1974. The change in international classification (ICD) codes noted below the table relates entirely to the revision of the ICD introduced in 1979 and does not affect the comparability of the figures.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the numbers unemployed in each postal code district.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The old postcode sector system of providing unemployment statistics for small areas was discontinued in September 1985. Although such information is still held for specialist use, as described in the Employment Gazette of July 1985, it could be made available in this instance only at disproportionate cost.

Information on the number of unemployed claimants by individual electoral ward can be obtained from the House of Commons Library.

Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing health service expenditure in Scotland for each year since 1979 in real terms, adjusted for (a) the gross domestic product deflator and (b) the medical price index.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Glyphosate (Aerial Spraying)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the extent, geographical location and ownership of sites in Scotland on which there has been aerial application of the herbicide glyphosate (Nphosphonomethyl glycine) during 1985 and the litre per hectare concentration applied on each occasion.

Mr. John MacKay: Only one application for limited clearance under the pesticides safety precaution scheme for aerial spraying wih glyphosate has been granted in Scotland during 1985. It was in respect of a small area of forest and in the event the approved spraying has not been undertaken.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Equal Opportunities Officer

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the applicants for the post of equal opportunities officer in his Department were (a) white males, (b) white females, (c) males of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin or (d) females of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin.

Mr. Eggar: It is not the practice to fill posts of this nature by inviting staff to apply for them. Existing staff in personnel departments have been designated as equal opportunities officers on the basis of their overall suitability and not on the basis of their sex or ethnic origin. Equal opportunities matters are not their sole responsibility.

EC (Technology and the Environment)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the proposals for an amendment to the treaty of Rome in relation to the European Economic Community's role in technology and the environment.

Mr. Rifkind: We agreed at the European Council on the text of new articles on technology and the environment to be added to the treaty of Rome. These allow for framework programmes for action on technology and their financing and all environmental programmes to remain subject to unanimity.

South West Africa People's Organisation

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has asked the South West Africa People's Organisation to make a declaration renouncing the use of violence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The South West Africa People's Organisation is well aware that we condemn all acts of violence in Namibia, whether committeed by it, the South African security forces, or by others. My right hon. and learned Friend made our position on this absolutely clear when he met Mr. Sam Nujoma, President of SWAPO, earlier this year.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what basis he decided to hold meetings in London with Sam Nujoma, President of the South West Africa People's Organisation.

Mr. Rifkind: We are willing to have contact with representatives of all the political parties involved in the Namibia negotiations.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government recognise the South West Africa People's Organisation as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people at the United Nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: We do not accept the United Nations General Assembly's recognition of the South West Africa People's Organisation as the "sole authentic" representative of the Namibian people; that can only be demonstrated in free and fair elections in Namibia under the United Nations plan.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government will support moves by the Namibian transitional Government to represent the views of Namibians in the United Nations on the same basis as the South West Africa People's Organisation.

Mr. Rifkind: We do not recognise the so-called "Transitional Government of National Unity" in Namibia. We consider that only free and fair elections, as provided for in the United Nations plan, will determine who has the right to represent the views of Namibians.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department spent on advertising in national and local newspapers, on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85; and what is the amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86.

Mr. Eggar: In the financial year 1984-85 the foreign and Commonwealth Office spent £245,374 on advertising. In 1985-86 its estimated expenditure on advertising is £261,000 and its actual expenditure to date is £214,715.

British Nationals (Libya)

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent steps have been taken to seek to secure the release of Robert Maxwell and Michael King, two British citizens held in Libya; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Mr. Maxwell was convicted and sentenced by a revolutionary court and Mr. King by a civil court. Both men are currently serving prison sentences. The legal process has not been exhausted in either case and it would therefore be improper for us to intervene.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government intend to complete their programme for testing warheads for Trident before resuming negotiations with the United States and the Soviet Union on a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Renton: It would be premature to resume negotiations on a comprehensive test ban while the outstanding problems of verification remain unresolved.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government have made to Mr. Gorbachev's invitation of 27 November for the United Kingdom to join the Soviet Union in a moratorium on nuclear testing, as a prelude to a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Renton: We are aware that when addressing the USSR Supreme Soviet on 27 November Mr. Gorbachev expressed the hope that the USA and other nuclear powers would observe a moratorium on nuclear testing. This did not amount to an invitation. We remain committed to seeking balanced, effective and verifiable measures of disarmament. Our experience since the 1950s suggests that moratoria on nuclear testing do not meet those criteria.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Randall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further consideration he has given to the introduction of a 200-mile fishing limit around the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We are continuing to support the FAO's efforts directed towards the establishment of a multilaterally-based fisheries conservation and management regime in the south-west Atlantic. The Food and Agricultural Organisation announced on 21 November its intention to carry out a study of fish stocks in the area and the impact of fishing. This is an encouraging first step, which we hope will lead to agreement on a conservation and management regime.

DEFENCE

Johannesburg Airport

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances British military personnel used Johannesburg airport whilst on official duties; and what were the numbers involved in 1984 and in the current year.

Mr. Stanley: The numbers of British military personnel who used Johannesburg airport on official duties during 1984 and 1985 are given in the tables. Apart from United Kingdom service attaches and their staffs taking up and leaving their posts in Pretoria, all personnel were in transit to neighbouring African states where they were engaged in training activities.

	In	Out
1984
Service attaches and support staff	2	2
Training activities	7	7
1985
Service attaches and support staff	1	5
Training activities	28	23

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spent on advertising in national and local newspapers, on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85; and what is the amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall answer shortly.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to stipulate in the contracts awarded to companies to manage the royal dockyards after April 1987 that no work may be carried out in the dockyards for the Argentinian navy, the South African navy or the Chilean navy.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is not planned to place on contractors a blanket restriction on carrying out work in the dockyards for other navies. However, it is intended that, under the contracts, the prior approval of the Ministry of Defence would be required before the contractors could agree to undertake any such work in the dockyards. Decisions would be taken in the light of Government policy towards particular countries at the time.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of foreign shareholdings will be permitted in the company or companies which are awarded the contracts for commercial management of the royal dockyards.

Mr. Norman Lamont: As I indicated in the House of 2 December, at columns 98-99, the precise proportion of foreign shareholdings to be permitted in the companies awarded the contracts for the commercial management of the dockyards has yet to be determined.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the proportion of foreign shareholdings held in the companies which have expressed interest in securing the contracts for commercial management of the royal dockyards.

Mr. Norman Lamont: When companies are invited to tender for the contracts to manage the dockyards from 1 April 1987 they will be asked formally to state the proportion of their shares which is foreign-owned. Such information relating to the companies which have expressed an interest in the scheme to introduce commercial management and to which I referred in the House on 2 December, at column 35, is available in the records of registered companies at Companies House.

Plutonium

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans Her Majesty's Government have to replace the military plutonium production reactors at British Nuclear Fuels Limited, Calderhall and Chapel Cross when they reach the end of their safe operating lives.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There is no early requirement to replace the military reactors at British Nucelar Fuels plc Calder Hall and Chapel Cross and the Government have no current plans to do so.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many scientific staff are currently engaged in research to ensure that a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty could be properly verified.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It would not be in the public interest to reveal details of the manpower effort engaged on research into verification of a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about British participation in the United States strategic defence initiative research programme.

Mr. Heseltine: In his letter of 26 March 1985 to NATO (and certain other) Defence Ministers, the United States Defence Secretary, Mr. Weinberger, said that the United States, consistent with her existing international obligations including the ABM treaty, wished to proceed with co-operative research with her allies in areas of technology that could contribute to the strategic defence initiative (SDI) research programme.

There have since been detailed discussions between the British and American Governments on areas of research in which it would be in our joint interest to co-operate, and on the arrangements to facilitate such co-operation. Agreement has been reached on an information exchange programme and on areas where United Kingdom companies and institutions have expertise which might form part of United States-funded SDI research.

A memorandum of understanding has been agreed which sets out the mechanisms for British participation in SDI research and which will be signed later this morning by the United States Defence Secretary and myself on behalf of our Governments.

To act as a focal point for British participation and to liaise with the United States strategic defence initiative office, an SDI participation office is being established within the Ministry of Defence immediately. This office will work in the closest concert with British companies and institutions interested in participating in SDI research.

TRANSPORT

London Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, column 565, concerning the docklands light railway, he will state the conditions he proposes to impose on any private owner or operator in respect of fare levels and structure, ticketing arrangements and their compatibility with comparable arrangements of London Regional Transport and British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: These matters are now under consideration. It would not be appropriate to deal with them by imposing conditions on the new owner but they might be the subject of an agreement between the owner and London Regional Transport.

Equal Opportunities Officer

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many of the applicants for the post of equal opportunities officer in his Department were (a) white males, (b) white females, (c) males of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin or (d) females of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin.

Mr. Ridley: It is not the practice to fill posts of this nature by inviting staff to apply for them. The post of equal opportunity officer in my Department is held, ex officio, by the head of the personnel management (central policy) division.

Motorways (Traffic Delays)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he keeps concerning major traffic delays, that is, over 30 minutes delay, on the motorway system; and in what form it is published or available on request.

Mrs. Chalker: My Department does not collect such information on a routine basis.

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the incidence of traffic jams on the M1 near the junction with the A405.

Mrs. Chalker: Some congestion is occurring on the southbound carriageway of the M1 at juncton 6 (with A405) because of the difficulty of joining the A405 westbound, which is heavily loaded. The A405, with the A6, is serving as link between sections of the M25 already open. Traffic signals have been installed on the A405, which have eased the situation, but the volume of traffic is such that especially at peak periods there are tailbacks on to the motorway. Preparatory work is in hand to erect variable-message signs on the M1 early in the new year to warn of delays ahead. When the M25 is completed traffic wishing to join it will have direct access from the M1 at junction 6A. After a period of monitoring we shall consider whether more permanent alterations are necessary at junction 6.

Coach Drivers

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce a new testing system for coach drivers using motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I am reviewing the content and duration of the public service vehicle test, but at present I have no plans to introduce an element of motorway driving into the test for coach drivers. The priority must be to ensure that coaches comply with the speed limit on motorways and, as I informed the House on 15 November, we are proceeding with plans to introduce speed governors accordingly.

CAA (Efficiency Audits)

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Transport what efficiency audits have been undertaken in recent years of the flight crew licensing division of the Civil Aviation Authority.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Although the CAA keeps the operations of its flight crew licensing directorate under regular review, there have not recently been any formal efficiency audits. At my Department's request, however, the authority has recently conducted a special review of the directorate's operations to see if it can reduce costs and so reduce prospective increases in charges. The results of the review have been made available to representative organisations, which have been invited to put forward their own proposals for cutting costs.

Canary Wharf

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions his Department has had discussions with the consortium which proposes to develop Canary wharf; and what has been the subject of those discussions.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department has met the consortium on five occasions to discuss the docklands light railway. Following these meetings, I was able to announce on 27 November, at column 565, that an understanding had been reached on means of funding the extension of the railway to the Bank, and on proposals for private ownership and operation of the railway as a whole.

Remedial Engineering Works

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of remedial engineering works at sites following accident investigations in the last 12 months for which figures are available in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the Greater Manchester area; and how many sites were involved, respectively.

Mrs. Chalker: This information is not collected centrally. Accident investigation and remedial works in Greater Manchester are the statutory responsibility of Greater Manchester county council as local highway authority.

Spray Suppressors

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has of spray suppressors falling from heavy goods vehicles on main roads.

Mrs. Chalker: I have no evidence that properly fitted and maintained spray suppressors are prone to fall off heavy goods vehicles.

International Flights (Heathrow and Gatwick)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the proportion of international flights from (a) Heathrow and (b) Gatwick, which comprises departures for (i) Paris, (ii) Amsterdam, (iii) Brussels and (iv) other continental destinations within 400 miles of London.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The following table shows, for the 12-month period from 1 April 1984 to 31 March 1985, the total number and percentage of all international flights from Heathrow and Gatwick (excluding those to the Irish Republic) to the following destinations:

	(a) from Heathrow		(b) from Gatwick
	Number of flights	Percentage	Number of flights	Percentage
i) to Paris	5,358	5·9	2,344	4·3
ii) to Amsterdam	3,979	4·4	1,516	2·8
iii) to Brussels	4,045	4·4	1,423	2·6
iv) to other continental destinations within 400 miles of London (including Frankfurt which is exactly 400 miles distant)	11,999	13·2	3,786	7·0
Total number of international flights	90,944		54,278

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department spent on advertising in national and local newspapers, on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85; and what is the amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86.

Mr. Ridley: During 1984-85, my Department spent £475,788 on press advertising and £1,726,810 on television advertising. For 1985-86, the amount spent up to 4 December 1985 was £134,289 on press advertising. There was no expenditure on television.

Transport Grant (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Welsh asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from South Yorkshire passenger transport executive about the effect of the 1986-87 transport grant on fares, jobs, services and concessionary fares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am considering an application from the South Yorkshire passenger transport authority for redetermination of its expenditure level for 1986-87.

Motorway Maintenance Workers (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Welsh asked the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements have been made for employees on motorway maintenance work to be transferred from South Yorkshire metropolitan council to the consultants who are going to be responsible for this function after April 1986.

Mrs. Chalker: There are no staff transfer arrangements; but the consultants, and the contractors who will be working with the consultants, are free to recruit staff presently with the county council if they wish. I shall write to the hon. Member with further details.

M1-A1 (Kirkhamgate-Dishforth Link)

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is yet in a position to make a statement regarding the proposed Kirkhamgate-Dishforth M1-A1 link.

Mrs. Chalker: I have announced the decision today and a copy of the decision letter is available in the Library.

Used Tyre Dealers

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to licence used car tyre dealers and to monitor dealers who are selling tyres with defects; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: No. I do not believe the scale of the problem is such that we should consider seriously a statutory licensing system for dealers in used tyres. Trading standards officers are already empowered to examine tyres offered for sale, and I have recently advised motorists to check tyres for obvious defects before purchase.

Bus Services (Unlicensed Persons)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if any complaints have been received by the Traffic Commissioner for the metropolitan area regarding unlicensed persons driving tendered bus services for London Regional Transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that the metropolitan traffic commissioners have no record of any complaints relating to the drivers of bus services tendered by London Regional Transport.

Airport Company (Manchester)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the proposals submitted to him by the Greater Manchester district council co-ordinating committee for the establishment of an airport company at Manchester.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government recognise the immense value of Manchester international airport to the region and the nation. For this reason they are anxious to ensure that the airport's management continues to be financially sound and commercially orientated. However, the Government do not believe that the Greater Manchester district council's proposals, as recently submitted, would provide an appropriate management framework. The proposals are un-satisfactory in a number of ways, notably the following:

Services

Under the current proposals the airport company might look exclusively to Manchester city council for the supply of specialist services. The Government attach great importance to the principle that there should be a fully arm's length relationship between airport companies and local authorities. Airports should be free to seek professional and technical services from whatever source they wish.

Composition of Board

Under the current proposals the airport board might consist wholly of councillors. The Government think that the management of the airport should be represented on the board.

Private Capital

The current proposals include tight restrictions on the sale of shares. The Government wish to encourage the introduction of private capital into major local authority airports, which would be effectively debarred under the current proposals.

Asset Transfer

MCC proposes to lease airport land and buildings to the proposed company, rather than transfer the freehold. The transfer of the freehold to the airport company would strengthen the company's balance sheet and so facilitate the introduction of private capital. It would also help establish the arm's length relationship that we believe there should be between airport companies and their owner authorities.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the funding of the Elstree blood products laboratory; and what has been its ability to supply blood products in volume terms and as a percentage of United Kingdom needs, for each year since the laboratory was founded.

Mr. Whitney: The information is not available in the form requested. Elstree blood products laboratory (BPL) has been funded as part of the Central Blood Laboratories Authority since 1 December 1982. Prior to that it was funded from the overall allocations to the central blood laboratories administered by North-West Thames regional health authority. The following table shows the overall allocations to the Central Blood Laboratories of which BPL forms part:

	Gross Revenue £ thousands	Capital £ thousands
1981-82	3,407	1,817
1982-83	4,284	945
1983-84	5,297	*5,433
1984-85	6,148	*17,100
1985-86	7,504	*13,711

* Includes special provision for the building of the new Blood Products Laboratory at Elstree which is expected to be completed in 1986-87

The BPL output of factor VIII, (the dominant blood product), has been as follows:

	Units of Factor VIII (rounded to nearest million)
1981-82	21
1982-83	22
1983-84	30
1984-85	28

The plant at ELstree is intended to meet the needs of England and Wales only. It is estimated that at present it supplies about 40 per cent. of the factor VIII used in England and Wales.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many letters he has received in 1985 concerning the restrictions on general practitioners preventing them from prescribing certain items required by people suffering from bladder and bowel disfunctions; and if he will make a statment.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Eccles (Mr. Carter-Jones) on 27 November at columns 605-606.

Severe Weather Payments

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 96, when he now intends to review the exceptionally severe weather payments made in 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I understand that the chief adjudication officer is issuing today his revised guidance to adjudication officers on dealing with claims to single payments of supplementary benefit for extra fuel costs arising from exceptionally severe weather. A copy is being placed in the Library.

We have no plans to seek reviews of cases which arose last winter; but people who are dissatisfied with decisions on their claims at that time may apply for them to be reviewed by adjudication officers, and the chief adjudication officer's guidance covers the handling of such requests.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the example of the promotion of the sale of cigarettes published in a newspaper, a copy of which has been sent to him by the hon. Member for Brent, South, contravenes the voluntary code agreed with the tobacco industry; if the print should have included a health warning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The photograph to which the hon. Member refers does not come within the terms of the voluntary agreements on cigarette advertising and sports sponsorship. Accordingly, a health warning is not required.

Tuberculosis

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the rate of notification of tuberculosis among the population of the United Kingdom over the last five years.

Mr. Whitney: The latest available information is shown in the table. The systems of notification of tuberculosis differ slightly in the constituent parts of the United Kingdom, and the figures are not exactly comparable year by year.

Notification of Tuberculosis: Numbers and rates per 100,000 population—United Kingdom 1980-84

Year	Number	Rate
1980	10,485	18·62
1981	9,290	16·48
1982	8,448	15·00
1983	7,792	13·82
1984	7,043	12·47

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish the costs of following up contacts of those who have developed tuberculosis during outbreaks over the last five years;

(2) if he will publish the total cost of routine vaccinations of children against tuberculosis in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that the information is not held centrally.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if any studies have been made on the effect of discontinuing the current tuberculosis vaccination programme on populations at risk in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will deposit in the Library the evidence presented to him on vaccination against tuberculosis by the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation;

(3) what assessment he has made of the implications for the future incidence of tuberculosis of his decision to phase out the current vaccination programme.

Mr. Whitney: In April of this year the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation considered a report on the value of the school BCG immunisation programme. This report contained evidence from other countries and information drawn from earlier studies in the United Kingdom. It included an assessment of the future incidence of tuberculosis if the present programme were to be terminated. As a result of its consideration of the report, the joint committee advised that the routine immunisation of school children should continue unchanged for the time being. The report is being prepared for publication. I will arrange for a copy of it to be placed in the Library as soon as it is available.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total number of cases of tuberculosis which have been reported to his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Whitney: The information is shown in the table. Figures from 1982 exclude notifications associated with chemoprophylaxis. Other changes mean that the figures are not strictly comparable year by year, but the effect is minimal.

Corrected notifications of tuberculosis (all forms) England and Wales 1979-1984

	Number
1979	9,266
1980	9,142
1981	8,128
1982	7,406
1983	6,800
1984	6,141

Smoking (Health Risks)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that the funding of both Action on Smoking and Health and the Health Education Council campaign against smoking represents the most effective use of resources available to advertise the health risks of smoking.

Mr. Whitney: The work of the Health Education Council and ASH is an essential part of the Government's overall effort to alert the public to the health risks of smoking. The purposes of their campaigns are different but reinforce one another and have together undoubtedly contributed to the marked decline in smoking which this country has experienced in recent years.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why the number of non-urgent cases who have been on hospital waiting lists for more than one year has risen from 397 to 427.

Mr. Whitney: I assume the hon. Member refers to waiting lists in Brent district health authority and he may, therefore, wish to contact the chairman of the health authority directly about this. I note, however, that the number of urgent cases on the inpatient waiting list for Brent fell from 224 to 30 over the same period, from September 1984 to March 1985.

London Area Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the expenditure in each of the area health authorities that cover London in each of the last six years.

Mr. Hayhoe: Following is the information requested derived from the annual accounts of district health authorities and their predecessor area health authorities.

£ million

Area Health Authorities	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82

Notes:

1. The expenditure shown is the total of revenue and capital expenditure by each district and area health authority, together with regional health authority capital expenditure on services for that particular district or area. Other expenditure by regional health authorities cannot be attributed to individual districts and is therefore excluded.

2. Total revenue expenditure on the London ambulance service, which is met by the four Thames regional health authorities, was:

	£ million
1979-80	23·0
1980-81	29·9
1981-82	33·7
1982-83	34·8
1983-84	35·2
1984-85*	35·7

3. The table excludes payments to doctors, dentists, pharmacists, opticians and others contracted to provide family practitioner services. Only a limited number of authorities account for this expenditure and it is not attributed to individual districts. The total of these payments for the Greater London area was:

	£ million
1979-80	239·1
1980-81	297·9
1981-82	342·8
1982-83	389·8
1983-84	410·4
1984-85*	453·1

4. The table groups the former area health authorities with the district health authorities which succeeded them in 1982. For some inner London authorities this does not give an exact match because of the boundary changes made at the time, and the figures are therefore not fully comparable over the whole period.

* Provisional figures.

Hampshire

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the population of the county of Hampshire in each year since 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980 and 1985, respectively.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is given in the following table. The latest year for which the figures are available is 1984.

Year	Estimated Resident Population of Hampshire at 30 June
1965	1,269,000
1970	1,374,000
1975	1,446,200
1980	1,475,300
1984	1,509,500

Action Plans

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take against those district health authorities which fail to submit action plans.

Mr. Whitney: I have no reason to suppose that any health authority will fail to submit its action plan.

NHS Tenants

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the unavailability to National Health Service tenants of a statutory right to buy self-contained property owned by health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: None. Although the Housing Act 1980 does not apply to Crown property, it is the Department's general policy to offer tenants the opportunity to buy the accommodation they occupy if it is surplus to National Health Service requirements. Where tenants accept the offer, a discount calculated in accordance with the Housing and Building Control Act 1984 is allowed. I am not aware of any dissatisfaction with these arrangements.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation providing for security of tenure for National Health Service employees in self-contained accommodation rented from their employing authority.

Mr. Whitney: We have no plans to do so. Accommodation for National Health Service employees is to aid the efficient operation of the National Health Service and is not intended to be a means of providing permanent homes for staff.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has issued guidance to district health authorities and regional health authorities on the probable alternatives to the removal of National Health Service staff by district health authorities from National Health Service property as part of Her Majesty's Government's proposals to dispose of certain National Health Service assets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: A circular was issued in July this year which made it clear that surplus National Health Service accommodation will, wherever possible, be offered to tenants for purchase. Where it is not possible to make this offer, or where tenants are unwilling to purchase the accommodation, they will be given at least one year to make alternative arrangements. This clearly includes seeking to purchase accommodation or to rent local authority or private accommodation.

Community Care

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on progress by district health authorities on their proposals for community care; and if he will take steps to collate the relevant returns from district health authorities.

Mr. Whitney: Much has been done to develop community care but much remains to be done. More information is given in the Government's response (Cmnd. 9674) to the report of the Social Services Committee on community care, in relation to services for mentally handicapped and mentally ill people. The collection of information on community health services provided by district health authorities is undertaken by regional health authorities. Detailed information on individual district health authorities is not collected centrally and there are no plans to do so.

Supplementary Benefit

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if Her Majesty's Government intend to introduce new supplementary benefit regulations relating to extra heating payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The main forms of help for supplementary benefit claimants in meeting their heating costs are the weekly scale rates, which are intended to cover normal living expenses generally, and an extensive range of regular weekly "heating additions" giving substantial extra help to claimants, including all supplementary pensioner householders over 65, whose circumstances may be expected to give rise to a need for extra expenditure on heating.

Both the scale rates and the heating additions have been increased in the recent uprating; for example, a supplementary pensioner householder over 65 now qualifies for a heating addition of at least £2·20 a week, and a supplementary pensioner householder over 85 for a heating addition of at least £5·45 a week. We have no other immediate proposals to change these amounts or the regulations governing them. My hon. Friend will, however, be aware of the social security Green Paper proposals under which expenditure on heating additions would be included in the resources available for the proposed income support scheme, and the pattern of heating additions would be taken into account in setting the income support premiums for pensioners and other groups.

Alongside these major provisions, the supplementary benefit regulations also provide for single payments to claimants who experience extra fuel costs arising from exceptionally severe weather. I understand that the chief adjudication officer is today issuing revised guidance to adjudication officers on the operation of this regulation, following a recent ruling by the social security commissioners. We are continuing to consider the provision very carefully in the light of the commissioner's decision and the chief adjudication officer's guidance. A copy of the guidance is being placed in the Library.

Consultant-Junior Doctor Ratio

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will, in collaboration with the National Association of Health Authorities, identify the districts or hospitals where significant shifts in the consultant to junior doctor ratio have taken or are taking place.

Mr. Hayhoe: I am considering the relevant recommendation of the Select Committee on Social Services and the Government response will be published soon.

Patients (Waiting Times)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has issued any guidelines to local health authorities on acceptable waiting times for patients seeking a first referral to a specialist.

Mr. Whitney: No guidelines have been issued. It is for the clinicians responsible for the care of each patient to judge the urgency of the need for referral to a specialist in the light of their knowledge of all the relevant factors of the case.

Over-80s Pension

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of those receiving the over-80s pension.

Mr. Major: At March 1985 there were some 37,200 recipients of the over-80s non-contributory retirement pension.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's estimate of the number of women who died of cervical cancer in the last year.

Mr. Whitney: The number of women who died with an underlying cause of death of malignant neoplasm of the cervix uteri (ICD 9th revision 180) in 1984 in England and Wales was 1,899.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many health authorities now run fully computerised systems for identifying women in the high risk category for cervical cancer;

(2) if he will estimate when all health authorities will have a fully computerised system for identifying women in the high risk category for cervical cancer;

(3) what percentage of women who have received cervical cancer screening are under 35 years of age;

(4) if he will make a further statement on the financing arrangements between his Department and the health authorities with regard to the cervical cancer screening programme, with particular reference to the proportionate contribution made by health authorities.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his estimate of the number of women who will not die next year as a result of the introduction of computerised systems of call and recall for cervical cancer covering all women in the age group at risk in every area;

(2) if he will list all the health authorities and family practitioner committees which have issued instructions to doctors in clinics or family doctors or both to suspend, delay or reduce the taking of cervical smears because of a backlog in pathology laboratories.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether a drug called Fetoprotein is used in National Health Service hospitals in the United Kingdom as a monitor for the effectiveness of cancer treatment.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let my hon. Friend and the hon. Members have replies as soon as possible.

NHS (Supplies)

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements he will make to improve the effectiveness of the supplies function in the National Health Service.

Mr. Fowler: The Health Service Supply Council, under the chairmanship of Mr. B. E. Cotton CBE, and latterly of Mr. W. M. Darling OBE, has done much to stimulate improvements in this field, but its effectiveness has been limited by the advisory nature of its powers. Having already established new management arrangements in the National Health Service, I have decided to wind up the council. We shall now provide a clear line of management and accountability from my Department direct to health authorities in supplies as in other matters. I am accordingly appointing a director of procurement and distribution, at under-secretary level, in the Department to support the NHS management board in ensuring that the NHS operates an efficient supply function.

The order and regulations needed to wind up the council will be laid before Parliament shortly.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much his Department spent on advertising in national and local newspapers, on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85; and what is the amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86.

Mr. Whitney: The amount spent by the Department of Health and Social Security on advertising in national and local newspapers, on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85 is as follows:

Television,	nil
All press,	£2,448,571

The amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86 up to and including 4 December 1985 is as follows:

Television,	nil
All press,	£648,086

The figures are the amounts that have actually been spent, which equal the amount budgeted to date.

Note: Advertising campaigns are paid for only when they are completed so figures for current campaigns, for example, drug abuse, are not included.

NHS Staff (Residential Places)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's estimate of the number of residential places for National Health Service staff which will be lost as a result of the selling of National Health Service property in 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Whitney: It will not be possible to make a useful estimate until proposals are received later this month from the regional and special health authorities.

Old People's Nursing Homes

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many old people's nursing homes, with how many residents, are registered in each of the district health authorities in West Yorkshire.

Mr. Whitney: At 31 December 1983, the latest date for which information is available centrally, the numbers of nursing homes with general specialty beds designated for the elderly registered with district health authorities in West Yorkshire and the number of these beds was as shown in the following table. Excluded are mental nursing homes, and beds not designated for the elderly in the nursing homes concerned.

District Health Authority	Number of registered homes with general specialty beds designated for the elderly	Number of general specialty beds for the elderly
Bradford	5	123
Leeds Eastern	1	16
Leeds Western	3	80
Pontefract	—	—
Wakefield	—	—
Huddersfield	1	16
Calderdale	7	145
Dewsbury	—	—

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many private old people's homes, with how many residents, there are in the areas of each of the five metropolitan boroughs of West Yorkshire.

Mr. Whitney: Provisional information on the number of private homes for the elderly and disabled and the number of residents in such homes, as at 31 March 1985, the latest date for which information is available, is given in the table.

Metropolitan Districts	Number of Homes	Number of Residents

Housing Benefit

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the amount of housing benefit paid to students in each of the past 10 years; what the projected figure is for the current and coming years; how many students received such payments in each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1985, c. 603-604]: I regret that the following information was omitted from my previous reply. Figures for the past 10 years are not available. However, estimates for the last academic year suggest that about £50 million may have been paid in housing benefit to some 200,000 students and the position is expected to be little changed this year.

Road Accidents (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) injuries and (b) deaths from road accidents have been dealt with in each of the last five years in the Portsmouth and South-East Hampshire health district.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1985, c. 133-34]: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. The numbers of road accident deaths registered in the registration districts most closely approximating to Portsmouth and South-East Hampshire district health authority are given in the table.

Droxford, Petersfield, Portsmouth and South-East Hampshire sub-districts of the registrars of births and deaths.

Year	Number of road acccident deaths registered
1980	41
1981	*14
1982	36

* The statistics for 1981 were affected by industrial action taken by Registrars.

Hospital Development

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the hospital development schemes costing over £5 million (a) completed since May 1979 and (b) started since May 1979, giving for each the district, the number of beds involved, completion date and the cost.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1985, c. 141-42.]: Following are lists of hospital development schemes costing £5 million or over recorded centrally: (i) completed since May 1979; (ii) started since May 1979.

Special Health Authorities

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the full membership of all the special health authorities, giving in each case the date of first appointment of members, the date on which each appointment is due to expire, and the nominating body or bodies.

Mr. Whitney: There are 14 special health authorities; eight for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals and six which serve specific specialists functions. Where appointments are made on the nomination of a body as provided for in sections 11, 22(4)(e) and 92(1) of the National Health Service Act 1977, the name of that body has been listed. All the other members of authorities are appointed by the Secretary of State for their personal qualities, taking account of recommendations by various bodies and individuals. PRIME MINISTER

European Parliament

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister (1) if she will make it her policy not to agree to any increase in the powers of the European Parliament;

(2) whether she will give particulars of the proposals which the Government are considering for increasing the powers of the European Assembly.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement that I made to the House on Thursday 5 December at columns 429-30 on the outcome of the European Council Meeting held on 2-3 December.

Crime Prevention (Downing Street Seminar)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Prime Minister whom she intends to invite to participate in the seminar which she intends to hold at Downing street early in the new year on crime prevention schemes.

The Prime Minister: Invitations to the seminar on crime prevention which I shall chair on 8 January are being issued this week to a wide range of organisations including representatives from industry, including certain nationalised industries, local authorities, the health and education services, the CBI, the TUC and the police.

European Community

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement setting out the areas of Community decision-making which will now be subject to majority voting in consequence of the decisions made at Luxembourg on 2 and 3 December; and if she will provide some representative examples of the kind of directives or regulations which will no longer require unanimous consent.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made to the House on 5 December at columns 429-30. Examples of measures which could be adopted by majority voting under article 100 include:

—common technical standards intended to remove barriers to trade: these are frequently held up by objections from one or two member states;

—certain consumer protection measures, eg the doorstep selling directive which has been blocked for some time by one member state;

—certain proposals in the agricultural field related to the achievement of the internal market, subject to safeguards for human, animal and plant health.

Economic and Monetary Union (Luxembourg Summit)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister whether there was any agreement at the summit meeting in Luxembourg on economic and monetary union; and if the agreed text of the outcome contains a reference to economic and monetary union.

The Prime Minister: The European Council agreed that the preamble to the text amending the Treaty of Rome should refer to the decision of the Heads of State or Government, at their conference in Paris in October 1972, to approve the objective of the progressive achievement of economic and monetary union. The Council also agreed that the Treaty of Rome should be amended to provide that any developments in the field of economic or monetary policy which necessitate institutional changes must be subject to the procedures of article 236 of the treaty, ie further amendment of the treaty and ratification according to national procedures. Like the Council's other decisions, these agreements are subject to reserves on the part of Denmark and Italy.

Small and Medium-Sized Undertakings

Mr. Grylls asked the Prime Minister if she will give further details of the European Council's decisions at Luxembourg on 2 and 3 December on the reduction of administrative and legal constraints on the growth of small and medium-sized undertakings.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made to the House on 5 December at columns 429-30. The conclusions of the European Council have been placed in the Library of the House.

Illiteracy

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on co-ordination between the Department of Education and Science, the Department of Employment and other Departments on the implementation of Her Majesty's Government's policy to combat illiteracy.

The Prime Minister: The Government's policies for raising performance in schools in all areas of the curriculum, including the improvement of standards of literacy, are set out in the white paper "Better Schools". The Department of Education and Science works closely with other interested department's wherever appropriate on the initiative outlined in "Better Schools". At the adult level, the membership of the management committee of the adult literacy and basic skills unit provides for co-ordination between the Department of Education and Science, the Home Office and the Manpower Services Commission, and there is also informal day-to-day contact between the unit, the Department of Education and Science and other Government Departments. The unit is engaged in development projects in the literacy field in partnership with the Manpower Services Commission and other relevant agencies.

Energy Policy

Mr. Mason asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the progress of all Government Departments in implementing the Government's energy policy objective of reducing the United Kingdom's longer-term dependence on oil; what part the coal firing scheme has to play in fulfilling this objective; and with what results so far.

The Prime Minister: In line with the Government's objective of ensuring that all economic forms of energy are produced, supplied and used as efficiently as possible, the coal firing scheme encourages industry to reduce energy costs by converting to coal from more expensive fuels such as oil.

By the end of November 1985 the scheme had created over 2·5 million tonnes of annual coalburn, mainly at the expense of oil. In the light of the success of the scheme the Government have decided to extend the deadline for receipt of applications to the end of June 1987.

Bishops

Mr. Adley asked the Prime Minister if she will review the basis on which bishops are entitled to sit in the Upper House; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The entitlement of Lords Spiritual to sit and vote in the Upper House has been established by long tradition, confirmed by statute. I have no plans to review the basis on which bishops take their seats in the Upper House.

Pensioners' Charter

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister if she will publish the latest estimate of the cost of implementing the pensioners' charter of the National Pensioners' Convention, in the manner of the answer of 22 March 1983, Official Report, columns 384-86.

The Prime Minister: I will reply to the hon. Gentleman shortly.

Television (Obscenity)

Mr. Murphy asked the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government have any plans to introduce legislation to extend to television the provisions of the Obscene Publications Act 1959 and to provide a new definition of obscenity to include the portrayal of acts of gross violence; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend the Member for Davyhulme (Mr. Churchill) has introduced a Bill to amend section 1 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959 and we shall be considering his proposals very carefully.

UNESCO

Mr. Spearing asked the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her reply of Thursday 5 December, she will state those national interests which would be prejudiced by continued United Kingdom membership of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation and the interests enhanced by forthcoming withdrawal.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the statement made by my right hon. Friend, the Minister for Overseas Development on 5 December at columns 448-57.

European Charter of Self-Government

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government intend to sign the European charter of local self-government; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. The Government subscribe to the general principles underlying the charter but we do not accept that the content is appropriate for a binding international agreement.

Public Bodies (Appointments)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply of 14 November, Official Report, column 236, if she will list each of the public bodies to which she has appointed members in each of the past five years.

The Prime Minister: The information is as follows.

ENERGY

Hinckley Point (Gas Leakage)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will provide the details of the leakage of coolant gas which occurred at Hinckley Point nuclear installation on 21 November, specifically indicating (a) what the estimated temperature of the gas was when it leaked, (b) whether the gas had been at any time in contact with the reactor, and (c) whether the gas had been, or came into contact with any of the concrete structure at Hinckley Point.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by the CEGB that, during the evening of 20 November, a crack in a pump cylinder housing led to a pipe failure in the CO2 plant room which is outside the reactor building. This led to a leakage of clean, unused CO2 which had never been in the reactor cooling circuits. There was no radiation hazard. I am asking the CEGB to write to the Hon. Member on his other points.

Plutonium

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy what weight and what proportion of spent nuclear fuel returned to the United Kingdom from magnox reactors in Italy and Japan has been reprocessed; and what safeguards apply to the reprocessed plutonium.

Mr. Goodlad: As my hon. Friend the Member for Pudsey (Mr. Shaw) said in his reply to the right hon. Member for Salford, East (Mr. Orme) on 5 March 1984 at column 393, the quantities of spent fuel received from individual countries are commercial-in-confidence. At October 1985 approximately 80 per cent. of the receipts of spent magnox fuel from the reactors at Latine (Italy) and Tokai Mura (Japan) has been reprocessed.

Whilst in the United Kingdom the plutonium produced by reprocessing this spent fuel is subject to Euratom safeguards and inspection and to appropriate IAEA safeguards. In respect of returned plutonium I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 16 April 1985 at column 123.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the plutonium produced by the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel from electricity board reactors by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd at Sellafield, for each of the last five years, have been subsequently (a) allocated for defence purposes, (b) stored for future civil use, (c) supplied to Dounreay for use in the prototype fast-breeder programme and (d) allocated to other users.

Mr. Goodlad: None of the plutonium produced over the last five years has been used for defence purposes. All of the plutonium produced from reprocessing the board's spent fuel has been stored on their behalf by BNFL.

Coal Mining Subsidence

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has now concluded his study of the Waddilove committee's recommendations on coal mining subsidence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The committee's recommendations are being considered. The Government's response will be published as soon as possible.

National Coal Board

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will introduce legislation to provide a quick local arbitration process to deal with disputed claims against the National Coal Board.

Mr. David Hunt: Arbitration is already available in disputes about mining subsidence compensation which arises under the National Coal Board's voluntary code of practice. The possibility of making this option more widely available is one of the many points raised in the Waddilove report, which is presently under consideration.

Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total amount of Government aid including grants, deficit grants, loans and social grants, provided to the National Coal Board between 1 July 1971 and 1 July 1982.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is compiled on a financial year basis. For the financial years 1971-72 to 1981-82 inclusive, the figures are as follows:

	£ million
Government grants, payments under the RMPS to redundant mineworkers, and writing-off of loans under the Coal Industry Act 1973	2,374
Net lending to National Coal Board	2,296

Coal Mining Subsidence

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will introduce legislation providing notification by the National Coal Board of undermining operations affecting property owners.

Mr. David Hunt: Provision for this is made under the Coal Industry Act 1975.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will introduce legislation requiring the National Coal Board to make good subsidence damage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Provision for this is made under the Coal Mining (Subsidence) Act 1957 and the Coal Industry Act 1975.

Coal Firing Scheme

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what approaches he has made to local authorities to assist in the development of the coal firing scheme; what responses he has received; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the coal firing scheme applies in the public sector.

Mr. David Hunt: The coal firing scheme is operated under section 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982, which provides powers for the Government to make available selective assistance for purposes connected with the development of industry. Public sector bodies are therefore not in general eligible to receive such support.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those bodies that have to date taken advantage of the coal firing scheme, giving the actual or estimated coal tonnage taken up.

Mr. David Hunt: Details of companies given assistance under the coal firing scheme are published quarterly in the Department of Trade and Industry's journal British Business, copies of which are held in the Library of the House. By the end of November 1985 total annual coalburn for projects receiving coal firing grant exceeded 2.5 million tonnes.

British National Oil Corporation

Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the value of assets transferred to the British National Oil Corporation on its formation on 1 January 1976; and if he will detail what assistance, direct or indirect, was provided by Her Majesty's Government to the corporation (a) between then and 31 October 1979 and (b) subsequently.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Under section 13 of the Petroleum and Submarine Pipe-lines Act 1975, the whole of the issued share capital of National Coal Board (Exploration) Limited (subsequently re-named BNOC (Exploration) Limited) was transferred to the British National Oil Corporation on 1 January 1976 for consideration equal to its face value of £50,000. This transaction, and all subsequent operations of the corporation until 31 December 1982, when its link with the account was severed, were financed through the national oil account.

Details of the amounts received by the corporation from the account, including loans from the national loans fund made via the account, and of payments made by the corporation to the account, are given in the corporation's annual reports and statements of account for each of the years to 31 December 1982 and in the published accounts of the national oil account for each of the financial years up to 31 March 1983, when the account was abolished. In the period up to 1 November 1982, when Britoil ceased to be a subsidiary of the corporation, the corporation received various investment and similar grants for which it was eligible in respect of its former oil exploration and development operations.

At 1 January 1983, after its link with the national oil account ceased, the corporation was provided with capital reserves of £30 million free of interest. In the financial year ended 31 March 1985 net grants totalling £66,520,000 were paid to the corporation under section 6 of the Oil and Gas (Enterprise) Act 1982.

Gas and Electricity (Disconnections)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the total number of gas and electricity disconnections for each year since 1979, and the number of pensioner households who have had their supplies disconnected.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have asked the chairmen of the British Gas Corporation and the Electricity Council to provide the information direct to the hon. Member.

Coal Industry (Redundancies)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to compensate or make retrospective payments to persons made redundant in the financial year 1983-84 from National Coal Board premises which were not shut down until after 1 April 1984; and if he will seek to amend the provisions of the Redundant Mineworkers Payments Scheme Order 1984 to the same effect.

Mr. David Hunt: No.

British Gas

Mr. Lester asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a draft of the proposed licence to be given to British Gas under the Gas Bill.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have today made copies of the proposed draft licence available in the Vote Office.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Contempt of Court (Sequestration)

Mr. Mason asked the Attorney-General if he will introduce legislation to restrict the power of courts to sequestrate the assets of organisations such as trade unions in contempt cases and to place a duty on the courts to make available to such organisations, on application, any proportion of the sequestrated assets which is necessary to cover the reasonable day-to-day running costs of the organisation concerned; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: No. The remedy in such cases is for these organisations to obey the lawful orders of the court in the first place, and if they do not, to purge their contempt.

Fraud

Mr. Dobson asked the Attorney-General how many reports on fraud were submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions by the City of London and Metropolitan police and how many resulted in prosecutions in each year since 1979; what was the average length of time taken to consider such reports in each year; and what were the longest and shortest times taken, respectively, in each year.

The Solicitor-General: It has not been possible to collate the information requested within the time available. I will write to the hon. Member.

Fraud Investigation Group

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Attorney-General if he will name the members of the fraud investigation group dealing with the Peter Cameron Webb and Alexander Howden case.

The Solicitor-General: It is the policy of the director not to name the official, police officers and other persons who comprise a particular fraud investigation group. The fraud investigation group dealing with the Peter Cameron Webb and Howden case comprises the deputy Director of Public Prosecutions, an assistant director of public prosecutions, one professional officer, two detective superintendents, two detective chief inspectors, and five counsel (including two leading counsel) together with appropriate support staff.

TRANSPORT

British Railways Board (Property)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the response from the British Railways Board to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the board's property activities, published on 5 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The British Railways Board (the board) has considered the report and prepared a response, copies of which I am placing in the Library of the House. The response shows that the board is ready to accept the great majority of the commission's recommendations, and describes the action that the board will be taking for implementation. I welcome the board's initial response to the report. My Department is monitoring progress on this and I will make a further statement next year on the board's implementation of the commission's recommendations.

It is the Government's general policy that all land surplus to the requirements of public authorities should be offered for sale as soon as practicable. While the commission saw no reason to criticise the board's decision to sell surplus property, it did suggest that the implementation of this decision was deficient in some respects. I am pleased to note from the board's response that it is confident that no sales have taken place in ill-considered ways or with unnecessary loss.

The main business of the board is running the railway and the Government wish to see the board continue with its very successful programme of property disposals as vigorously as possible. Accordingly, we have restated to the chairman of the board the objectives which the Government wish the board to pursue towards its property. In particular these call for the board to continue to manage its operational property in accordance with best commercial practice, and to identify and divest itself of all its underused or surplus land and property as rapidly as possible, avoiding distress sales. Judgments on timing and relative priorities are to be based on discounted cash flow appraisal using a rate of discount not less than the required rate of return.

The commission drew attention to the need for improvements in the organisation and management structure within the board in order to secure the best return from the estate. I welcome the action which the board is proposing to improve its handling of property matters, including strengthening the role of the managing director of the British Rail Property Board and setting up a BR property review group. The board believes that this will achieve the aims identified by the commission in a manner more compatible with the overall management structure of the board.

The commission was critical of the board's procedures for releasing land no longer needed for operational use, which it saw as "cumbersome and expensive". I welcome the study which the board has set in hand to identify improvements that can be made in this important area.

The commission acknowledged the board's success in developing and exploiting its operational estate, but made a number of recommendations for improvements. I look forward to effective implementation of the steps that the board is taking, including those to improve the procedures for reviewing development opportunities and for appraising property investments. I am encouraged by the progress being made in improving the marketing of railway arches and station trading facilities, and I look to the board to exploit to the full the opportunities for extending competition and involving the private sector in these areas.

The commission also recommended that my Department should undertake a thorough review to determine how far current liabilities in respect of property no longer needed for the railway should be removed from the board or separately funded. My Department immediately sought from the board the factual information necessary to conduct this review, and is giving it careful consideration.

We are grateful to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for this wide-ranging report which I am confident will provide the stimulus for a variety of significant improvements in the manner and efficiency with which the board conducts its property activities.

Vehicle Testing

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many VT12 forms, garage monthly returns of Department of Transport tests performed, are printed each year; and at what cost.

Mrs. Chalker: Precise annual figures are not available as VT12 forms are ordered at irregular intervals. However, based on the last three years, the average yearly usage is approximately 35,000 pads of 30 forms at a yearly cost of approximately £14,000.

M25

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest position with regard to payments by his Department to the Birse Farr joint venture for remedial works carried out to joints on the M25 Reigate-Leatherhead section; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: No payments for remedial work to joints have been made. Our consulting engineers have not yet received full and detailed particulars of any claim in this respect.

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many deaths there have been as a result of motor accidents on the M25; and if he will list their location.

Mrs. Chalker: Up to and including June 1985, there were 26 fatalities on the M25 as a result of road accidents. I regret that identifying the locations of each of these would involve disproportionate cost.

Motorways (Lighting)

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has made into the effects of providing lighting on motorways; and if any research has been carried out into the effectiveness of motorway lighting in the prevention of accidents.

Mrs. Chalker: Research from a number of countries has indicated extremely variable reductions in accidents due to motorway lighting and the transport and road research laboratory is currently undertaking a study which should be completed early in 1986.

Drink Drive Campaign

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce the full details of the drink drive campaign for the Christmas period.

Mrs. Chalker: I announced details of the campaign at a press conference earlier today. A copy of the campaign guide and supporting material has been placed in the Library. I am sending a copy to my hon. Friend.

Ribblehead Viaduct

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of Ribblehead viaduct, on the Settle to Carlisle railway line.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Ribblehead viaduct on the Settle-Carlisle railway line is a scheduled monument and as such may not be altered or demolished without scheduled monument consent. The Railways Board's proposal to withdraw rail services from the line does not affect this position.

Channel Fixed Link

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has made any study into the effects of a Channel fixed rail link on the average travel time, city centre to city centre, from London to (a) Paris, (b) Brussels and (c) Amsterdam; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: This matter is being covered in the Government's assessment of fixed link proposals that is at present under way.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in negotiating an agreement on the fixed link with the French Government, he will seek to make arrangements enabling French permits for commercial vehicles to be more readily available.

Mr. David Mitchell: This point has been covered in discussions between my right hon. Friend and his French counterpart.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the implications of the ban on commercial vehicle movements during Sundays and bank holidays in France for the projected level of use of such a link by heavy goods vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I will answer this question shortly.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport when and in what form he expects to publish the joint British and French Governments' assessment of the proposals for a fixed Channel link; and if he will make it his policy to include in it an assessment of the relative economic impact of such a link on different regions of the United Kingdom and on north-eastern France in so far as it affects those regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government intend, as soon as possible after announcing their decision as to which, if any, scheme is to go ahead, to publish a White Paper giving the full reasons behind their decision. This will include an economic assessment of the effects of the chosen scheme on Kent and on other parts of the United Kingdom, bearing in mind all relevant factors. The Government are not responsible for north-eastern France.

Nationalised Transport Companies (Purchasing Policies)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make it his policy that nationalised transport industries should develop sources of supply from United Kingdom companies rather than looking to overseas manufacturing companies to provide their requirements for equipment.

Mr. Ridley: Nationalised industries are expected to follow the Government's purchasing policy, which encourages them to buy British goods provided that the products and prices are right.

Civil Aviation Authority (Meteorological Services)

Mr. Wiggin asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 4 December, what method the Civil Aviation Authority uses to bill airlines for meteorological services; what records are kept as to the payment of such bills; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The costs of services supplied by the Meteorological Office to civil aviation are added to the costs incurred by the authority in providing en-route navigation services, and these are recovered through a single charge for each en-route flight. For chargeable flights in the two flight information regions which cover the United Kingdom, charges (which are calculated on the basis of distance flown and taking into account the weight of the aircraft) are billed on behalf of the CAA by the European Organisation for the Safety of Air Navigation (EUROCONTROL).

The CAA itself levies charges (which are calculated on a simple per flight basis) for aircraft flights through the SHANWICK (North East Atlantic) flight information region, for which the United Kingdom is by international agreement responsible, and for helicopter flights over the North sea. Records are kept by EUROCONTROL and the CAA respectively in respect of the bills which they issue.

Driving Instruction

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place a copy of the most recently completed driving instructors' written examination in the Library.

Mr. Ridley: No. A series of examination papers are compiled from a bank of multi-choice format questions devised by my Department. They are designed to ensure that a successful candidate must demonstrate a high standard of knowledge over a wide range of relevant subjects and we believe that publishing individual papers could help potential candidates to learn the answers, rather than the knowledge. The whole range of subjects on which questions may be asked is set out in the Department's pamphlet ADI 14 "The Registration of Approved Driving Instructors". Most of the information needed to pass the examination may be found in the highway code, the Department's manual "Driving" and the Department's pamphlet DL68 "Your Driving Test". Copies of all these publications are held in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Durham, North (Grants)

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the total amounts offered to firms in the Durham, North constituency under regional industrial grants for each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is as follows:

	29 November 1982 to 28 November 1983 £'000	29 November 1983 to 28 November 1984 £'000	29 November 1984 to 31 October 1985 £'000
1. Regional selective assistance (value of offers made)	382	128	15
2. Regional development grant II (value of offers made)	—	—	352

Note: The value of RSA offers accepted in each of the three years was the same as for those made. In the case of RDG II, the offers accepted in the period totalled £324,000.

Garscadden (Grants and Loans)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the total amounts offered to firms in the Garscadden constituency under regional and industrial grants for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Butcher: I regret the information is not available for all regional and industrial grants because it would be too costly to transfer the historic records to the computer data base. For the same reason a manual search to match addresses is also ruled out. However, the new regional development grants are being recorded and regional selective assistance (RSA) under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act is available for past years. The details for RSA in the Glasgow, Garscadden constituency are as follows:

	Value of offers £'000
1975-76	—
1976-77	24
1977-78	—
1978-79	—

1981-82	—
1982-83	195
1983-84	85
1984-85	2,350

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of the grants and loans under the regional and industrial policy in the last year within the Garscadden constituency referred to in his letter to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden dated 27 November.

Mr. Butcher: It is not the practice to disclose details of financial assistance given to individual companies other than in accordance with the arrangements announced by the then Secretary of State for Industry on 31 July 1974. Details are also withheld where it is thought that an individual company could be identified prior to publication in British Business. However, the value of offers of regional selective assistance and of new regional development grant in the Glasgow, Garscadden constituency were as follows in the period 29 November 1984 to 31 October 1985.

	Value £'000
RDG II	102
RSA	2,350

Hull (Regional Aid)

Mr. Prescott asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial assistance under regional aid was given to Hull in each year since 1975 at 1984 prices.

Mr. Butcher: Government regional assistance to Hull since 1975 at 1984 prices is as follows:

Notes:

* The above figures are for expenditure within Hull travel-to-work area (TTWA). All figures are gross and include payments to nationalised industries. The items included in the expenditure are regional development grants and regional selective financial assistance under the Industrial Development Act 1982. The regional development grants included in the expenditure relate to payments of £25,000 or more. Expenditure on land and factories by the English Industrial Estates Corporation has not been included since it can only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

‡ Figures are not available for 1975-76 in respect of regional development grants. Expenditure in respect of regional selective financial assistance for 1975-76 amounted to £1,009,000.

Regional Grants (Scotland)

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the total amounts offered under the regional grant schemes at 1984 prices to companies in Scotland for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Details relating to offers of regional selective assistance (RSA) and to payments of regional development grants (RDG I) for the last 10 years in Scotland at 1984 prices are as follows:

	Value of RSA offers (1984 prices) £000	Value of RDG payments (1984 prices) £000

1984-85	77,540	107,727

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the total amounts offered under the regional grants schemes, at 1984 prices, to companies in the Rutherglen constituency, for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I regret the information is not available for all regional and industrial grants because it would be too costly to transfer the historic records to the computer data base. For the same reason a manual search to match addresses is also ruled out. However, the new regional development grants are being recorded and regional selective assistance (RSA) under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act is available for past years. Equal Opportunities Officer

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the applicants for the post of equal opportunities officer in his Department were (a) white males, (b) white females, (c) males of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin or (d) females of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin.

Mr. Butcher: It is not the practice to fill posts of this nature by inviting staff to apply for them. Existing staff in personnel units have been designated as equal opportunities officers on the basis of their overall suitability and not on the basis of sex or ethnic origin. Equal opportunity matters are not their sole responsibility.

Alvey Programme

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to write to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury, as indicated in his reply of 30 October, Official Report, column 480, regarding firms participating in the Alvey programme.

Mr. Butcher: I wrote to the hon. Member on 30 November.

Life Assurance and Unit Trusts

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what account he proposes to take before reaching a decision on the form of a licensing scheme for life assurance and unit trust salesmen of the representations he has received from the Office of Fair Trading, the National Consumer Council and the Consumers' Association regarding the case for any such general scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I am currently awaiting detailed proposals from the marketing of investments board organising committee, and shall consider all the views that have been expressed on this matter before reaching any decision.

Insurance Claims

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many complaints the Office of Fair Trading has received in the past year relating to the time taken by insurance companies in settling claims.

Mr. Howard: This is a matter for the director general and I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Pharmaceutical Products (Patents)

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will introduce legislation to extend the patent life for pharmaceutical products.

Mr. Pattie: Community members resolved in 1975 to bring their national patent laws into conformity, as far as practicable, with the provisions of the European Patent Convention. This was done by the Patents Act 1977 which provided inter alia for the extension of the patent term from 16 to 20 years in line with the European Patent Convention. There are no immediate plans for common action with the other Community states to extend the term further. My right hon. and learned Friend has however received representations on the subject from the Association of British Pharmaceutical Industry and is considering whether a United Kingdom initiative would be appropriate.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Sir Paul Bryan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to convey to the European Economic Community Commission and other member states Her Majesty's Government's policy that the multi-fibre arrangement should be renewed on more liberal terms.

Mr. Channon: In discussions in the European Community on the multi-fibre arrangement we have been pressing for the policy I outlined to the House on 9 May.

Textiles and Clothing (Imports)

Sir Paul Bryan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy towards the phasingout of European Economic Community restrictions on textile imports from Hong Kong on account of its open market.

Mr. Channon: As I told the House during the debate on the multi-fibre arrangement, restrictions on textile and clothing imports from Hong Kong, which is a major supplier to the Community, cannot be ended at this stage. But I also made clear that in the forthcoming negotiations I would seek above average improvements in access levels for countries such as Hong Kong which have low barriers to the Community's own exports.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the import figures for textiles and clothing in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom imports

Trendhart Limited and Odestage Limited

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will institute a formal investigation under the Companies Acts into the affairs of Trendhart Limited and Odestage Limited and those who have acted as directors of those companies.

Mr. Howard: I know of no reason for doing so but shall consider any information my hon. Friend may have about these companies.

Grants (Northern Region)

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the grants offered to firms in each parliamentary constituency in the Northern region in the last 12 months under (a) the new regional grants scheme and (b) the old régime.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Offers of new regional development grant to firms in parliamentary constituencies in the Northern region in the period 29 November 1984 to 30 November 1985 are listed as follows:

Apart from the quarterly publication in British Business of new regional development grant payments to individuals which cumulatively amount to more than £25,000, the Department of Trade and Industry does not give detailed information about individual applications for project approval, claims for grant or the decisions reached, as this information is confidential between the applicant and the Department.

In the case of old-style regional development grants, details of individual payments over £25,000 only are recorded. These are maintained manually by reference to travel to work areas (TTWAs) (as defined under the pre-29 November 1984 assisted area map) and their constituent employment office areas (EOAs). As neither TTWAs nor EOAs under the old map are coterminous with parliamentary constituencies, it is not possible to attribute accurately to constituencies payments of old style regional development grants.

Carpets

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the import figures for carpet and carpet fibres in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information relating to carpets and the available information relating to yarn for carpets is as follows:.

Value £ million (cif)

Note: Figures for carpet yarn for 1982 onwards refer only to the heavier duty yarns (over 50 tex).

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has presented proposals within the framework of negotiations on multi-fibre arrangements to safeguard specialist carpet manufacturers in areas where the industry is socially and economically necessary for the well-being of the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: With very little United Kingdom production of knotted carpets, and most United Kingdom imports of other carpets coming from non-multi-fibre arrangement supplier countries, I consider that there is no case for any such proposals.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the number of persons employed in carpet manufacturing in each of the travel-to-work areas in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The following information is based on 1981 census of employment data.

	Number
Barnsley TTWA	686
Bradford TTWA	1,059

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what safeguards he has in mind within the renegotiations of a multi-fibre arrangement to deal with disruptive import surges of textiles and carpet imports into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proposals he has in mind to control a possible surge of imports from Hong Kong, Taiwan and South Korea if under-used quotas are abolished.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In deciding our detailed policy on the future of the multi-fibre arrangement we shall bear in mind the possibility of sudden increases in imports of particular textile and clothing products.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the main tariff barriers and import bans by countries who import textiles, clothing and carpets from the United Kingdom; what steps he is taking to have these reduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: As my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade explained in the debate in the House on May 9 at columns 917-919, reducing trade barriers in developing countries, in many of which they are much too high, is one of the United Kingdom's objectives in the new round of multilateral trade negotiations in the GATT. This applies to textiles, clothing and carpets as well as other products. The main barriers facing these products are summarised on pages 60-61 of "The Multi-Fibre Arrangement and the UK Economy" by Professor Z. A. Silberston, a copy of which is in the Library.

Anti-dumping Legislation

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to seek to strengthen the anti-dumping legislation and the law relating to counterfeiting clothing and textiles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Anti-dumping legislation is a matter of Community competence and there are no present plans to strengthen it. As to counterfeiting, we are considering a proposal for general reform of the United Kingdom law made by the anti-counterfeiting group which represents a range of industries. The Government are also working both within the Community and in the GATT to improve measures restricting trade in counterfeit goods.

Westland Helicopters

Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide, to the extent that this does not infringe commercial confidentiality, details of the total amounts of money provided to Westland Helicopters by Her Majesty's Government or Government bodies, including launch aid, regional aid, grants and loans between January 1977 and February 1985.

Mr. Butcher: My Department provided £38·9 million in launch aid and grants to Westland Helicopters in the financial years 1977-78 to 1984-85. A further £6·8 million has been paid since April 1985 and £55·5 million has been allocated for continuing Westland projects.

CR6 Taxi

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will specify the figure that has been invested to date by the Government in relation to the creation and development of the specialised CR6 taxi cab;

(2) if he will give details of the latest position with regard to the development of the CR6 taxi cab and a date when production is likely to start.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Information relating to projects under the Department's support for innovation scheme, such as the CR6 taxi, is regarded as commercial-in-confidence between the applicant and the Department.

However, in respect of this particular project, there is some public acknowledgement of the Department's support. This can be found in the 1985 annual report of Manganese Bronze Holdings plc, the parent company of London Taxis International Ltd.

Imports and Exports

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will show the crude balance of imports and exports of (a) cereals and cereal preparations, (b) motor vehicles and (c) electrical goods in 1979 and 1984; and if he will compare the net overall position in 1979 with 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The information is as follows:

Crude United Kingdom Trade Balances

Value £ million

	1979	1984
(a) Cereals and cereal preparations	−404	+364
(b) Motor Vehicles	−1,479	−2,870

Note: Crude balance is United Kingdom exports (fob) less imports (cif).

Grants (Job Creation)

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his reply of 5 December to the hon. Member for Swansea, West giving the amount paid in each constituency in the last year for grants directly related to jobs, if he will now give for those same constituencies the number of jobs directly related to those grants.

Live Aid Concert (Pirate Video Recordings)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make representations to the Government of Indonesia about the use of that country's official tax seal on pirate cassette recordings of the "Live Aid" concert which are on sale in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Pattie: The Government are very concerned at allegations that illegal recordings of the Live Aid concert are being manufactured in Indonesia on a large-scale with Government endorsement. We shall be making representations on this matter to the Indonesian Government.

Lloyd's Syndicate Bellew, Parry, Raven

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if an investigation by a Department of Trade and Industry inspector has been instituted into the operations of Lloyd's syndicate Bellew, Parry, Raven.

Mr. Howard: No.

Textiles and Clothing (Yorkshire and Humberside)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the number of persons employed in the clothing, textile and carpet manufacturing industries in the Barnsley travel-to-work area, the South Yorkshire metropolitan district and Yorkshire and Humberside, respectively; and to what extent they are affected by the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The most recent information is as follows:

Number of persons employed in 1981

	Clothing	Textiles	Carpet manufacturing
Barnsley TTWA	2,270	826	686
South Yorkshire	5,146	4,341	686
Yorkshire and Humberside	17,100	69,552	5,569

Source: 1981 census of employment

Employment in these industries in all parts of the United Kingdom is affected by many factors, including productivity, and competitiveness in export markets as well as the home market. Most United Kingdom imports of these products are unaffected by the multi-fibre arrangement.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Construction Industry

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to seek to reduce unemployment in the construction industry in the Province.

Mr. Needham: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many workers were employed in the construction industry in the Province at the latest available date.

Dr. Boyson: According to the Northern Ireland quarterly employment inquiry there were 22,850 such employees in employment at September 1985.

Armagh Prison (Strip Searches)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many strip searches were made of female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Armagh, in October and November, respectively; if he will give the number of persons involved and the number of times each person was searched; whether any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being conducted; and if he will indicate the reasons for the search, namely, making an appearance at Armagh court-house on remand, attending trial, inter-prison visit or other reasons.

Mr. Scott: During October 1985, 42 searches were carried out on 23 prisoners; seven prisoners were searched once, 14 were searched twice, one was searched three times and one prisoner was searched on four occasions. During November 1985, 26 searches were carried out on 16 prisoners; seven prisoners were searched once, eight were searched twice, and one prisoner was searched three times. No prohibited article was found during these searches and no prisoner refused to be searched. Searches were carried out in the following circumstances:

	October	November
First admission on remand and awaiting trial	11	5
First admission on sentence and final discharge	12	9

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the text of the assurances circulated to the Royal Ulster Constabulary and other members of the public service concerning the effects of the Anglo-Irish agreement.

Mr. King: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

WALES

Road Maintenance

10. Mr Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he proposes to make any change in the provision for trunk road maintenance and local road maintenance in Wales in the light of the Chancellor's autumn statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I must ask the hon. Gentleman to await my right hon. Friend's statement about rate support grant provision for local authorities for 1986-87, which will be made next week, and the public expenditure White Paper, which will announce the provision for trunk road maintenance.

National Health Service

12. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he will next meet the chairmen of health authorities in Wales to discuss the future funding of the Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: My right hon. Friend and I hold regular meetings with chairmen of health authorities in Wales and I last met chairmen on 22 November.

Welsh Development Agency

13. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the expenditure by the Welsh Development Agency in each of the past three years.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Gross expenditure by the Welsh Development Agency in each of the last three years was: £80·7 million in 1982-83; £66·6 million in 1983-84; and £71·6 million in 1984-85. The first two figures include special provision for steel closure areas. Gross expenditure this year is expected to be of the order of £70 million.

Rhuddlan Promenade (Caravan Parking)

14. Sir Anthony Meyer asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the approaches he has received from Rhuddlan borough council regarding a byelaw to limit the nuisance from overnight parking of caravans on the promenade; and what reply he has sent.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The Rhuddlan borough council submitted byelaws to my Department for confirmation in December 1982 and, in modified form, in July 1984; both applications were refused. My hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, North-West raised the matter in correspondence during the summer. Since my hon. Friend, the Member for Monmouth (Sir J. Stradling Thomas) last replied to him on 28 August there has been no further approach by the borough council.

Hospital Waiting Lists

15. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to bring forward measures to seek to reduce the waiting lists for surgery in the ear, nose and throat, gynaecology and general surgery specialists in Mid Glamorgan and other health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply I gave her on 25 November.

Pig Industry

16. Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied with the present state of the pig industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The pig breeding herd in Wales has shown a tendency to decline during recent years. However, the June 1985 provisional census figures record an increase of 6·1 per cent. over June 1984 in the breeding herd which now stands at 15,800 head, indicating a return of confidence in this sector.

Cardigan (Job Creation)

17. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any further plans to seek to create employment and work in the Cardigan area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Employment and work are created by the enterprise of individuals and companies. I and my colleagues intend to continue to implement policies designed to encourage and assist in this process in Cardigan as elsewhere.

Health Service (Powys)

18. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied with the state of the Health Service in Powys; and if he will make a statement.

Rural Pharmacies

19. Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will bring forward proposals to increase the number of rural pharmacies in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The need to support small pharmacies in some areas has long been recognised and additional payments are available for this purpose under the present essential small pharmacies scheme. The new pharmacists contract, when implemented, will further enhance this.

Cardiff Harbour Barrage

20. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the likely cost of the barrage south of Cardiff.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I am proposing to commission studies of a scheme to construct a barrage across the mouth of Cardiff harbour. One of the principal purposes of these studies will be to establish the likely cost of the scheme, together with its feasibility and likely economic benefits.

Home Dialysis Machines

21. Mr. Grist asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cost to each Welsh area health authority of installing home dialysis machines.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Renal dialysis is a regional service funded centrally by my Department and therefore the cost does not fall to individual health authorities.

Housing Defects Act

22. Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the operation of the Housing Defects Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The Welsh Office has received a number of representations and enquiries about the operation of the Act. The main area of concern has been the availability of suitable repair methods. I am pleased to note that last month PRC Homes Ltd. issued its first two licences for schemes for the repair of Cornish unit houses, and that it expects to issue licences for a variety of repair schemes for most of the common types of PRC houses within the next few months.

Mentally Handicapped Persons (Gwynedd)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales on what date his Department first received the local Vanguard plan from Gwynedd county council concerning the provision of services for mentally handicapped people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The plan for the Gwynedd Vanguard district was received at the end of May this year. Following detailed analysis, it has now been approved, subject to certain conditions and Gwynedd county council is being informed today.

Disabled Children (Education)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the number of disabled children receiving education in special schools in Wales in 1980-81 and the corresponding number for the current academic year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of full-time and part-time pupils at special schools in Wales totalled 4,759 in January 1981. Figures for the current academic year are not yet available. The latest available figures indicate that the number attending special schools in January 1985 totalled 4,216.

Small Firms (Liquidations)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many small firms in Wales have gone into liquidation since May 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Figures of company liquidations are available for England and Wales but not separately for Wales. For the England and Wales figures I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given him on Wednesday 4 December 1985 at column 251 by my hon. and learned Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

National Coal Board (Chairman)

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Wales how frequently he meets the chairman of the National Coal Board to discuss the board's capital investment programme in Wales; and when the next such meeting is expected to take place.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I meet the chairman of the National Coal Board whenever the need arises to discuss matters relevant to the Welsh coalfields. The last occasion was on 14 November. The date for a further meeting has not yet been fixed.

Morriston Hospital

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients attended the casualty and accident unit at Morriston hospital in its first week of operation; and how this compares with the numbers at Singleton hospital in the previous week and in the last week of November 1984.

Mr. Mark Robinson: A total of 848 people attended the new accident and emergency unit at Morriston during its first week of operation from 7.30 am on 24 November 1985. This compares with 880 at Singleton in the previous full week and 832 at Singleton in the last week of November 1984.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Clergy Stipends and Pensions

28. Mr. Chapman asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, what is his estimate of the contribution the Church Commissioners will make in the current year to clergy stipends and pensions.

Sir William van Straubenzee: £34·5 million on stipends and £31·9 million on pensions.

Residential Flats, Edgware Road

29. Sir David Price asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, why the Church Commissioners have allowed contractors to drill trenches through a block of residential flats which they own on the Edgware road, throughout the weekend, including Sunday mornings, for the installation of cable television.

Sir William van Straubenzee: In order to cause minimum disruption to tenants the commissioners asked the contractors to undertake their work expeditiously. Tenants were informed in advance of the commencement of the work and no complaints have been received. I have arranged for the contractors to undertake no further weekend working after 1 pm on Saturday.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Gibraltar

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total sum which Her Majesty's Government propose to make available to the Gibraltar Government to cover that Government's responsibility for payment of pensions to former Spanish workers; what is the estimated total future liability of the Gibraltar Government in this respect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: Discussions with the Gibraltar Government about how their responsibility will be met are proceeding; the total liability is not yet established. The Government will make a significant contribution for the first year while the matter of future contributions is pursued.

Copyright

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, when setting the overseas aid budget for the next financial year, he will make it his policy not to grant aid to those states which export products to the United Kingdom which breach international copyright conventions.

Mr. Raison: We take many factors into account in providing aid to individual countries. The Government are participating fully in initiatives to combat privacy and counterfeiting within the GATT, the European Community, the World Intellectual Property Organisation and the Council of Europe.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Universities and Polytechnics (Student Places)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessments have been made by his Department of the demand for student places at universities and polytechnics during the next three years; how these compare with the numbers which were available between 1982 and 1985; and how far central Government financing for tertiary education institutions takes these future assessments into account.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Department assesses demand for higher education as a whole. Such forecasts were more recently published in "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s" (Cmnd. 9524). Revised projections should be published next year. Total student numbers are expected to remain at broadly present levels or to increase slightly over the next three years compared with 1984. Provisional figures for the United Kingdom as a whole show that in 1984-85 there were 540,000 home full-time and sandwich students in higher education compared with 519,000 in 1982-83. The comparable figures for my own areas of responsibility (Great Britain universities and advanced further education in England) are 478,000 and 466,000, respectively. The Government's expenditure plans should provide sufficient resources to allow demand to be met at the expected level.

College Building Modernisation

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to allow colleges to use the full proceeds of the sale of redundant buildings to modernise and extend the rest of their buildings.

Mr. Walden: New arrangements to allow universities greater freedom to retain the proceeds of sale of land and buildings were announced by my right hon. Friend on 15 January at columns 91-92. These already allow universities (subject to the approval of the University Grants Committee) to use some or all of the proceeds of sale on cost-effective schemes to rationalise or replace existing buildings. My right hon. Friend is prepared to consider the possibility of allowing similar freedom to those colleges which are grant-aided by the Department. The entire sale proceeds of redundant college and polytechnic buildings belonging to local authorities are retained by them. They may, if they wish, apply the proceeds to modernise or extend the remainder of their buildings, subject to regulations made under schedule 12 to the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. These currently provide that local authorities may use up to 30 per cent. of the sale proceeds to enhance their capital allocations in any given year. The arrangements for the control of local authority capital expenditure are currently under review and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment hopes to publish proposals in a Green Paper early in the new year.

Students (Drop-out Rate)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the annual drop-out rate for students of universities and polytechnics in the United Kingdom each year since 1979.

Mr. Walden: The information, for all years since 1979, in respect of universities in Great Britain is not readily available. However, analyses conducted on 1979 and 1983 figures estimate that 10·1 per cent. and 7·8 per cent., respectively, of full-time undergraduates left before completion of their course. Of those 5·9 per cent. and 4·5 per cent., respectively, left during their first year. Further work is in progress on the methodology behind these analyses which may lead to the revision of the figures. Similar information for students at polytechnics is not available.

Vocational Qualifications (Review)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about his review of vocational qualifications.

Mr. Chris Patten: The review group on vocational qualifications, chaired by Mr. H. G. de Ville, made an interim report on 23 September to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science, Employment, Wales, and to the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission. A copy of the interim report has been placed in the Library. It offers a statement of objectives for an improved system of vocational qualifications and specific recommendations for the certification of the two-year youth training scheme; my right hon. Friends have indicated their acceptance of these. The report also sets out options for an improved qualifications structure and for the appropriate machinery for achieving that; these are currently the subject of consultation with the interests concerned. A final report is expected in April 1986.

CERN

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has reached a decision on the future level of United Kingdom participation in CERN.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has not yet taken a decision on the recommendations in the Kendrew report concerning the future level of the United Kingdom subscription to CERN.

Initial Teacher Training

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students are or were undertaking courses of initial teacher training in England and Wales; and how many students were in each institution providing courses of initial training in (a) 1985-86, (b) 1984-85, (c) 1983-84, (d) 1982-83 and (e) 1981-82.

Mr. Walden: Information for 1985-86 is not yet available. The total number of students undertaking courses of initial teacher training in England and Wales in each of the previous four years is as follows:

Students on ITT courses in England and Wales Universities and Public Sector Establishments: 1 November of each year

	Number
1981	33,300
1982	31,300
1983	30,900
1984	31,700

The numbers of students in each year undertaking courses of initial teacher training in each public sector establishment in England which offers such courses are shown in the tables. Figures for individual universities cannot be shown without obtaining the consent of each university at disproportionate cost. Figures for public sector institutions in Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Open University

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what level of financing he intends to allocate to the Open university during the next three years; and how this compares with the financing it has received from his Department during the last three years.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend received the report of the Open university visiting committee on 25 November. He hopes to reach decisions on the Open university's grant in the near future.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how summer school fees and Open university tuition fees in 1979 compare with those in 1971 in 1971 constant prices.

Mr. Walden: The information is as follows:

	1971 fee £	1979 fee at 1971 prices (£)
Summer School fee	25	18
Tuition fee	20	19

The conversion to constant prices has been made using the GDP deflator.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how summer school fees and Open university tuition fees in 1985 compared with those in 1979 in 1979 constant prices.

Mr. Walden: The information is as follows:

	1979 fee £	1985 fee at 1979 prices (£)
Summer school fee	52	57
Tuition fees	55	85

The conversion to constant prices has been made using the GDP deflator on the basis of the assumed figure for 1985.

Student Awards

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to narrow the financial gap between students receiving maximum grant and those receiving minimum grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: Narrowing the financial gap betwen the maximum and minimum grant would involve the reintroduction of the minimum maintenance payment. As I said in my reply to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Short) on 28 November 1985, at column 627, there is no intention to do this.

Children with Special Needs

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report the number of places for children of compulsory school age with special needs (a) in each local education authority in England, (b) for all local education authorities in England, (c) for privately run special schools and (d) the total of such places (i) for all such children and (ii) expressed in those categories used as classification by his Department in each of the last 10 years and the percentage change involved in each case.

Mr. Dunn: Because a large number of children with special educational needs are educated in ordinary schools, the question cannot be answered in this form.

Religious Education Teachers

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the extent to which the availability of religious education teachers in secondary schools is consistent with the statutory obligations regarding the inclusion of religious education in the school curriculum as laid down in the Education Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government look to local education authorities and schools to ensure that religious instruction is provided in schools in accordance with the statutory requirements. My right hon. Friend has sought to ensure, through the planning of intakes to initial teacher training, that there is an adequate supply of suitably trained teachers to meet the staffing requirements of schools in respect of religious education, and has no evidence to suggest that demand is not being met. Local authorities have nevertheless been encouraged to keep under review the match between the qualifications and deployment of teachers already in the schools, so that provision may be made at an appropriate standard.

Academic Tenure

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now publish his proposals for legislation to limit academic tenure in the universities.

Sir Keith Joseph: Yes. Proposals for legislation to limit academic tenure in the universities for future appointments and promotions, and to amend provision for dismissal for good cause, have recently been published and sent to the Association of University Teachers and Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals for their views. Copies of the proposals have been placed in the Library of the House.

Poundswick School

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what correspondence he has received about the Poundswick school dispute in Manchester; and what replies he has sent or will be sending.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1985, c. 228]: My right hon. Friend has replied to the right hon. Member today. The text of his letter is as follows:

9 December 1985

Dear Alfred,

Further to your recent Question in the Commons and also to your letters of 22 October, 28 October and 1 December enclosing letters and a petition from various constituents and others concerned about the dispute at Poundswick High School, I am now able to give you a substantive reply.

I have received representations from six Members, including yourself, and from 26 members of the general public.

I have been watching the progress of events with concern, and have considered carefully whether it is a matter in which I should intervene. I have made detailed inquiries of the Manchester Education Authority about the events leading up to the present situation with a view to establishing whether I should use my power of intervention under Section 68 of the Education Act 1944. Under section 68 the holder of my office is not called upon or entitled to substitute his judgement for that of the local education authority. He is only entitled to consider whether the decision made by the LEA was arbitrary or otherwise such that no reasonable LEA could have taken it. In the light of my inquiries and the other information at my disposal I have concluded that there are insufficient grounds for me to be satisfied that the authority's action has been unreasonable in the sense in which that term has—as explained above—to be interpreted in law.

I nevertheless remain very concerned about the continuing disruption to the education of all the pupils at Poundswick, and in this connection my Department has now written to Manchester Education Authority. The text of the letter is as follows:

"I am directed by the Secretary of State to write about the situation at Poundswick High School.

The Secretary of State has considered all the information available to him, including that supplied by the Authority at his request on 25 October, with a view to determining whether there is a case for his giving directions under Section 68 of the Education Act 1944. The authority will wish to know that he is not satisfied that the information available to him affords a sufficient basis for him to intervene under that section.

He is nevertheless concerned about the prolonged disruption that has arisen to the education of many of the pupils: I am to ask the Authority how it proposes to discharge its duty under the Education Acts to secure the efficient full-time education of the pupils.

I am to ask for a reply to this letter no later than 17 December."

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falkland Islands (Fisheries)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with representatives of interests in the Falkland Islands about the management and conservation of fisheries.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has recently had discussions on this subject with representatives of Falkland Islands interests, including members of the Falkland Islands Committee and the Falkland Islands Association.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated expenditure in this financial year on the education of children of British civil servants working in the European Economic Community whose schooling is either paid for or subsidised by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Eggar: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to Foreign and Commonwealth Office staff on secondment to European Community institutions. In the current financial year the Foreign and Commonwealth Office will only have one member of staff on secondment to the European Community institutions, in this case the European Commission. No expenditure will be incurred on education costs.

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated expenditure in this financial year on the education of children of members of Her Majesty's Diplomatic Service whose schooling is either paid for or subsidised by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Eggar: The estimated expenditure in this financial year is £8,239,143. This covers the education of children of members of Her Majesty's Diplomatic Service, including staff of the communications departments and members of the Home Civil Service currently on secondment to the Diplomatic Service.

SCOTLAND

Police Interviews (Tape Recording)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is conducting discussions with the police concerning the tape recording of interviews with suspects in police stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: On 16 October 1985 the Scottish Home and Health Department issued a consultation paper seeking the views of several organisations with interest in criminal justice on issues relating to the tape recording of police interviews with suspects in Scotland. These organisations include the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland), the Association of Scottish Police Superintendents and the Scottish Police Federation. My right hon. Friend intends to make a statement when he has received and considered the responses to the consultation paper.

Road Maintenance Condition Survey

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the results of the Scottish road maintenance condition survey.

Mr. Ancram: Comprehensive information is maintained by my Department for trunk roads and motorways only, using a system which identifies lengths of road with defects requiring treatment. The aggregate results for recent years are set out:

	Lengths of trunk road and motorway requiring treatment (kms)
1980	278
1981	301
1982	291
1983	315
1984	360

A number of regional and islands councils, under the auspices of the Scottish branch of the County Surveyors' Society, co-operate in producing a separate roads condition survey for their own needs. I do not have the results at my disposal.

Licensing (Scotland) Act

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what areas of research he expects to be covered by the anticipated Office of Population Censuses and Surveys report on the working of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976.

Mr. John MacKay: The OPCS survey covers (a) volume and types of alcohol consumed; times and days, places and locations when alcohol is consumed; and lunchtime drinking with pub lunches; (b) public attitudes towards late-night pub and hotel drinking, Sunday pub drinking, all-day opening, the admission of children into pubs providing bar lunches; and the opening of off licences on Sundays; and (c) sex and age of drinkers—particularly women of childbearing age.

In addition to the survey of the public's attitude, OPCS carried out a survey of licensees to ascertain their views on certain aspects of the present legislation.

Construction Industry

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to reduce unemployment in the construction industry in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The construction industry in Scotland has shared in the general economic upturn experienced over the last few years. Employment prospects in the industry depend on the Government's adherence to policies which will continue to promote economic recovery and the right environment for growth.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were employed in the construction industry in Scotland in June 1979 and at the last available date.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The number of employees in employment in the construction industry in Scotland is estimated to have been 157,000 in June 1979, and 114,000 in June 1985.

Dental Charges

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions dentists have recorded the cost of treatment as the reason for a patient not completing a course of treatment in part II of the National Health Service dental estimate form F.P.17 in each of the last three years; and if he will collate and publish figures on the incidence of this problem in future.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is not available and I do not believe its collection in this way would serve any useful purpose.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will explain the manner in which he intends to distribute additional rate support grant and to adjust relevant expenditure between local authorities in respect of the costs of running list D schools following the transfer of responsibility for those schools from his Department to local authorities.

Mr. Ancram: The additional rate support grant and expenditure provision for 1986-87 will be allocated to regional and islands authorities in direct proportion to the number of children for whom they were responsible in list D schools at 31 March 1985.

Forestry Commissioners

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if the Forestry Commission will be producing guidance notes for its staff on its new duty under the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985;

(2) what specific changes the Forestry Commission intends to make in order to fulfil its new duty under the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985, with particular regard to achieving a reasonable balance between afforestation and timber production and landscape and wildlife conservation in the wider countryside.

Mr. John MacKay: It has for some years been the policy of the Forestry Commission to seek a reasonable balance between the needs of forestry and of the environment, and this was brought out in the evidence submitted by the commission to the Environment Committee of the House last year when it considered the operation and effectiveness of part II of the Wildlife and Countryside Act. The appointment by the commission of a landscape consultant and of a conservation consultant, the preparation of conservation plans to cover the commission's forests, and the review of broadleaves policy, all took place before the placing of a statutory duty on the commission by the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985.

The placing of a duty on the commission under that Act —while welcome, in that it gave statutory force to the policy of seeking the right balance—did not therefore necessitate its having to make any immediate change of course or to instruct its staff to operate in very different ways. Nevertheless, the director general of the commission wrote to all his staff, before the Act came into operation, drawing their attention to the new statutory duty and reminding them of their responsibility to act in a positive way to achieve the balance required. In addition, the commission is proposing to update its existing publications and guidance after detailed consultations with the environmental agencies and bodies most closly concerned.

Childhood Cancer

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether Her Majesty's Government are carrying out or intend to carry out any investigations into the incidence of childhood cancers in the areas around *(a)*Holy Loch and (b) Rosyth.

Mr. John MacKay: I am considering how best the necessary complex statistical and epidemiological analysis of claims made about the incidence of childhood cancers in the areas around Holy Loch and Rosyth can be undertaken.

Higher Education

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the report by the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council on a future strategy for higher education in Scotland; and if he will also make a statement on the further work of the council.

Mr. Younger: The report by the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council (STEAC) on its review of future strategy for higher education in Scotland has been published today as a Command Paper. Copies will be available in the Vote Office.

I shall wish to receive comments on the report before decisions are taken on the council's recommendations; such comments should be sent to the Scottish Education Department by 27 March 1986. The Government will consider the report and comments on it in the wider context of consideration of future higher education policies following the Green Paper on higher education (Cmnd. 9524).

There is, however, one specific matter arising from the STEAC report to which I wish to refer at this stage. STEAC proposes that a planning and funding body should be established to cover both the university and non-university sectors in Scotland, but that such a body should in the first instance have responsibility for academic planning and the co-ordination of provision only. STEAC recommends that the addition of funding responsibility (within arrangements involving the transfer of responsibility for the Scottish universities from the Secretary of State for Education and Science to the Secretary of State for Scotland) should be subject to certain conditions, including the safeguarding of continued access by the Scottish universities to a United Kingdom-based peer review system.

STEAC further recommends that the committee reviewing the University Grants Committee chaired by Lord Croham, which was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science on 25 July, should be invited to consider how such continued access might be secured in the event that administrative and financial responsibility were transferred in the manner proposed. Although the Government have at this stage not reached a view on these proposals, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Northern Ireland have agreed to invite Lord Croham's committee to consider in relation to its terms of reference the implications of adopting the STEAC recommendations concerning the planning and funding of higher education in Scotland having regard in particular to the concern expressed in the STEAC report that continued access by the Scottish universities to a United Kingdom-based peer review system would be desirable. This is being done in advance of general consultations on the report because of the need to give that committee the maximum notice of this additional task. It is entirely without prejudice to future decisions on the STEAC report.

I am still considering what additional tasks it may be appropriate to invite STEAC to undertake. Meanwhile, I have decided to ask STEAC to join in discussions with other advisory bodies on the future distribution of student numbers in the different sectors of higher education in the United Kingdom.

STEAC's present term of office expires in July 1986. Its longer-term future will be decided in the light of comments on its strategy and of its further work.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Foreign Visitors

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each of the last 12 months for which figures are available (a) the number of visitors applying for entry clearance to the United Kingdom at ports of entry, (b) the number of visitors whose applications have been refused, (c) the number of such cases in which Members of Parliament have intervened, (d) the number of cases under (c) in which temporary admission has been granted pending representations, and (e) the number of cases under (c) in which detention has been applied pending representations; and if he will give these figures for (i) visitors from Bangladesh and (ii) all visitors, respectively.

Mr. Waddington: The precise information requested is either not available or could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, figures are available for the numbers of citizens of (i) Bangladesh and (ii) all non-EC countries who were (a) admitted as visitors and (b) refused leave to enter and subsequently removed for each month in the period July 1984 to June 1985; figures for refusals, but not, as yet, for admissions, are also available for July to October and are given in the table.

* Not yet available.

Information is also available for recent months on the numbers of citizens of Bangladesh refused leave to enter, but not necessarily subsequently removed, and representations from hon. Members at Heathrow terminal 3; those figures for July, August and September were given in a reply to the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) on 29 October at columns 408-9, and are as follows:

	1984	1985

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used by immigration officers in deciding whether to allow a visitor refused entry temporary admission pending representations by an hon. Member.

Mr. Waddington: Paragraph 21 of schedule 2 to the Immigration Act gives an immigration officer authority to admit temporarily to the United Kingdom any person who is liable to be detained or is detained under paragraph 16 of the same schedule. It may only be used pending the completion of an examination, the implementation of removal directions, or when a decision to refuse entry has been taken but is being reconsidered. The immigration officer may grant temporary admission subject to such restrictions as to residence and reporting to an immigration officer or to the police as are considered necessary.

Temporary admission is granted readily to any person who, in the judgment of the immigration officer, can be trusted to comply with its terms and is not therefore likely to abscond. Compassionate aspects, such as age and infirmity, are taken into account as is the reliability of any sponsor involved. These criteria are applied to all cases, including those where representations are made by right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances relatives, friends or representatives are able to remain with travellers arriving from or returning to the port during an interview by immigration officers.

Mr. Waddington: The initial examination of a person arriving in the United Kingdom is normally conducted by the immigration officer with the individual passenger alone. Exceptions are made where members of a family are travelling together. The presence of friends or representatives is not at this stage normally allowed. In any subsequent interview the presence of friends or representatives is normally allowed, subject to their agreement that this will be only as observers and to the consent of the passenger.

Police (Raids)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the raid on seven homes in Brailsford and Arlingford roads, London SW2, in the week commencing 28 October, to include the number of charges resulting from the raid, the cost thereof and the number of police officers deployed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner informs me that as a result of a raid on a house in Brailsford road, SW2, one man has been charged with arson and arson with intent to endanger life. Sixty-nine policy officers, two scene of crime officers and two photographers were deployed to this operation as a part of normal duties; no additional costs were incurred.

Police (Drivers)

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether police drivers have to undergo special training before being allowed to drive patrol cars on motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Before performing motorway patrol duties police officers are generally required to complete both an advanced driving course and a traffic patrol course. These courses include specific training for motorway duties.

Departmental Broadcasting Unit

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in connection with what programmes the broadcasting unit of his Department has made contact with (i) the British Broadcasting Corporation and (ii) the IBA in the last month.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The broadcasting department is in regular contact with the BBC and IBA about a variety of matters. No detailed record is kept of such contacts.

Brixton Prison

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will outline the search procedures followed for (a) a strip search and (b) a body search, as carried out in Brixton prison on female remand prisoners;

(2) whether he will publish in a table the number of cell changes that have taken place during the months of October and November on female remand prisoners in Brixton prison, and the frequency;

(3) whether he will publish a table showing the number of cell searches carried out on the two female remand prisoners held in Brixton prison during the months of October and November, detailing the frequency and whether they were carried out during the day or night;

(4) on what basis, random strip searches are carried out in Brixton prison, in addition to strip searches being carried out on entering and leaving the prison, for female remand prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: The practices followed by Brixton prison have been in accordance with rule 39 of the Prison Rules 1964 and with standing instructions. These provide that every prisoner shall be given a strip search on reception and at other times thereafter including those at which they have been carried out at Brixton—that is, before and after court appearances, after visits, and at the time of cell changes and wing and cell searches; that a prisoner shall be searched in as seemly a manner as is consistent with discovering anything concealed; that no prisoner shall be stripped and searched in the sight of another prisoner; that no female inmate shall be searched in the sight or presence of a male officer; and that a prisoner shall be searched only by an officer of the same sex. For reasons which the hon. Member will understand, it is not the practice to disclose detailed information such as that requested about security arrangements — for example, the frequency of cell changes or cell searches. However, my noble Friend will write to the hon. Member giving such further information as he can.

Leo Walker and Judith Bennett

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley as to progress with inquiries into allegations against Leo Walker and Judith Bennett, trading variously as Southern Technical Services, Trendhart Ltd. and Odestage Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable of Thames Valley police informs me that inquiries are being made into Southern Technical Services, Trendhart Ltd. and Odestage Ltd. following a complaint of theft.

Greenham Common (Police Vans)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police as to the arrangements for the safety and emergency evacuation of police vans specifically in use for transporting to nearby courts persons arrested in the vicinity of the Greenham common air base.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley police that both police vans and purpose-built prison vans have been used to convey persons arrested around Greenham common air base to nearby courts, and that both types of vehicles are widely used by police forces. Adequate arrangements for evacuation in an emergency are provided in all these vehicles.

Departmental Objectives

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a statement of the objectives of his Department, and of the indicators it uses to assess the extent to which they have been achieved.

Mr. Hurd: The overriding duty of my Department is to discharge its functions efficiently, effectively and economically. Its most important objectives include the maintenance of the Queen's peace, the rule of law and the prevention of crime, and the satisfactory discharge of its specific statutory responsibilities. My accountability to Parliament provides a continuing test of the performance of the Department. I attach importance to the level of public confidence in the criminal justice system and in the services which support it. More specific indicators include the achievement of financial and manpower budgets and the completion of the prison building programme.

Dr. Sathananthian

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the arrangements under which Dr. Sathananthian is enabled to prescribe heroin to registered addicts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Electoral Rolls

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report each of the parliamentary constituencies in Hampshire in ranking order according to the size of their current electorates and indicating the percentage variation on the English average of 68,716 electors per constituency.

Mr. Whitney: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested has been taken from OPCS Monitor EL85/2 (published 4 June 1985) and is as follows:

Parliamentary Constituency	1985 Electorate	Percentage Difference from English Average
Eastleigh	86,329	+25·6

Civil Defence

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will seek to give to civil defence volunteers powers to safeguard items of artistic importance in the event of natural or manmade disaster.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to reply.

I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department that the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983 give local government authorities powers to recruit, train and exercise Civil Defence volunteers. The primary role of the volunteer is to safeguard the civilian population during and after an armed attack on this country. Although there is no specific provision for it in the regulations, they could take measures to protect art treasures if so directed at the time, but their first responsibility would remain to the welfare of the public. Similarly they could be used in the event of a natural disaster.

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether items of artistic importance are listed in terms of priority for safeguarding in the event of natural or manmade disaster.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to reply.

Of the wide range of conceivable natural disasters which could affect national art treasures, only flooding in central London has been regarded as sufficiently probable and predictable to call for planning measures which were likely to be feasible and effective. This particular risk has now been eliminated by the completion of the Thames barrier.

Arrangements exist for safeguarding the most important of the nation's art treasures against the risk of destruction or damage in the event of war. As paragraph 2.9 of the Government's observations (Cmnd. 9127) on the Eighth Report from the Education, Science and Arts Committee, Session 1981-82, explained, the directors of national collections are asked to arrange for the earmarking of items to be moved if an emergency should arise.

The selection of the limited number of key items for which emergency transport and alternative accommodation can be provided is a matter for the authorities concerned with each collection. The Government's observations explained why it would not be in the public interest to publish further details of these arrangements.

ENVIRONMENT

Water

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why the new draft model water byelaws have been withdrawn and their publication delayed; when he now expects to publish them; and whether he intends to extend the requirement for potability to water supplies not directly derived from the water mains.

Mr. John Patten: Publication of the Department's new model water byelaws has been delayed because legal drafting has taken longer than expected. I now expect the model to be published early next year. It is for Parliament to fix byelaw-making powers to private suppliers of water.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why, under the provisions of article 9 of the European Community directive (80/778/EC) relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption, he has granted a derogation for parameters such as aluminium, nitrates and nitrites present in drinking water due to waterworks practice or environmental pollution.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have granted these derogations under article 9(1)(a) of EC directive 80/778 because in the relevant cases there is no public health hazard, and the other terms of the directive are satisfied.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals for the introduction of devices intended to discourage the use of water for hygiene purposes in the home; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have no such proposals.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people in the United Kingdom receive drinking water which does not meet European standards set out in European Community directive 80/778; and if he will give the reasons for this.

Mr. John Patten: Water authorities and water companies in England have applied for and been granted departures under articles 9 and 20 of the directive in respect of water supplies to about 25 per cent. of the population. Many of these applications relate to harmless constituents of the raw water which can nevertheless affect its taste or appearance; for example, iron, manganese and discoloration. As provided for in the directive, where there is any health risk or the excess is due to poor treatment works or distribution systems, programmes of improvement are in train.

Responsibility for these matters in other parts of the United Kingdom rests with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Sewers

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to include provision for investment in sewerage in any legislative or administrative measures for the privatisation of the water industry.

Mr. John Patten: The possible privatisation of the water authorities is under active consideration. An announcement will be made in due course. Whatever is decided will provide for the continuing effectiveness of the sewerage system.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken to seek to ensure that the sewer systems in inner city areas are adequate to withstand the risk of flooding by sewage; what further measures are planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Responsibility for sewer systems in inner city areas, as elsewhere, rests with water authorities. Provision for necessary work on such systems is included in the water authorities' plans and is taken into account in the Government's public expenditure decisions. Capital expenditure on sewerage by the water authorities in England and Wales in 1986-87 is expected to reach about £290 million, compared with £275 million in the current year out of total sums for capital expenditure of over £900 million in 1986-87 and about £820 million in the current year.

Council House Sales

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount obtained from the sale of council houses during each of the last three years; and how much of this councils have been permitted to spend during the same period.

Sir George Young: Receipts from sales of council houses by local authorities in England (including mortgage repayments) were £1,300 million in 1982-83, £1,373 million in 1983-84 and £1,253 million in 1984-85. The prescribed proportion of these receipts which authorities could use for capital expenditure each year was 50 per cent. in 1982-83 and 1983-84 and 40 per cent. in 1984-85. Each year authorities are also permitted to use for capital expenditure the prescribed proportion of accumulated receipts from earlier years.

Sporting Events (Sponsorship)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to seek an end to the promotion and sponsorship of sport and sporting events by the tobacco industry.

Mr. Tracey: The promotion and sponsorship of sport and sporting events by tobacco companies is restricted by a voluntary agreement between the Government and the industry. The agreement stands until at least 31 December this year. I am currently considering what changes to seek to the agreement, both in the light of advice from the medical profession and the views of other bodies concerned as well as public reaction, and following the continuing negotiations between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services and the industry in respect of the voluntary agreement on tobacco advertising.

Construction Industry

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the latest consultations which he has been having with representatives of the construction industry in respect of their claims for increased Government financing of the infrastructure.

Mr. John Patten: My ministerial colleagues and I maintain close and frequent contact with the construction industry. Its views are well known to us, including those on the present level of public expenditure on infrastructure. The autumn statement provided, within the Government's overall economic framework, for additional finance in several areas of capital expenditure, including housing, roads, water and the Health Service.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to seek to reduce unemployment in the construction industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the numbers of construction workers unemployed; what plans he has to stimulate the employment of out-of-work construction workers on improving buildings and the environment; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The latest results from the Department of Employment's labour force survey indicate that in spring 1984 there were about 200,000 people in England and Wales who had had a job in the construction industry within the previous three years and who were then without a paid job and seeking employment. The corresponding figure for 1983 was 230,000.

This suggests that employment in the construction industry is increasing, a trend confirmed by the latest figures available from my Department's housing and construction statistics which show that 24,000 more people were employed in the industry in Great Britain in 1984 than in 1983.

The best way to create long term employment in the construction industry is to keep down public borrowing, thus lowering interest rates and inflation. This will benefit the industry through encouraging business investment and private housing expenditure. At the same time, the annual review of spending announced in the recent autumn statement, provided the opportunity, within our overall economic framework, to reconsider priorities and allow for additional finance in several areas of capital spending, especially housing renovation, roads, water and the Health Service. This should also encourage employment in the construction industry.

Municipal Housing (Rent Arrears)

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a detailed breakdown of gross rent arrears of council house rents referred to in the reply given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, the hon. Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young), on Monday 2 December to the hon. Member for Dorset, North showing a detailed breakdown of types of authorities and the amounts of arrears due from authorities in each city and district in the United Kingdom.

Sir George Young: I will put the information into the Library shortly.

Kirklees (Empty Council Properties)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of empty council properties in total and in each of the districts of Kirklees metropolitan district council on 30 November.

Sir George Young: This information is not available. The number of dwellings owned by Kirklees metropolitan district council which were vacant at 1 April 1985, is contained in its housing investment programme return which is in the Library. The council may be able to provide more detailed information.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on the review of the financial guidelines to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Laurence Gould Consultants Ltd. reported on its review of the financial guidelines for management agreements in September. Its report is currently being considered in detail.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites of special scientific interest in West Sussex.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that there are 55 sites of special interest in West Sussex. I am writing to my hon. Friend with details.

Council Houses (Maintenance)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average expenditure on maintenance per council house in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: In 1984-85, the estimated expenditure on repairs and maintenance from the housing revenue accounts of local authorities was £274 per dwelling. This compares with expenditure of £113 per dwelling in 1978-79, and represents and increase over that period of 142 per cent. in cash terms and 34 per cent. in real terms.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information his Department has about how many people in England and Wales live in (a) municipal housing, (b) housing association accommodation and (c) other private rented accommodation;

(2) how many elderly people in Portsmouth and Hampshire, respectively, live in (a) municipal housing, (b) housing association accommodation and (c) other private rented accommodation;

(3) if he will estimate the number of elderly people in England and Wales who do not live in a home owned by themselves or owned by relatives;

(4) if he will estimate the number of people in Portsmouth and Hampshire, respectively, who do not live in a home owned by themselves or owned by relatives.

Sir George Young: The following analyses of people enumerated in the 1981 census appear for England and Wales in the national report for Great Britain part 1 and for Hampshire and Portsmouth in the county report for Hampshire, part 1:

Persons usually resident in private households by the tenure of the household

All ages	Table 25 of the census
Pensionable age	Table 39 of the census

Persons not in private households by type of establishment

All ages and pensionable age	Table 9 of the census

People living in households headed by owners to whom they are not related, are not separately tabulated.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that the Greater London council's programme to give training opportunities to its manual workers and unskilled staff is continued by the London residuary body; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: It will be for successor bodies, including the London residuary body, to determine their own training programmes for their employees.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any services and property of the Greater London council not covered by the Local Government Act 1985 are currently being considered by his Department for transfer to the City of London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: All the services and property of the GLC are covered by the Local Government Act 1985.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent by his Department on consultancy fees connected with the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Tracey: £111,200.

Smith Houses

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has given to local authorities seeking to sell Smith houses.

Mr. John Patten: Copies of the Building Research Establishment's report on the structural condition of Smith houses were sent in December 1983 to all local authorities reported to own houses of this type. We would expect authorities to make available to purchasers any information they had on the structure or condition of these properties.

I will be announcing shortly our conclusions on the designation of Smith houses, together with the findings of BRE's recent investigation of Smith houses in Sandwell.

Waste Disposal (Newham)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the likely costs to the London borough of Newham of the waste disposal service after 1 April 1986 compared with that borough's present contribution to the service provided by the Greater London council; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: These costs will depend upon the decisions taken by the East London waste authority (to be established on 1 January 1986 under the Waste Regulation and Disposal (Authorities) Order 1985). The London borough of Newham will appoint members to this authority.

Canary Wharf

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to ensure consultation with the local communities affected by proposals for the Canary wharf site in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone.

Sir George Young: The London Docklands Development Corporation has instituted a regular series of meetings with local community groups. The corporation has met the Association of Island Communities, the Limehouse Development Group and the Docklands Forum to discuss proposals for Canary wharf. Further meetings with each group have been arranged to take place before Christmas.

Norfolk Broads

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the basis for his statement to the House on 4 December regarding the alleged hybridity of the proposed Bill to create a new regulatory authority for the Norfolk Broads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The promoters of the proposed Broads Bill were advised that legislation on the lines of the draft Bill ought to be effected by a public Bill, which would be hybrid, and should not be allowed to proceed as a private Bill. I understand that in coming to that view counsel was influenced by the wide issues of public policy raised by the proposed transfer to the new authority of many of the functions of other statutory authorities, and by the extent to which the new authority was to be financed by Exchequer funds. We believe this Bill to be in principle a good one and are at present considering what further steps could be taken.

Waste Disposal (West Yorkshire)

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the levy on each authority in west Yorkshire for waste disposal, as defined in the Local Government Act 1985; and how the levy is arrived at.

Mrs. Rumbold: The authorities responsible for waste disposal in west Yorkshire will be the metropolitan district councils. They will meet their expenditure from their general rate funds in accordance with the agreement which they have made for joint arrangements for the discharge of this service.

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are made for the capital allocations by the district councils in west Yorkshire for waste disposal after 1 April 1986.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have invited the local authority associations and others for comment on the proposal that my Department should invite bids for waste disposal capital resources for 1986-87 from all waste disposal authorities in Greater London and the metropolitan counties (including each district council in west Yorkshire) and should make allocations in the light of these bids. We are considering the responses.

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the arrangements for the payment of capital debt for waste disposal in west Yorkshire.

Mrs. Rumbold: We propose that responsibility for servicing this debt should be discharged by the districts in the county in proportion to population.

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of implementation by the residuary body of the arrangements for waste regulation and disposal in west Yorkshire under the Local Government Act 1985.

Mrs. Rumbold: Under section 9 of, and schedule 6 to, the Local Government Act 1985 it is the metropolitan district councils in west Yorkshire, and not the residuary body, that become responsible at abolition for the waste regulation and disposal functions of the county council. Where these councils could with advantage make joint arrangements for these functions and had not done so by 15 November 1985, my right hon. Friend is under a duty to set up a single authority for those functions. However, as my right hon. Friend announced on 21 November, the district councils in west Yorkshire have made satisfactory joint arrangements for the discharge of these functions, and there is therefore no need for my right hon. Friend to intervene.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total of (a) gross and (b) net capital expenditure by local authorities at (i) plan and (ii) estimated outturn in each year from 1981-82 and 1986-87.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I will answer this question shortly.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the shares of total grant-related expenditure given to (a) London, (b) the metropolitan areas and (c) non-metropolitan areas in each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87, provisional, taking account of all changes in definition and service transfers for year to year.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The latest information for each year is as follows:

Shares of total GRE 1981-82 to 1986-87 (percentages)

	London	Metropolitan areas	Non-metropolitan areas
1981-82*	18·7	25·4	55·9
1982-83*	19·0	25·3	55·8

* For the years 1981-82 to 1984-85 estimates of current accepted expenditure for Transport Supplementary grant have been included with GREs in order to put figures for those years on a consistent basis with those for 1985-86 and 1986-87 to reflect the incorporation of transport supplementary grant taken to revenue into GREs from 1985-86.

† For the years 1985-86 and 1986-87 an estimate of the notional GRE for public transport in London has been added to London's GREs to maintain consistency with earlier years when London received GRE in respect of public transport revenue support.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish changes in the overall make-up of (a) total, (b) current and (c) relevant expenditure in each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87, taking account of changes in definition and service transfers from year to year;

(2) if he will publish the shares of (i) block grant and (ii) rate support grant paid to (a) London, (b) metropolitan areas and (c) non-metropolitan areas at (i) budget and (ii) estimated outturn in each year from 1981-82 to 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I will answer these questions shortly.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of those authorities or other bodies which make either precepts or other levies on boroughs and districts in (i) the Greater London area and (ii) the metropolitan county areas in (a) 1984-85, (b) 1985-86 and (c) his current expectations for 1986-87, including payments to any London rates equalisation schemes.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information requested is as follows.

A London rate equalisation scheme was made for 1984-85 and 1985-86. I expect a further scheme to be made for 1986-87.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total of block grant paid at budget to each of the authorities subject to rate limitation in 1985-86 in each year from 1981-82 to 1985-86, showing also the total for each year.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information requested is given in the table. The figures are in cash terms after holdback. Those for 1985-86 are at first supplementary report stage. London boroughs' figures for 1981-82 include grant paid in respect of the Greater London council and the Metropolitan police and for 1982-83 grant paid in respect of the Metropolitan police.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the net capital allocations to each local authority in 1984-85 and his most recent estimate of comparable outturn for that year, showing authorities by class, ranked from biggest excess over allocation to biggest expenditure below allocation.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today placed in the Library a table giving the information requested which is taken from the fourth quarter capital payments returns completed by local authorities.

Local authorities are entitled to incur prescribed expenditure in excess of allocations by using the prescribed proportion of capital receipts.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the resources discount given to (i) inner London and (ii) outer London within the London arrangements for block grant in each year from 1981-82 to 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: In 1981-82 the inner London resource discount was 23·5 per cent. and outer London discount was 10·6 per cent. These were increased to 29·6 per cent. and 17·2 per cent. respectively in 1982-83 and have not been changed since.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total of expenditure by (a) the Greater London council and (b) each metropolitan county council which will be taken into account when setting the block grant arrangements for 1986-87, showing also the comparable figures for each authority in 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I hope to announce my decisions on the rate support grant settlement for 1986-87 before the Christmas recess.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of total current expenditure undertaken by (a) the Greater London council and (b) the metropolitan county councils in 1985-86 will be transferred on 1 April 1986 to bodies outside local goverment, including residuary bodies, other quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations, nationalised industries, new boards and other institutions; and if he will estimate how much will be transferred to each outside body.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The expenditure of the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils that will be transferred on 1 April 1986 to residuary bodies and bodies outside local government is still subject to further decisions by the authorities and bodies concerned. Therefore, it is not possible at this stage to state what proportion of the total current expenditure undertaken by the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils in 1985-86 will be transferred on 1 April 1986 to residuary bodies and organisations outside local government.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the estimated aggregate Exchequer grant paid to local authorities in each year since 1978-79 (a) at settlement and (b) estimated outturn; and if he will also give the planned figure for 1986-87.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Following is the information.

Legislation

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each piece of new legislation which fell within the responsibility of his Department in each year since 1979, showing the number of man days spent on each Bill in each year; and what is his estimate of the number of man-days expected to be spent on the Local Government Bill.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My Department's legislation for the years 1979 to date is as follows:

Northumberland Wharf (Transfer Station)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why he has refused consent for the redevelopment of the Northumberland wharf river waste transfer station.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has not refused consent for this redevelopment. As explained in his answer of 21 November at column 255-57 to my hon. Friend the member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg), he has withheld it until the London borough of Tower Hamlets has decided the exact nature of the redevelopment that it wishes to undertake on this site.

County Hall

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 14 November, Official Report, column 223, if he will publish the representations he has received during the past year concerning the future of county hall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: No. Those representations which have been received have been passed to the London residuary body for consideration. They must be regarded as matters of commercial confidentiality between LRB and the parties concerned.

Queen Elizabeth II Centre

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the bookings received so far in respect of the Queen Elizabeth II centre.

Sir George Young: It would not be appropriate for me to disclose details of bookings which are the subject of commercial confidence. Publicity is a matter for the sponsor of the particular events.

Greater London Enterprise Board

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his intentions with regard to the future of the Greater London Enterprise Board.

Mr. Tracey: In giving consents to GLC expenditure to meet the running costs of the GLEB during the current financial year my right hon. Friend has made it clear that he would expect control of the board and its assets, which have been funded by London ratepayers, to pass at least to a significant proportion of London boroughs on abolition of the GLC. He therefore welcomes the steps which have been taken both to allow London boroughs to exercise a controlling influence from 1 April 1986, should they wish to do so, and for the board's assets to be returned to all London ratepayers via the residuary body in the event of the board's dissolution.

In order to enable the London boroughs to decide whether to exercise the option now proposed and to assist him in reaching a decision on outstanding applications for consent from the GLC for further grants to the board, my right hon. Friend has called for an independent assessment of the board's financial situation and viability to be undertaken with the following terms of reference:

TERMS OF REFERENCE FOR AN INDEPENDENT ASSESSMENT GLEB

1. Review the arrangements proposed to be made with the London Boroughs to provide financial support for GLEB, both in respect of ongoing commitments of the Board in 1985-86 and 1986-87 and new investments proposed to be made.

2. Assess the minimum sum required from the GLC and/or the London Boroughs in 1985-86 and 1986-87 in order to maintain the value and viability of GLEB's existing assets and investments. This assessment will be based upon:

2.1 a review of the validity and appropriateness of the assumption and bases used by the Board in assessing the amount required;

2.2 a review of the adequacy of the financial data available to support the amount required;

2.3 a review of the consistency of both the assumptions and the financial data for each area of the Board's activities;

2.4 an evaluation of the Board's current assets and liabilities including a list of assets which are capable of being disposed of without further company investment for values in excess of £50,000 in each case.

3. Assess GLEB's ability to continue as a going concern until the end of 1986-87 financial year. This assessment will be based inter alia upon:

3.1 a review of the options identified by the Board for funding the future operations of GLEB;

3.2 an evaluation of the proposals for funding by the Boroughs (see 3.1 above) against the sum required to maintain value and viability of assets, investments (see 2 above) and the Board's current financial position as reflected by 2.4 above.

3.3 the projected cash flow of the Board and the Group for the years 1985-86 and 1986-87.

4. The Report on these assessments should be accompanied by a copy of the Board's and the Group's projected Revenue Account, Balance Sheet and Source and Application of Funds Statements (including a breakdown of the components of working capital requirements) for the years 1985-86 and 1986-87, prepared in accordance with the appropriate Statements of Standard Accounting Practice; and should contain confirmation or otherwise that neither the figures arrived at nor the basis of the assessments made are affected by the exclusion of subsidiaries from consolidation.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Soil Survey

Mr. Pawsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors he took into account in deciding the period over which the Soil Survey of England and Wales should become commercially viable; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: Our consideration of the work of the Soil Survey suggested that the wide range of organisations which made use of the information and expertise it provides offered scope for it to operate more commercially in the future. We made no change in the funding of the survey in the current year and have set the Ministry's commissioned expenditure at half the present level in 1986-87 in order to allow time for these commercial activities to be developed.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the figures for his Department's funding for the Soil Survey for the year 1985-86; how this compares with the recommendations made by Minster Agricultline Ltd.; and if he has any figure for 1986-87.

Mrs. Fenner: My Department's commission with the Soil Survey in 1985-86 amounts to £1,676,000 and will be set at around £850,000 in 1986-87. The consultant's report referred to both these figures. It also recommended that the operating costs of the Soil Survey should be reduced below the present level and that its business base should be developed as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans (a) to reduce further Government funding of the Soil Survey of England and Wales or (b) to disband the survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The level of our commissioned expenditure with the Soil Survey in the current year and in 1986-87 has already been announced. We are considering what our future needs in this area might be and we are also encouraging the Soil Survey to develop alternative sources of income through its commercial activities.

Intervention Stores

Mr. Redmond asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what quantities of butter and cereals are stored on behalf of the European Economic Community in the metropolitan borough of Doncaster; and at which locations.

Mr. Gummer: The following are the quantities and locations of butter and cereals held at intervention stores in the metropolitan borough of Doncaster on 31 October 1985, the latest date for which information is available.

	tonnes

Kirk Sandall	2,754
Cereals

Food Act 1984

Mr. Wigley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has received any representations seeking the amendment of section 13 of the Food Act 1984 to cover animals and poultry sold live to intending consumers for immediate slaughter on the vendor's premises; whether he is satisfied with the working of the Food Act 1984 in this context; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The Government proposed in their consultation document on the review of food legislation that section 13 of the Food Act 1984, the Food and Drugs (Scotland) Act 1956 and the Food and Drugs (Northern Ireland) Act 1958 should be amended to specify that references to "food" in these sections should be construed as including animals (including poultry) sold live to intending consumers for immediate slaughter on the vendor's premises. I have received a number of representations on this and other proposals and these are being considered before a final decision is taken.

Subsidised Alcohol

Mr. Campbell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends to take to ensure that European Community proposals concerning the disposal of subsidised alcohol do not disturb or distort competition in the spiritous beverage market to the disadvantage of Scotch whisky.

Mr. Jopling: One of my Department's major concerns in discussion of the Commission's proposals for general rules for the disposal of intervention alcohol stocks has been to ensure that the minimum sale prices permitted will be at levels which do not disturb the markets for alcohol and spiritous beverages including, of course, Scotch whisky. To that end, a number of changes in the proposed rules have already been secured. Should the proposals be endorsed by the Council, it will continue to be our concern that in applying the detailed rules this intention is fully observed and respected.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he has received any applications from Marples International Limited for a licence to dump at sea toxic waste, including asbestos, cadmium and mercury, from the Glory Hole, Portsmouth;

(2) if Marples International appealed against the last decision not to allow dumping of toxic waste at sea.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Advertising

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department spent on advertising in national and local newspapers, on television and in other printed journals during the financial year 1984-85; and what is the amount budgeted and spent to date in 1985-86.

Mr. Jopling: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in 1984-85 spent £109,287 on advertising in national and local newspapers and other printed journals.

In 1985 from 1 April to 30 September the Ministry has spent £35,173 in national and local newspapers and other printed journals. No specific sum has been budgeted for advertising for the rest of 1985-86.

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament over each of the last 10 years, respectively; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Jopling: In 1983-84 the COI appointed Messrs Doyle, Dane and Bernbach, on behalf of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, as its advertising agency. In that year the Ministry spent £48,618 on a campaign for the prevention of rabies. In 1984-85, £51,534 will be spent on the same advertising campaign with the same agency. Prior to 1983-84, the Ministry had no appointed advertising agents.

Glyphosate

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the approved concentration for the aerial application of glyphosate (N phosphonomethyl glycine); what was the agency responsible; and what was the scientific basis for determining this figure.

Mrs. Fenner: Glyphosate is not at present cleared for application from the air. Two limited clearances for the aerial application of glyphosate to a total of 800 ha of Forestry Commission land during 1985 were granted but both have now run out. In both cases the clearance stated that the glyphosate should be applied at the rate of three litres of the formulated product in 60 litres of water per hectare. The limited clearances were granted under the pesticides safety precautions scheme by the following Government Departments acting jointly:

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food
The Department of the Environment
The Health and Safety Executive
The Department of Health and Social Security
The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland
The Department of Agriculture (Northern Ireland)
The Department of Health and Social Services (N.I.)
The Scottish Home and Health Department
The Welsh Office

The scientific basis for granting these limited clearances was the data provided by the notifier under the terms of the PSPS.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under which circumstances the aerial application of glyphosate (N phosphonomethyl glycine) would be sanctioned at concentrations greater than four litres per hectare.

Mrs. Fenner: Clearances for the use of glyphosate from the air have so far specified an application rate of three litres of product in 60 litres of water per hectare. It is not possible to speculate about the conditions that would be applied to any higher dose rates.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the adequacy of present controls on the aerial application of glyphosate (N phosphonomethyl glycine); and if he has any plans to seek to institute additional controls during the lifetime of the current Parliament.

Mrs. Fenner: During 1985, limited clearances under the pesticides safety precautions scheme were granted for the use of glyphosate from the air for a stipulated period. The limitations on use imposed by these clearances (which have now expired) and the requirements of the Air Navigation Order 1980, as enforced by the Civil Aviation Authority, provided adequate controls over its safe application. The Government circulated proposals for further strengthening of statutory controls over aerial spraying in the consultative document issued on 1 November.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Randall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied that the common fisheries policy control system is currently working fully in the interests of the British fishing fleet, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Jackson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps the Government will take to preserve United Kingdom fishing quotas for the British fishing industry.

Mr. Jopling: Article 4 of the basic Community regulation on the common fisheries policy (Regulation 170/83) provides for quotas of stocks subject to catch limits to be distributed between the member states in a manner which assures each member state relative stability of fishing activities of each of the stocks considered. Article 5(2) puts the responsibility on the member states to determine, in accordance with the applicable Community provisions, the detailed rules for the utilisation of the quotas allocated to them. The objectives of the CFP, and in particular the principle of relative stability of fishing activities, are clearly threatened if fishing vessels from other countries are able to attach themselves artificially to a member state in order to fish against its quotas.

In the light of our experience since the introduction of the system of national quotas in January 1983 and following discussions with the main industry organisations, Fisheries Ministers have concluded that further action is now needed, under article 5(2) of the basic regulation.

Access for British fishing vessels of 10 m or over to stocks under quota is already subject to licensing by the Fisheries Ministers. We have now decided to introduce as from next year new licence conditions aimed at ensuring that licensed vessels have a real economic link with this country. From 1 January 1986 vessels wishing to fish against United Kingdom quotas will have to be registered as British fishing boats under part IV of the Merchant Shipping Act 1894 and to meet the following three conditions:

(i) the vessel must normally operate from the United Kingdom, Channel Islands or Isle of Man: evidence of regular landings in or of regular visits to British ports will be expected;

(ii) at least 75 per cent. of the crew must be British citizens or EC nationals ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom, Channel Islands or Isle of Man: but for the duration of the relevant transitional arrangements on free movement of workers, Greek, Spanish and Portuguese nationals will not, with limited exceptions, be eligible to be counted towards this percentage;

(iii) the skipper and all the crew must contribute to United Kingdom national insurance, or equivalent Isle of Man and Channel Islands schemes.

Owners may be required to make the vessels and relevant documentation available for inspection at a United Kingdom, Isle of Man or Channel Islands port to ensure that these licence conditions are being met.

Fisheries Ministers have also decided that from today western hake should be designated as a "pressure stock" and that only those fishermen who are currently entitled to fish for western hake will be eligible to fish the stock in future. This will not, however, carry with it an automatic entitlement to fish for other "pressure stocks" under the present restrictive licensing arrangements.

As a further measure the arrangements, announced on 3 February 1984, under which prospective vessel owners who at that date had entered into an enforceable contract were entitled to a "pressure stock" licence will be terminated from 31 December 1985.

In order to give effect to these new licensing arrangements and to the restrictions on beam trawling in ICES sub areas VII and VIII, announced on 25 July 1985, arrangements will be made for all existing licences to be replaced.

The detailed arrangements are being notified to the industry within the next few days.

British Freezer Vessels

Mr. Randall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's longer-term policy regarding the capacity of the British freezer vessel fleet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

North Sea (Aggregate Dredging)

Mr. Randall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for the enforcement of the code of practice for aggregate dredging in the southern North sea in order to protect fishing grounds and spawning areas.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Randall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what estimates he has made of the effects on the revenue to the Government and the British fishing industry since 1983, of the Government not imposing a 200-mile fishing limit around the Falkland Islands;

(2) what estimates he has made of the impact on the British fishing fleet of the possibility of Japan becoming self-sufficient in squid as a result of access to the fisheries within a 200-mile limit of the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Polluted Wine

Ms. Jo Richardson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the results of the wine testing for diethylene glycol will be published; whether the results will be distributed to local authorities; and why more information has not been passed from his Department to local authorities to date.

Mrs. Fenner: My Department first issued lists of wines contaminated with diethylene glycol to local food and drugs authorities on 31 July. This information was subsequently updated and supplemented on 23 August, 18 September and 2 December. The information made available in this way included the results of tests carried out at my Department's laboratories.

Field Drainage

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the availability of conservation advice in respect of field drainage design will be advertised in literature promoting the new agricultural and development advisory service field drainage design service.

Mrs. Fenner: We have no current plans to advertise the availability of conservation advice in the literature promoting the field drainage design service. In the exercise of all their functions relating to land, agricultural development and advisory service officers have regard to the desirability of conserving the natural beauty and amenity of the countryside.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what circumstances written conservation advice will be provided as part of the field drainage design service.

Mrs. Fenner: Where conservation interests seem likely to be involved in relation to individual field drainage design service schemes, appropriate measures will be taken by the agricultural development and advisory service to draw them to the attention of the client.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the field drainage design service, including conservation advice, will be available to the non-agricultural sector, such as sporting interests.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total number of field drainage schemes on which agricultural and development advisory service staff provided advice each year since 1975; and if he will also indicate this as a proportion of the total number of grant-aided field drainage schemes undertaken in each year.

Mrs. Fenner: I regret that this information is not available.

Internal Drainage Boards

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take measures to ensure that internal drainage boards meet their requirements fully under section 48 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mrs. Fenner: Yes. My Department, the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office jointly issue guidelines to internal drainage boards regarding the exercise of their duties under section 48 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. These guidelines are being reviewed in the light of the recommendations of the House of Commons Environment Committee.

Broads Grazing Marshes Conservation Scheme

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers operate within the boundaries of the Broads grazing marshes conservation scheme; and how many are currently participating in the financial arrangements under the scheme.

Mrs. Fenner: The system of land tenure within the area covered by the Broads grazing marshes conservation scheme is complex, with much of the land being the subject of annual grazing lets. For this reason, we do not know the precise number of farmers operating within the scheme area.

Only landowners and full tenants are eligible to participate in the scheme. Of these, 102 did so in 1985. They accounted for a land area of 3,402 hectares, or about 85 per cent., of the grassland area within the scheme's boundaries. A further 221·6 hectares of grassland is protected either by short-term holding agreements with the Broads authority, or by virtue of its having been purchased by a conservation body. Taking this into account, over 90 per cent. of the grassland area within the scheme's boundaries is protected.

Surplus Butter Sales

Mr. Oakes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of subsidy per 100 kilos in ecus and per tonne in pound sterling for sales of surplus butter to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Gummer: Sales of butter to the Soviet Union do not attract any special subsidy, although they do qualify for export refunds in the normal way.

Mr. Oakes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he has any plans to dispose of the surplus butter currently held by intervention boards within the European Economic Community directly to European Economic Community citizens; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has received any proposals to reduce the amount of surplus butter currently held by intervention boards within the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what steps he is taking to reduce the amount of surplus butter currently held by intervention boards within the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Schemes to dispose of stocks of butter held by intervention agencies within the Community are the responsibility of the Commission of the European Communities, although it is required to consult member states through the management committee procedure on any measures it intends to take.

The Commission recently outlined a number of possible options, including further sales for export and the use of butter in calf feed. Two particular measures, one on the sale of concentrated butter for cooking, the other an extension of an existing scheme under which butter may be used in manufactured foodstuffs, have since been adopted. Both are of benefit to Community consumers. No proposals have yet been made in respect of any other measures, but, if and when they are, we shall consider them on their merits taking into account views expressed to us.

Other than the possibilities already mentioned, I have not received any proposals about the disposal of intervention stocks. But I have received a proposal from a section of the dairy trade that the scope of the existing Community "social butter" scheme, under which open-market butter may be sold at a reduced price to persons receiving social assistance, be expanded to include pensioners and the unemployed. My Department is currently studying this proposal in depth.

In considering any measures to dispose of surplus stocks, we must ensure value for money in terms of the marginal cost (which may be much higher than the actual rate of subsidy involved) and avoid disruption of the normal commercial market.

Mr. Oakes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of subsidy per 100 kilos in ecus and per tonne in pound sterling for sales of surplus butter under the social butter scheme as defined by European Community Council regulation 2990/82.

Mr. Gummer: The scheme in regulation 2990/82 provides for a maximum Community contribution of 80 ecu per 100 kg (£494·93 per tonne) but does not limit the amount of subsidy which member states themselves may pay. Only Ireland currently operates this scheme.

Mr. Oakes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the level of subsidy per 100 kilos in ecus and per tonne in pound sterling for sales of surplus butter under the Christmas butter scheme of 1984-85.

Mr. Gummer: The 1984-85 Christmas butter scheme permitted the sale of specified quantities of butter from intervention and aided private storage at a price reduction of 160 per ecu per 100 kg (£989·85p per tonne). However, a lower rate of 147·25 ecu per 100 kg (910·97 per tonne) applied to those member states (including the United Kingdom) operating the Community's general consumer butter subsidy. The difference between these two rates was equivalent to the maximum Community contribution towards the cost of the consumer butter subsidy.

Mr. Oakes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the level of subsidy per 100 kilos in ecus and per tonne in pound sterling for sales of surplus butter as feed for livestock.

Mr. Gummer: There has never been a subsidy for sales of surplus butter as feed for livestock.

Surplus Wine Alcohol

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his negotiations with the EEC concerning the disposal of surplus wine alcohol are proceeding on the basis of the recommendations in the National Economic Development Office report of 1984 on behalf of the distilling sector working group; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: Yes. Consistent with the recommendations in the NEDO report, one of my Department's major concerns in discussion of the Commission's proposals for disposal of intervention alcohol stocks has been to ensure that such sales will not disturb the alcoholic drinks market or create distortion of competition between other spirits and Scotch whisky.

French Turkeys

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will take action to halt the import of all French turkeys until United Kingdom sheepmeat can be freely exported to France.

Mr. Gummer: We have written to the French Minister of Agriculture to protest about the introduction of controls over our sheepmeat exports to France and to ask for their immediate removal. We have also drawn the French action to the attention of the EC Commission which appears to share our view that the French action is illegal. It may be doubted whether the best means to return France to adherence to her treaty obligations is for Britain herself to act illegally.

Brucellosis

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle were slaughtered in each of the last five years because of their having brucellosis.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 2 December 1985, c. 99]: The numbers of brucellosis reactors slaughtered in Great Britain in each of the last five years are as follows:

Year	Number of reactors slaughtered
1980	6,305
1981	1,886
1982	548
1983	688
1984	510

Bovine Tuberculosis

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle have been slaughtered in each of the last five years (a) with symptoms of bovine tuberculosis and (b) as bovine tuberculosis reactors.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 2 December 1985, c. 99]: The numbers of bovine tuberculosis reactors slaughtered in Great Britain and the numbers of these reactors which showed visible tuberculous lesions on post-mortem examination in each of the last five years are as set out:

Year	Number of reactors slaughtered	Number of reactors showing visible lesions at PM
1980	873	380
1981	784	363
1982	567	251
1983	623	263
1984	669	242

Badger Control

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current policy of the badger control section of his Department in connection with Clouts Wood nature reserve in Wiltshire.

Mrs. Fenner: [pursuant to her reply, 2 December 1985, c. 99]: Tuberculosis has been disclosed in a cattle herd close to the Clouts Wood reserve and disease has been confirmed in badgers using the breakdown farm. In these circumstances I have decided there is no option but to carry out a badger control operation. However, we are not at present proposing to set traps in Clouts Wood and I have undertaken to write to the Wiltshire Trust for Nature Conservation if we later decide to do so.

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost in each of the last 10 years of badger control.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 2 December 1985, c. 99]: A recent update of previous figures puts the estimate of operational costs of badger control in England and Wales at an average of £310,000 per annum over the last 10 years. An important contributory factor in this increase was the change from gassing to trapping as the principal method of control.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the increase in real and cash terms, in hill livestock compensatory allowances payable in each year from 1980 to date in the original less-favoured areas and from their inception to date in the new less-favoured areas.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1985, c. 269]: The information requested is set out in the tables:

SOCIAL SERVICES

NHS (Merit Awards)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total annual cost of merit awards to National Health Service consultants; and what percentage are awarded to full-time National Health Service employees.

Mr. Hayhoe: The actual amounts paid out in distinction awards are not collected centrally since the award holder is paid pro-rata to his sessional commitments to the National Health Service. The current value of awards recommended by the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body for Great Britain is £52.2 million, of which it is estimated that some £42.6 million will be paid. Of the 5,290 awards in payment in England and Wales at 31 December 1984, 36·3 percent. were held by whole-time, and a further 38 per cent. by maximum part-time, consultants. Exactly comparable information for Scotland is not readily available.

Lancashire (District Health Authorities)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the expenditure in each of the district health authority areas in Lancashire in each of the last six years.

Mr. Hayhoe: Following is the information requested derived from the annual accounts of the district health authorities, the former Lancashire area health authority and the North Western regional health authority:

	1979-80 £ million	1980-81 £ million	1981-82 £ million
Lancashire Area Health Authority	173·7	221·2	258·3

District Health Authorities	1982-83 £ million	1983-84 £ million	1984-85* £ million
Lancaster	39·3	39·9	41·8
Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde	45·3	45·1	50·3
Preston	63·0	65·0	67·9
Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley	49·5	49·8	53·7
Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale	45·0	44·7	49·9
West Lancashire	20·5	21·4	22·2
Chorley and South Ribble	11·1	12·2	13·4

* Provisional figures.

Notes:

1. The expenditure shown is the total of revenue and capital expenditure by each authority, together with capital expenditure by the North Western regional health authority on services for that particular district or for the former Lancashire area. Other expenditure by the regional health authority cannot be attributed to individual districts and is therefore excluded.

2. The figures for the Preston health authority, and those for the Lancashire area health authority up to 1981-82, include revenue expenditure on the Lancashire ambulance service which was:

	£ million
1979-80	5·0
1980-81	6·4
1981-82	6·8
1982-83	7·2
1983-84	7·5
1984-85	*7·8

* Provisional figure.

3. The figures exclude payments to doctors, dentists, pharmacists, opticians and others providing services under contracts with the Lancashire family practitioner committee. These were shown in the accounts of the Lancashire area health authority until 1981-82, and subsequently in those of the West Lancashire health authority. The totals were:

	£ million
1979-80	48·3
1980-81	59·9
1981-82	67·8
1982-83	78·7
1983-84	83·8
1984-85	*92·7

* Provisional figure.

Spectacle Frames

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the extent to which manufacturers have ceased production of spectacle frames available on the National Health Service since the implementation of the provisions of the Health and Social Security Act 1984.

Mr. Hayhoe: I understand that some small manufacturers have ceased production of NHS frames and that others are limiting production to the most common types, colours and sizes. However, the largest manufacturers are reported to be maintaining production of all NHS frames.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he anticipates that the Advisory Committee on National Health Service drugs will conclude their consideration of whether or not cyanocobalimin should be included on the list of drugs prescribable under the National Health Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: The committee has completed its consideration of cyanocobalamin. Following its recommendation cyanocobalamin injection BP is available for prescription under the National Health Service by regulations which came into effect on 1 December.

McColl Committee

Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement concerning the implications of the McColl committee report for the artificial limb service to patients in the West Norfolk and Wisbech health district; and what measures he plans to take to improve this service both locally and nationally.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) and the hon. Member for Eccles (Mr. Carter-Jones) on 13 November at columns 207-208.

Cervical Cancer Screening

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the health authorities which have a computerised call and recall system for cervical cancer screening in operation in their area covering all women over 20 years old.

Mr. Hayhoe: As at June 1985, 37 district health authorities had computerised call and recall systems or firm plans to implement such systems by the end of 1985.

These are able to identify women in particular age groups or other risk categories. The following authorities use (or plan to use) their systems to call women from 20 years of age.

Aylesbury Vale
Barnsley
Cheltenham and District
Croydon
East Berkshire
Exeter
Gloucestershire
Mid-Downs
North Derbyshire
North Devon
Northampton
Portsmouth and South East Hampshire
Rotherham
South Tees
Torbay

Consultant Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the information available to his Department on the waiting times experienced by patients for appointments to see consultants for each district and for each specialty.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not at present available centrally. However, the Health Services information steering group has recommended in its first report that a new annual district return be submitted centrally to record, by specialty, the number of patients waiting for an out-patient appointment. Health authorities have been asked to plan on the basis that the steering group's report will be implemented by April 1987.

Scoliosis

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on plans for the future treatment of children with scoliosis in north London; if he will seek to ensure that the same provision for parents to stay with their children is made as is available at Stanmore; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I assume the right hon. Member is referring to a proposal in the report of a working party on orthopaedic services set up by Bloomsbury health authority. The proposal was that for their peri-operative period the more complex cases of scoliosis be treated within a multi-faculty hospital, with an intensive therapy unit and other specialised facilities readily available rather than at the Stanmore branch of the Royal National Orthopaedic hospital. It was suggested that this work might be transferred to the Middlesex or University College hospitals, or to hospitals, such as the hospitals for sick children, outside the district.

I understand that at its meeting on 4 December, when Bloomsbury health authority considered the responses to consultation on the report, it agreed that further discussions on the future location of scoliosis work were needed with the consultants concerned and that there were no plans at present to transfer the work to another hospital. These are at present matters for the health authorities concerned and any proposed changes would require full consultation in the usual way.

I am sure that one of the points which will be considered by the health authority in reaching a decision on whether to propose any changes will be the provision of overnight accommodation for parents. We have already made it clear that the final decision on any major changes at the Royal National Orthopaedic hospital, Stanmore, will be taken by the Secretary of State.

Senior Registrars

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many senior registrars, after completing at least five years in the grade, have left the hospital service in each year from 1979 to 1985 without achieving a consultant appointment.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the information requested is not readily available because of current reprogramming of the computerised data base and other priorities.

Health for All Strategy

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to give any advice to district and regional health authorities and local authorities on implementing the World Health Organisation's health for all strategy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: We have taken steps to bring the strategy to the attention of chief officers of regional health authorities and are arranging discussions with interested groups and the World Health Organisation on how the elements of the strategy may best be applied in the United Kingdom context.

Health Care (Social Inequalities)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures he intends to bring forward to reduce inequalities in health between socio-economic classes.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Government's policy is aimed at directing health care services towards the most vulnerable groups of people and towards areas of greatest need and will benefit those whose health needs may arise from social inequalities.

Single Payments (Edinburgh)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average time between the receipt of a request for a single payment and the payment of such a claim in Great Britain, in Scotland and in the East Edinburgh office of his Department respectively.

Mr. Major: Claims for single payments are determined as soon as possible after all the information required has been collected. A limited sample of recent cases at Edinburgh (East) local office suggests that, on average, claims for single payments are currently being determined 18 days after their receipt. (When a claim is successful the payment is normally made on the day it is determined or the following day). Similar figures for Great Britain and Scotland are not available.

Dental Charges

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions dentists have recorded the cost of treatment as the reason for a patient not completing a course of treatment in part II of the National Health Service dental estimate form F.P.17 in each of the last three years; and if he will collate and publish figures on the incidence of this problem in future.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested is not available and I do not believe its collection would be justified.

Cancer

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will take steps to encourage public awareness of the symptoms that, if they persist, can indicate cancer;

(2) if he will list the publications in which the Health Education Council has given advice on the symptoms that the public should look out for as they might indicate cancer; and if he will list the symptoms and the cancers they may indicate;

(3) how many copies of the leaflet, "Can you avoid Cancer?", have been printed by the Health Education Council; and to whom, and what organisations, they have been circulated;

(4) what proportion of the budget of the Health Education Council is spent on activities related to cancer and in particular to cancer prevention; and if he will list the ways in which the council publicises cancer prevention.

Mr. Whitney: Malignant tumours can affect many organs and tissues of the body, and the symptoms to which they give rise are correspondingly various. To avoid arousing unnecessary alarm over minor symptoms as much as to prevent neglect of potentially serious ones, health education about cancer needs to be carefully conducted. Accordingly the preferred approach is to encourage people to consult a doctor about changes in their normal health which last longer than a short time.

The Health Education Council has produced two publications specifically about cancer. "Can You Avoid Cancer?" gives information on possible contributory factors and suggests action that individuals can take to reduce the risks. 500,000 copies of the publication were produced to support a television series of the same name. Members of the public were sent copies on request; individuals and organisations on the council's subscription list received a copy automatically. Copies also went to all National Health Service health education units to distribute to the public, health professionals and organisations. The booklet gives examples of symptoms which call for medical advice, such as persistent hoarseness or coughing, unexpected bleeding or a lump, but the emphasis is on the need to ask a doctor about unexplained changes in normal health lasting more than two weeks.

The council's leaflet about breast cancer, "A Guide to Examining Your Breasts", lists the signs to look for as part of a regular examination including changes in nipples, veins or breast size.

The council estimates that it spends about 20 per cent. of its budget, or some £2 million, on activities related to cancer prevention. Its smoking education programme is a major source of such activity and its alcohol and nutrition work also contribute. The council disseminates its advice and information through many channels, including television, radio, newspaper publicity, printed material intended for a wide range of audiences, workshops and seminars for health workers educational materials for schools, and so on.

Health Education Council (Budget)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the budget of the Health Education Council for each of the last five years in both cash and real terms.

Mr. Whitney: The figures are:

	Cash £ million	Real Terms £ million
1981-82	6·6	8·0
1982-83	8·6	9·7
1983-84	9·3	10·1
1984-85	9·6	10·0
1985-86	10·1	10·1

Opticians (Fees)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the costs incurred by his Department as a result of cutting National Health Service examination and dispensing fees for opticians from 1 September until the Judicial Review hearing on 7 October.

Mr. Hayhoe: The costs incurred by my Department are contained within the general costs of administration and cannot be separately identified.

National Health Service (Red Alerts)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the hospitals and their district health authorities which have already been on red alert for no further admissions other than emergencies at least once in the current winter; and how many red alerts in how many hospitals there were last winter.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

AIDS

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department was first aware that the acquired immune deficiency syndrome was a sexually communicable disease; and what action was then taken to seek to combat the dangers.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many acquired immune deficiency syndrome cases have occurred in the Bolton area in each year since acquired immune deficiency syndrome was first notified.

Mr. Hayhoe: Nine cases have been reported in the areas of the Mersey and North-Western regional health authorities. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of this figure without running the risk of affecting the confidentiality of information on individual patients.

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make acquired immune deficiency syndrome a notifiable disease.

Mr. Hayhoe: No, but the matter is kept under review.

National Insurance Contributions

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the additional income in the 1986-87 financial year from abolishing the ceiling on national insurance contributions for the employed and self-employed.

Mr. Major: If the upper earnings limit for employee's class 1 contributions and the upper profits limit for self-employed people's profit-related class 4 contributions were to be abolished in 1986-87, but the ceiling retained for the contracted-out rebate, the additional contribution revenue would be:

£680 million from employees
£80 million from self-employed people.

These figures are based on the same assumptions as Cmnd. 9672 (the report by the Government Actuary on the draft of the Social Security (Contributions, Re-Rating) Order 1985).

Residential Homes

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received on issues relating to the amendment of the Registered Homes Act 1984 to include all homes which provide accommodation to the elderly.

Mr. Whitney: Four representations of this kind have been received since 1 January 1985 when the Act was brought into force.

Residential Homes (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of homes in Portsmouth and Hampshire, respectively, that are registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mr Whitney: Provisionally at 31 March 1985 there were 354 homes registered under part I of the 1984 Act in Hampshire. Of these 61 were in the non-metropolitan district of Portsmouth.

Mr. Hancock: asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of elderly people in Portsmouth and Hampshire, respectively, who are living in homes registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mr. Whitney: Provisionally at 31 March 1985 there were 4,240 residents aged 65 or over in homes registered under part I of the Act in Hampshire. Of these 601 were in the non-metropolitan district of Portsmouth. There are also some residents aged 65 or over in homes for the mentally handicapped and homes for the mentally ill but information on the total number is not available.

Childhood Cancers

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether Her Majesty's Government are carrying out, or intend to carry out, any investigations into the incidence of childhood cancers in the areas around (a) Aldermaston and (b) Burghfield.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Child Abuse

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will set up a system for central reporting and registration of cases of child abuse resulting in serious injury or death; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: We are considering very carefully points raised in recent reports about the information on child abuse that should be reported centrally, as part of the programme of work the Department already has in hand to help prevent child abuse cases and improve their handling when they occur.

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Social Services Inspectorate has made any recommendations on the prevention, detection or treatment of child abuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Social Services Inspectorate is currently undertaking an inspection of the supervision of social workers in the assessment and monitoring of children in need of protection. Its report, which is expected at the end of the year, will form part of the Department's continuing programme of work to help prevent child abuse cases and improve their handling.

Poverty (Definition)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what definition of poverty he uses in the context of those policies and programmes for which he is responsible.

Mr. Major: There is no single agreed definition of poverty. I would, however, draw my hon. Friend's attention to the discussion of measures of poverty and their relevance to social security contained in the Green Paper "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9517) volume 1, paragraph 4.7.

Acheson Report

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the recommendations of the Acheson report have been implemented.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Prescriptions

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many prescriptions were dispensed by chemists in each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Hayhoe: The numbers of prescriptions dispensed by chemists in England in each year since 1979 were:

	Number
1979	304,358,325
1980	303,143,246
1981	299,789,158
1982	311,087,632
1983	315,107,107
1984	320,377,179

National Health Service (Annual Report)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much was paid to the Stationery Office for the copies of the National Health Service annual report 1985 distributed by his Department.

Mr. Whitney: The Department will receive the standard pre-publication discount of 40 per cent. and will pay £9,300.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many staff, and at what Civil Service grades, were involved in preparing the National Health Service annual report 1985;

(2) when work commenced in his Department on preparing the National Health Service annual report 1985; when the copy went to the printers; and when it was published;

(3) why his Department made no provision for monitoring the total costs of preparing, promoting and distributing the National Health Service annual report 1985.

Mr. Whitney: "The Health Service in England—Annual Report 1985" was produced in order to inform the public about the largest of our public services, which forms a major part of the responsibilities of the Secretary of State for Social Services. As such, the production of the report is in the mainstream of the Department's activities, and its preparation and costs are integral to the normal responsibilities of the Department.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any outside persons or organisations were involved in preparing the National Health Service annual report 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The report was prepared entirely within the Department.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the full printing cost of the print run of the National Health Service annual report 1985.

Mr. Whitney: The estimated cost of printing the report was £8,500 including materials.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many copies of the National Health Service annual report 1984 were printed; how many were distributed free; how many were sold; and how many were left unsold.

Mr. Whitney: Three thousand eight hundred and thirty copies of the report were printed, 1,800 were distributed free, and Her Majesty's Stationery Office has no remaining copies of the report.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many press releases were issued by his Department about the National Health Service annual report 1985; when they were issued; and what was the embargo time.

Mr. Whitney: The press office of the Department issued on the afternoon of 25 November one press release about the National Health Service annual report without embargo.

The figure for 1984 contained in the report, were also given in a statistical bulletin published on 4 October. A press release was issued on 3 October embargoed for 0001 hours the following day. Copies of both releases have been placed in the Library.

† Figures prior to 1974 relate to Regional Health Boards. Because of NHS restructuring in 1974 and 1982 the regional figures are not strictly comparable over the whole period.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each special health authority, district health authority, regional health authority and for England as a whole (a) the number of authorised amenity beds on 31 December 1984, (b) the average daily number of beds occupied by amenity patients, (c) the discharge and deaths of amenity patients and (d) the income from amenity patients; and if he will give the 1983 figures for comparison.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985, c. 481-82]: The information is given in the table.

* Some totals may not add up precisely due to roundings.
† The figures are for the financial years indicated and are derived from the annual accounts of health authorities. At this stage, all 1984-85 figures are provisional.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will explain the classification private regular day cases on Form SBH211.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985, c. 481-82]: Separate figures are collected on day cases and regular day patients on form SBH211. Day cases are patients who attend for investigation, treatment or operation under clinical supervision and who occupy a bed but do not stay in hospital overnight. Regular day patients are those patients who regularly attend for a course of treatment over a period, who are provided with treatment and care as though they were inpatients, but who return home at night.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each special health authority, district health authority, regional health authority and for England as a whole, the number of attendances during 1984 by (a) private outpatients, (b) private day cases and (c) private regular day patients, and if he will also give the 1983 figures for comparison.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985, c. 481-82]: The information requested is given in the tables.

Renal Failure

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people died of kidney failure over the past five years; if he will estimate what proportion of these people could have been saved if suitable kidney and transplant facilities had been available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people died of kidney failure in each district health authority for each year from 1979 to date.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his replies, on 26 November 1985, c. 544 and 28 November 1985, c. 656]: I very much regret that an error was made in the table showing the number of deaths from renal failure in England and Wales in my reply of 26 November. The explanation given in my reply of 28 November may also benefit from amplification.

The cause of deaths statistics are compiled by coding the underlying cause of death, in accordance with the international classification of diseases. The underlying cause is derived from the information which is given by the doctor who completed the medical certificate of cause of death.

Deaths where the certificate mentioned renal failure without specifying an antecedent disease are coded to ICD 585 and 586. Deaths where the underlying cause is specified as renal disease are coded to ICD 580-584 or 587-9, but these cases may or may not have died from renal failure; other complications of the renal disease can result in different terminal events. Thus the codes ICD 585-6 on their own will understate the number of deaths where renal failure was a terminal event, but on the other hand the whole group ICD 580-589 will include some cases where there was no renal failure.

In addition, there will be an appreciable number of deaths where renal failure occurs as a terminal event of a disease, such as diabetes, where the renal failure is not classified as the underlying cause. Such cases cannot be identified in the statistics.

For district health authorities, the deaths from the whole group ICD 580-589 in 1980-84 are published in table 4 of "Mortality Statistics by Area", DH5 Series, copies of which are in the Library. Figures for the more limited group ICD 585-6 are included in the above but are not available separately for each District; these figures could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The numbers of deaths from renal disease of all forms in England and Wales 1979-84 were:

Year	Total numbers in International Classification of Diseases (ICD) 580-589
1979	4,380
1980	4,482
1981	4,766
1982	4,950
1983	4,742
*1984	4,391

* 1984 figures are not comparable with those of earlier years owing to a change in coding rules.

It is impossible to estimate the proportion of people who might not have died if more treatment facilities had been available. Some of those who died would have been receiving treatment and the majority of cases recorded would not be regarded as treatable because of the presence of other dieases.

Personal Social Services Research Unit, Kent

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all publications produced to date by the personal social services research unit in Kent.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1985, c. 145]: A list of the remaining publications by the personal social services research unit has been placed in the Library.

Advancement of Women

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to implement paragraphs 149 of the United Nations Nairobi forward looking strategies on the advancement of women relating to the increased participation of women in higher professional and managerial positions in health institutions.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1985, c. 148]: The National Health Service has been an equal opportunities employer since 1976. Women occupy many senior posts in the Health Service.

The Government do not ascribe to the quota system. Candidates for posts are assessed on their individual merits.

Cervical Cancer Screening

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of women who have received cervical cancer screening are under 35 years of age.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 6 December 1985]: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a further statement on the financing arrangements between his Department and the health authorities with regard to the cervical cancer screening programme, with particular reference to the proportionate contribution made by health authorities.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 6 December 1985]: Expenditure by district health authorities on cervical cancer screening is met from within the total resources available to them. There are no special allocations from my Department.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of women who will not die next year as a result of the introduction of computerised systems of call and recall for cervical cancer covering all women in the age group at risk in every area.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 6 December 1985]: As many factors affect mortality from cervical cancer I am advised that such an estimate cannot sensibly be made.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all the health authorities and family practitioner committees which have issued instructions to doctors in clinics or family doctors or both to suspend, delay or reduce the taking of cervical smears because of a backlog in pathology laboratories.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 6 December 1985]: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

Alphafetoprotein

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether a drug called Fetoprotein is used in National Health Service hospitals in the United Kingdom as a monitor for the effectiveness of cancer treatment.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 6 December 1985]: Alphafetoprotein is a naturally occurring protein which is produced by the body in excess in certain rare kinds of tumour. Its measurement in the blood is used in National Health Service hospitals in the United Kingdom as a monitor for the effectiveness of cancer treatment for those tumours.

EMPLOYMENT

Race Relations Act

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to the answer of 2 December to the hon. Member for Leicester East, Official Report, what information he has about (a) the level of resources being devoted to positive action under sections 37 and 38 of the Race Relations Act 1967 and (b) the particular ethnic minority groups who are under-represented in particular work and the extent to which they are first generation immigrants, (c) the extent of their under-representation and (d) the particular areas both by category of employment and geographical location, where such under-representation occurs; and if he will give, in each case, the source of his information.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Ten training organisations have been designated under the provisions of section 37 of the Race Relations Act. Designation work under section 37 is undertaken within a small policy section in the Department of Employment headquarters. Encouragement and training initiatives under the provisions of section 38 are undertaken by employers in the light of their particular circumstances. No information is available on the level of resources involved.

Information on the level of under-representation in particular work, the particular racial groups involved and geographical locations cannot be provided in the form requested.

Under section 38 the existence of under-representation in particular work is a matter for the individual employer concerned to assess in the light of his circumstances. An employer would need to be satisfied that at any time within the previous 12 months there were no persons of a particular racial group doing that particular work at his establishment or the proportion of persons of that racial group among those doing that work at the establishment was small in comparison with the proportion of that group either:

(a) all those employed at the establishment; or

(b) the population of the area from which the employer normally recruited for work at the establishment.

In these circumstances it would be lawful for an employer to provide access to training for that work to his employees of the racial group in question only, and he could also lawfully encourage members of that racial group to take advantage of opportunities for doing that work. This exception does not however make it lawful for the employer to discriminate at the point of selection for such work.

Applications for designation under section 37 are considered on an individual basis when applications by training bodies are put to my right hon. and Noble Friend for consideration. For this purpose a racial group would be under-represented in particular work where it appeared to the training body that at any time within the preceeding twelve months there were no persons of that group, or comparatively few, among those doing that work in Great Britain.

In view of my hon. Friend's interest, I am writing to suggest a meeting to discuss our mutual concern that the best person should be chosen for a job without discrimination.

Equal Opportunities Officer

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General how many of the applicants for the post of equal opportunities officer in his Department were (a) white males, (b) white females, (c) males of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin or (d) females of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These posts have not been filled by inviting applications from staff. Existing staff in personnel units have been designated as equal opportunity officers on the basis of their overall suitability and not on the basis of sex or ethnic origin. Equal opportunity matters are not their sole responsibility.

Gravesham

Mr. John Fraser asked the Paymaster General if he will publish the numbers of persons unemployed, by ward, in the constituency of Gravesham.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. Figures are given showing the numbers of unemployed claimants in the wards of the Gravesham parliamentary constituency as at 10 October 1985.

Advertising

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Paymaster General what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament over each of the last 10 years, respectively; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Details of campaigns carried out in the last 10 years are only available at disproportionate cost. This reply covers the last five financial years. In this period two agencies, appointed through the Central Office of Information, have handled campaigns for the Department. These were Freemans (previously Freeman Matthews and Milne and Freeman Matthews Treasure) until July 1983 and Davidson Pearce since that date.

The campaigns and expenditure were as follows:

Long-term Unemployed (Pilot Scheme)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Paymaster General what level of finance he intends to allocate to the Manpower Services Commission to enable it to administer its proposed pilot scheme to help the long-term unemployed; and what amount will be allocated to the west midland region.

Mr. Alan Clark: No specific budgets have been allocated to the nine pilot areas. Given the limited total coverage of the pilot schemes, the costs can be met from within current resources without affecting existing programmes run by the Manpower Services Commission.

Labour Statistics

Mrs. Peacock asked the Paymaster General (1) what were the unemployment figures and percentages for the Batley and Spen constituency in September 1983, September 1984 and September 1985, respectively;

(2) if he will give the percentage by which unemployment in the Batley and Spen constituency has changed since June 1983;

(3) what trend the unemployment figures from September 1983 to September 1985 reveal for the constituency of Batley and Spen.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The numbers of unemployed claimants in the Batley and Spen parliamentary constituency are as follows:

	Number
September 1983	4,986
September 1984	5,317
September 1985	5,375

Unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas.

Between September 1983 and September 1985 unemployment in the area rose by 389 or 7·8 per cent. Between June 1983 and November 1985 unemployment in the area rose by 241 or 4·9 per cent., but this comparison will be affected by seasonal factors.

Wages Inspectors

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General how many wages inspectors are currently employed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On 1 November 1985 there were 115 wages inspectors in post; five vacant posts were in the process of being filled.

Wages Inspectorate

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what arrangements exist for the use of interpreters by the Wages Inspectorate when it interviews workers who do not speak English.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Wages inspectors can use interpreters whenever the need arises.

Construction Industry

Mr. Robert Parry asked the Paymaster General how many workers were employed in the construction industry in England and Wales in June 1979; and what were the figures at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: In June 1979 there were 1,052,000 employees in employment in the construction industry in England and Wales. In September 1985 (the latest date for which figures are available) the number was 813,000.

Factory Inspectors (North-West)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report for (a) the north-west region and (b) the Stretford constituency (i) the number of inspections by factory inspectors for 1984, 1983 and 1982, (ii) the number of visits by field inspectors to workplaces for 1985, 1984, 1983 and 1982, (iii) the number of deaths, injuries and illnesses due to accidents at work for 1984, 1983, 1982 and (iv) any estimate he has of the loss of output due to accidents at work for 1984 to 1982.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The north-west region covers three areas of the Health and Safety Executive: Greater Manchester (Manchester), north-west (Preston) and Merseyside (Liverpool). The information requested is as follows:

North West region	1982	1983	1984	1985
Number of inspections (visits) by factory inspectors	29,948	30,372	*32,670	†20,720
Provisional—Number of injuries (non-fatal)	53,428	28,926	24,903	—
Number of notifiable diseases	7	5	6	—
Number of deaths	65	84	88	—

* Covers the 15 month period 1 January 1984 to 1 April 1985.
† Covers the period from 2 April 1985 to 3 December 1985.
No estimates have been made on the loss of output due to accidents at work.
Information on the Stretford constituency is not availble.

Health and Safety Inspectors

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General if he will now take steps to increase the number of Health and Safety Executive inspectors by 50 per cent.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Decisions on the number of inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive are a matter for the executive, subject to the limits set by the Government on its total salary expenditure and manpower.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report the non-seasonally adjusted unemployment rates, including school leavers, as at October and November for (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The table gives, for the regions requested, the unadjusted unemployment rates for October and November 1985.

	10 October 1985	14 November 1985
England	12·9	12·8
Scotland	15·6	15·6
Wales	17·2	17·0
Northern Ireland	21·0	20·7

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Paymaster General if he will list for each constituency in the north-west region the change in the number of employees in employment between June 1979 and June 1985 for (a) all industries and (b) manufacturing industry.

Mr. Alan Clark: I regret that the information is not available.

Statistics of the numbers employed in local areas are obtained from censuses of employment taken triennally since 1978 and the latest results are for 1981. Census estimates for constituencies were not compiled for years prior to 1981 but net changes between 1981 and 1984 will become available following publication of the September 1984 census of employment in the spring of 1986.

Abbeystead Pumping Station (Explosion)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Paymaster General if he will place in the Library a copy of the text of the statement that was made on the question of Government financial aid to the victims of the Abbeystead pumping station explosion by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment, the hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) at a meeting with 24 residents of St. Michael's-in-Wyre, in their village hall on 30 May 1984.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No record of this private meeting was taken by the Department.

Long-term Unemployment (Government Experiment)

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General if he will give the following details on the proposed experiment for the long-term unemployed in Billingham and seven other areas (a) type of jobs to be included in the experiment and (b) average weekly amount of Government subsidy to be received by each worker and (c) average weekly amount of Government subsidy to be received by each Government worker.

Mr. Alan Clark: Any full-time jobs filled in the six months from 6 January by long-term unemployed people resident in the nine pilot areas will qualify for the jobstart allowance provided that earnings from those jobs are less than £80 a week. All types of jobs are eligible, whether in the public or private sector, except for jobs in domestic service and in the community programme. In all cases the allowance will be £20 a week. For further details of the scheme I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) on 28 November at columns 633-34.

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received concerning the proposed experiment for the long-term unemployed in Billingham and seven other areas in Britain.

Mr. Alan Clark: To date my Ministerial colleagues and I have answered nine parliamentary questions from hon. Members concerning the pilot schemes for the long-term unemployed which will operate in nine areas of Great Britain from 6 January 1986. We have also received seven letters from hon. Members and 10 letters from members of the public.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General what funds he is providing for the youth training scheme to continue the special quality of supervision and training hitherto associated with mode B of the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Mode B1 of the current youth training scheme comprises community projects, training workshops and information technology centres. Under the two-year youth training scheme from April 1986, community projects and training workshops will generally be eligible for the premium rate of funding, totalling £270 per trainee per month, in addition to the standard annual managing agent's fee of £110 per contracted place. They may also be eligible for transitional funding of up to £70 per filled premium place per month in 1986-87. The funding of information technology centres is the subject of a separate review.

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Paymaster General if he will amend the rules of eligibility of the job release scheme to cover departmental reorganisations, such as the substitution of a teacher in business studies by a teacher in technical subjects in a school.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. The job release scheme is designed not to encourage Departmental reorganisation but to induce older workers who are close to state retirement pension age to leave employment and so release jobs for unemployed workers.

Labour Mobility

Mr. Soames asked the Paymaster General what steps his Department is taking to improve mobility in the labour market.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Manpower Services Commission supports a wide range of training measures to help employers meet skill needs and improve the employability of individuals, which contribute to the improvement of occupational mobility within the labour market. Overall MSC spending on training is likely to be £1·2 billion this year as compared with £380 million in 1979.

To facilitate geographical mobility, there is a range of measures for making jobseekers aware through the jobcentre network of vacancies in other parts of the country and in addition the Commission operates three schemes which provide financial assistance for people moving to take hard to fill jobs in other areas. Trials are currently being undertaken to see if the effectiveness of these measures can be improved.

Gas Installation (Safety)

Mr. Jim Lester asked the Paymaster General what action he intends to take to seek to ensure that levels of safety in gas installations are improved after privatisation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Health and Safety Commission has already begun work on an approved code of practice on standards of training for gas installers. It hopes to publish a consultative document early next year.

There is a need for an independent, representative body to promote safety in gas installation. I am asking the commission and the current Council of the Confederation for the Registration of Gas Installers to develop proposals for such a body.

CIVIL SERVICE

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Lawler asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many positions the Civil Service plans to make available for youth training scheme trainees from the new two-year youth training scheme from 1 April.

Mr. Luce: This information is not held centrally. We are, however, examining with Departments the scope for Civil Service participation in the new arrangements, and I shall reply to my hon. Friend with details of departmental plans for the two-year youth training scheme as soon as the information is available.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inland Revenue (Enforcement Powers)

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish his consultation document on the enforcement powers of the Inland Revenue; and if it remains his intention to include provisions on those matters in the Finance Bill 1986.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Taxation Revenue

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the additional income to the Exchequer if (a) all present tax allowances and (b) those tax reliefs for which estimates can be made are set against the standard rate of tax only.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

THE ARTS

Musical Entertainment (Expenditure)

35. Mr. Greenway asked the Minister for the Arts how much has been spent from the arts budget on musical entertainment in the present year and in each of the past 10 years; what expenditure is proposed for 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The relevant figures are as follows. They demonstrate that the Arts Council's expenditure on music, exclusive of opera, was over £10 million in 1984-85 and that this represented an increase in real terms of 11·9 per cent. between 1979-80 and 1984-85.

Arts Council and Regional Arts Associations expenditure on music

1975-76	3,087,764
1976-77	3,814,155
1977-78	4,388,230
1978-79	5,182,233
1979-80	5,893,189
1980-81	6,778,703
1981-82	8,004,884
1982-83	9,555,884
1983-84	9,571,900
1984-85	10,079,100

These figures exclude Arts Council provision for opera. No separate figure for music in 1985-86 is yet available.

Disabled People

36. Mr. Freud asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the accessibility of the arts to disabled people and the steps his Department is taking to improve accessibility.

Mr. Luce: I have read with great interest the Attenborough report, commissioned by the Carnegie Trust, which made recommendations on this subject: I commended it to the Arts Council, British Film Institute and Crafts Council, and I am pleased to note that all three have acted upon the report. The public libraries, museums and galleries for which I am responsible have for many years made special efforts, within the resources available, to facilitate visits by disabled individuals.

Funding

37. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts if he has had any discussions with the organisers of the National Campaign for the Arts about the level of funding for the arts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The organisers of the campaign have not made any approaches directly to me since I took office. I am, however, aware of their recently published "Programme for the Arts". I announced the Arts Council's grant for 1986-87 on 14 November and will shortly be announcing the allocations of the rest of the arts budget.

Libraries (Audit Commission Recommendations)

38. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Minister for the Arts if he has received any recommendations from the Audit Commission on libraries within his responsibility and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: No, I have not received any recommendations from the Audit Commission.

National Museums and Galleries

39. Sir David Price asked the Minister for the Arts whether, in view of the major structural problems faced by a number of national museums and galleries, he will equip them with capital funds as well as current grants.

Mr. Luce: Building and maintenance work for the national museums and galleries, including major capital projects, is at present carried out by the Property Services Agency with funds separately allocated to the agency from the Arts and Libraries budget. The Government are reviewing the arrangements for the control and funding of such work.

Business Sponsorship

40. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Minister for the Arts if he plans to make available additional funds in 1985-86 to encourage businessmen to support the arts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have recently provided an additional £¼ million for the business sponsorship incentive scheme by reallocating funds within my budget to meet the demand.

Southern Arts

41. Mr. Soames asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the level of funding for Southern Arts for 1986-87.

Mr. Luce: The funding of Southern Arts is a matter for the Arts Council, which has not yet announced its allocations to regional arts associations for 1986-87.

DEFENCE

Royal Aircraft Establishment, Oakhanger

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any developments are planned at the Royal Aircraft Establishment, Oakhanger.

Mr. Lee: Yes. We have approved a joint Anglo-American project to establish a further tracking dish at Oakhanger. The purpose of this development is to enhance further the existing co-operation between ourselves and the United States in the field of satellite communications. An application for planning clearance will be made shortly.

Service Men's Children (Education)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated expenditure in this financial year on the education of children of service men whose schooling is either paid for or subsidised by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the information given in table 6.12 of the "Statement on Defence Estimates 1985-86". About one third of the total expenditure on education, as shown, is assessed to be in respect of service children's education authority schools. About £85 million in 1985-86 is expected to be spent on education allowances and associated costs.

Westland Helicopters

Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value of orders placed by Her Majesty's Government for products or supplies from Westland Helicopters between January 1977 and February 1985.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The total value of orders placed by Her Majesty's Government for products or supplies (including orders for repair and overhaul) from Westland Helicopters between January 1977 and February 1985 was about £750 million.

Royal Dockyards (Privatisation)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the work at the general naval stores based in Portsmouth will be lost by the privatisation of the dockyards at Devonport and Rosyth.

Mr. Lee: Many factors affect the work load of the naval stores organisation at Portsmouth. It is not expected that the introduction of commercial management into the dockyards at Devonport and Rosyth will have a significant impact on this work load.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has made any assessment of the implications for employment in the Portsmouth area of the proposed privatisation of the dockyards at Devonport and Rosyth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Civilian Pay and Records Office Department, Portsmouth

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the projected increase in staff at the civilian pay and records office Department in Portsmouth still holds valid.

Mr. Lee: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Nimrod Advanced Early Warning Project

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current position and available options on the Nimrod advanced early warning project.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We have completed our technical evaluation of the options for the further development of the Nimrod AEW mission system avionics to an acceptable standard of operation. We are currently evaluating GEC Avionics' proposals to cover this work.

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the cost to the Government of cancellation of the Nimrod advanced early warning project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We are currently evaluating GEC Avionics' proposals for the completion of the Nimrod AEW mission system avionics to an acceptable standard of operation. In the event of cancellation the question of cancellation charges would be a matter for negotiation with the contractors. I cannot say in advance of such negotiations what those charges might be.

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what negotiations he has had with (a) United Kingdom and (b) foreign aircraft manufacturers about alternatives to the Nimrod advanced early warning system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: None.

South Africa

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any members of the Parachute regiment have visited South Africa to take part in training or to observe South African security force operations, or for any other purposes; whether members of any other units of Her Majesty's armed forces have visited South Africa for similar reasons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Since the present Government took office, no members of Her Majesty's armed forces have visited South Africa to take part in training or to observe South African security force operations. Members of the armed forces occasionally pass through South Africa on the way to neighbouring countries, and may make private visits to the country unconnected with their duties.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether South African service men have visited Great Britain to take part in military training or the instruction of British service men; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: No South African service men have been given military training in the United Kingdom or given instruction to British service men since 1976.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether members of the South African security services have been permitted to visit Northern Ireland to observe or take part in training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: No.

Meteorological Office

Mr. Wiggin asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations with interested parties he proposes to hold before making decisions on the Sharp-Hansford report on the Meteorological Office.

Mr. Lee: Consultations with interested parties will take place as appropriate before recommendations of the report are implemented.

Mr. Wiggin asked the Secretary of State for Defence to which outside individuals or bodies he has already circulated copies of the Sharp-Hansford report on the Meteorological Office.

Mr. Lee: Messrs Sharp-Hansford's inquiries included consultation with my Department, Her Majesty's Treasury, the Department of Transport, the Civil Aviation Authority and the British Aviation Standing Conference, as well as the Meteorological Office itself. Copies of the final report have been sent by my Department to these bodies as part of the decision-making process.

Mr. Wiggin asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be in a position to announce decisions on the recommendations of the Sharp-Hansford report on the Meteorological Office.

Mr. Lee: I hope to be in a position to announce decisions early next year.

Mr. Wiggin asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Sharp-Hansford report on the Meteorological Office was submitted to him.

Mr. Lee: On 12 August 1985.

Procurement Contracts and Projects

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which current procurement contracts and projects have not been completed within the due period;

(2) with which contractors his Department is negotiating in respect of overdue procurement contracts and projects;

(3) if he will list the current procurement projects and contracts whose terms and conditions he is reviewing.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall answer shortly.

BARPLAN

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list those groups of ports in the United Kingdom for which there exist contingency plans analogous to the one contained in BARPLAN for Barry, Cardiff and Newport;

(2) whether the BARPLAN document takes into account the transition-to-war measures contained in the 1983 United States — United Kingdom lines of communication agreement;

(3) if he will describe the status of the BARPLAN document sent to certain officers working for South Glamorgan and Gwent county councils by the Navy Flag Officer, Plymouth.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1985, c. 279]: The document referred to is a classified document, relating to contingency plans for the defence of certain ports in a time of crisis or war. It would not be in the public interest to comment on the details of such plans or to list all locations for which such contingency plans exist.

ENVIRONMENT

Control of Pollution (Report)

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has now completed his consideration of the report of the joint review committee on the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government have completed their consideration of the report of the joint committee on the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations. They have taken into account comments received on the report and in particular those expressed in the sixth report of the Select Committee on Science and Technology in another place. They have also carefully considered the views of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution. I am happy to say that the conclusions reached on the principal issues are broadly in line with the commission's approach.

The Committee's report raises important issues not only on the control of those hazardous wastes ranking as "special", but on the control of industrial and commercial waste generally. The Government accept its central conclusion, which is also reflected in the first report of the Hazardous Waste Inspectorate, that action is needed to ensure the more consistent and effective application of existing controls over disposals. Meetings have already taken place with representatives of both local authority associations and industry to discuss the immediate action needed by all concerned.

But action to improve the application of the law as it stands will not be enough. We also have to improve the framework of control while avoiding the creation of new claims on resources. The Government propose therefore to bring forward amendments to the regulations, on the lines recommended, which will ensure that these cover all substances representing a significant risk to human life. In addition, we shall want to consider extending these to cover particular substances, which while not dangerous to human life in the terms defined, are of substantial concern to the public on wide environmental grounds. I propose to invite the local authority associations and industry to join in setting up a small expert group which will advise on the specific changes needed and keep the scope and application of the regulations under regular review. Any changes will also be the subject of wider consultation with environmental organisations.

The Government also accept the need to strengthen and supplement the wider framework of control over disposal of industrial and commercial waste. First, it is proposed to enhance the responsibilities of producers of waste so that they have a general obligation to take all reasonable steps open to them to secure its satisfactory disposal. It is right that all producers of waste who hand it over to others for disposal should be expected to show the same concern for its proper handling that responsibly minded producers already display

Secondly, it is proposed to extend the powers of the licensing authorities for operators of heavy goods vehicles so that they can take into account offences under the Control of Pollution Act, for example, illicit dumping, when exercising their functions of granting or reviewing licences. Similarly, we propose to extend the powers of local authorities so that they can take into account previous relevant offences when deciding applications for site licences. Thirdly, it is proposed to strengthen the powers of local authorities to secure proper aftercare of waste disposal sites and to facilitate prosecution for breaches of licence conditions.

There remain two important issues on which there have been conflicting representations; whether all producers of industrial and commercial waste should be required to register with waste disposal authorities and whether all transporters and other handlers of such waste should be licensable by them.

The Government are not convinced that a requirement for registration of producers would be justified. It would be expensive both for industry and authorities and it is considered that it would not significantly improve enforcement of controls. It is nevertheless proposed to review the information needs and sources of authorities and I am accordingly inviting the local authority associations to join me in establishing a small working party to carry out this review in consultation with industrial interests.

It is also accepted that further steps are needed to curtail illicit disposal operations. The Government do not believe that it would be justifiable to introduce a system of licensing for all waste handlers. This could impose significant costs, and would create a confusion of jurisdiction with the arrangements for licensing operators of heavy goods vehicles. They do, however, consider it right to legislate for a simpler requirement that all handlers of waste should have to register with each waste disposal authority in which they have an operating centre. I propose to seek the views of the local authority associations and bodies representing industry on the details of such a scheme.

All these changes require primary legislation and proposals for it will be brought forward at the earliest suitable opportunity. The opportunity will be taken also to make certain other amendments of the law, principally to put the Hazardous Waste Inspectorate on a statutory footing and to empower waste disposal authorities to charge costs of control of licensed waste disposers. This will ensure proper funding of the measures of control needed and will be consistent with the polluter pays principle.

I believe that the proposals which I have announced today together with our current initiative to get better standards of operational practice and enforcement, will make a substantial and lasting contribution to the more effective control over waste disposal and to the protection of the environment.

ENVIRONMENT

Inner Cities (Nursery Provision)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to encourage extra nursery provision in those inner city areas, such as the London borough of Newham, with an above average number of one-parent families.

Sir George Young: Individual authorities are responsible for determining the balance of their expenditure within and between services, in the light of their own priorities and their judgment of local needs. The education component of each local authority's grant related expenditure assessment, which influences an authority's total block grant entitlement, includes an allowance for the additional costs of educating children with special needs arising from their social or economic backgrounds. Relevant factors include the number of children who were born, or live in households whose head was born outside the UK, Ireland, USA and Old Commonwealth; those in poor housing conditions; those in large or in one-parent families; those from low socio-economic groups; and those from families receiving supplementary benefit. These factors are taken into account at nursery, as well as primary and secondary level, reflecting the policy of the Government to concentrate nursery provision in areas of social need.

The Government also assist nursery provision in inner city areas through the urban programme. The total value of nursery projects approved under the UP for 1984-85 was £12·6 million.

Dog Licence

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to announce a decision on the future of the dog licence.

Mrs. Rumbold: As soon as possible.

Water Industry

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to include in any measure to implement privatisation of the water industry a requirement that all meetings shall be held in public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The question does not arise at this stage.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue a general direction to regional water authorities to hold their meetings as if they were covered by the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1959.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Common Land (Access Rights)

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has plans to introduce further legislation to clarify the position in relation to rights of access to common land and its management.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend will consider the situation in the light of the report of the Common Land Forum, which is expected to be presented to the Countryside Commission in March 1986.

Business Rate

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to consult in the near future representatives of non-domestic ratepayers concerning a uniform business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We shall be consulting all those concerned with the future of the non-domestic rate after we publish our consultative document on this, and the other aspects of local government finance, in the new year.

Cement Industry

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has on the current maximum production capacity of the United Kingdom cement industry;

(2) what information he has on the current percentage of capacity in use in the United Kingdom cement industry;

(3) what information he has on the current production for home consumption of the United Kingdom cement industry;

(4) what information he has on the current production for export of the United Kingdom cement industry.

Sir George Young: The capacity of the United Kingdom cement manufacturing industry is approximately 15·8 million tonnes pa. Some 85 per cent. of this capacity is currently in use. Out of the total production of 13,195,849 tonnes in the year 1 October 1984 to 30 September 1985, 115,438 tonnes were exported.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state, at 1985 prices, the total amount of rate support grant for local authorities in North Yorkshire, South Yorkshire, West Yorkshire and Humberside for each year from 1979-80 to 1985-86 inclusive.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) on Tuesday 3 December 1985, at column 172.

Housing Investment Programme Allocations

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide, at 1985 prices, the total amount of housing investment programme allocations for local authorities in North Yorkshire, South Yorkshire, West Yorkshire and Humberside for 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Sir George Young: The total housing investment programme allocations for local authorities in North Yorkshire, South Yorkshire, West Yorkshire and Humberside for the years 1979-80 to 1985-86 are as follows. Since 1981-82 local authorities have been able to add to their spending power by drawing on the prescribed proportion of their housing capital receipts.

	£ thousands 1985-86 prices
1979-80	345,048
1980-81	256,101
1981-82	206,331
1982-83	246,911
1983-84	231,392
1984-85	176,289
1985-86	139,521

Housing Expenditure (Nottingham)

Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the amount spent by Nottingham city council on capital expenditure (housing) for 1984-85 and 1985-86 (first six months).

Sir George Young: Nottingham city council's capital expenditure on housing for 1984-85 was £23·384 million and for the first six months of 1985-86 was £10·742 million.

Special Protection Areas

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will specify the nature of the proposed development threatening those eight sites identified as meriting designation as special protection areas under directive 79/409, which the Nature Conservancy Council considers to be at risk.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that the proposed or approved developments for the eight sites are as follows:

Caenlochan—downhill ski development
Drumochter Hills—downhill ski development
Firth of Forth—land reclamation
Islay—peat extraction
Loch Ken—recreational boating
Teesmouth Flats & Marshes—land reclamation
Humber Flats—reclamation for industrial development
Stour/Orwell Estuary—Felixstowe dock expansion

Local Authority Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total of (a) gross and (b) net capital expenditure by local authorities at (i) plan and (ii) estimated out-turn in each year from 1981-82 and 1986-87.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [pursuant to his reply, 9 December 1985]: The following table gives the information requested for the main cash limit on local authority capital expenditure, DOE/LAI. The outturn figures for 1981-82 to 1984-85 are as reported by local authorities. The position for 1985-86 is very uncertain. Latest projections on the basis of the second quarter expenditure returns suggest an overspend against the cash limit of about £¾ billion. Any eventual overspend would be met from the public expenditure reserve. It would be most unwelcome but, on the basis of current forecasts of other claims on the reserve, it is expected that it can be contained within the estimated outturn for the planning total shown in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement.

Local Authority Capital Expenditure Against DOE/LAI: England

	Plan*		Outturn*
	Gross	Net	Gross	Net
1981-82	4,007	3,139	3,945	2,610
1982-83	4,541	3,385	4,750	2,515
1983-84	4,729	2,935	5,580	3,350
1984-85†	4,438	2,453	5,581	3,394
1985-86†	4,031	1,911	‡(4,764)	‡(2,676)
1986-87†	4,329	2,366

* Net plan is the DOE/LAI cash limit. Gross plan is net plan plus the estimate of recipts underlying gross provision.

† The figures for 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 exclude local authority capital expenditure on urban aid which is included in the DOE/LAI cash limit for these years with provision of £283 million, £289 million, and £261 million. Estimated outturn in 1984-85 was £260 million.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Solicitor-General (Meeting)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the circumstances and purpose of the Solicitor-General's meeting on 2 December with Mr. Boyd, of counsel, and others.

The Solicitor-General: The meeting was requested on 2 December by the assistant solicitor instructing counsel (Mr. Boyd) on behalf of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise for the prosecution in the case of Peljeric and Ropret at the Crown court, Reading. It took place at 7 pm in the Attorney-General's room at the House of Commons.

The purpose was to acquaint me with the fact that the trial judge had that day been requested on behalf of the defendants to order that the name of an alleged informant in the case be disclosed in open court; to inform me of the importance and value of informers to the investigative functions of the Customs and Excise regarding controlled drugs; and to seek my approval for the withdrawal of the prosecution in the event that the judge acceded to the defence request. Mr. M. Jones, the investigating officer in charge of the case, was present. Counsel, whether for the prosecution or the defence, and representatives of any Government Department, are entitled at any stage of a criminal trial in which they are participating to seek to consult a Law Officer of the Crown on any matter affecting them which they believe gives rise to a serious question concerning the public interest or their professional duty. The request for the meeting which took place on 2 December was made in accordance with the standard practice of the solicitor to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in such circumstances.

On learning that a substantial proportion of the drugs seized each year by the Customs and Excise is found through informers, and of the great importance of protecting the identity of such informers, I gave advice as to the submission that might be made to the learned judge the next day by Mr. Boyd, and gave my approval to the withdrawal of the prosecution in the event that disclosure of the name was ordered.

It is important to note that, while it is the general rule that the courts shall protect the identity of informers, exceptionally circumstances can exist which may require the disclosure of identity to be ordered. Whether that is so in a particular case is a matter for the trial judge to determine in accordance with principles established by law. In a case where disclosure is ordered it is for the prosecutor to decide whether or not to proceed further with the prosecution.

Judiciary (Freemasonry)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor will make it his policy to require a declaration of interest by judges and justices of the peace as to whether they are masons.

The Solicitor-General: No. This would be a very dangerous infraction of personal privacy and personal freedom, and there is no evidence to justify the discrimination between freemasonry and other forms of voluntary association. In the case of justices of the peace, they are also free to join political associations and campaigning bodies so long as they remain within the law, behave in a manner not calculated or bring the magistracy into disrepute and disqualify themselves from sitting in cases in which it might reasonably be supposed that they were emotionally or personally involved.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Attorney-General if he will issue instructions to the Crown Prosecution Service that prosecuting counsel shall not without the consent of defence counsel, conduct a conference with a police officer involved in the trial whilst the officer is under oath as a witness; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: No. Counsel who conduct prosecutions on behalf of the Crown Prosecution Service will be members of an independent profession in private practice. The question raised by the hon. and learned Member relates to a matter of professional conduct and etiquette and is a matter for direction by the professional conduct committee of the Bar Council and not by the Crown Prosecution Service. The relevant principles are currently set out in paragraph 142 and annex 12 of the Code of Conduct for the Bar of England and Wales (3rd Edition).

Rony Kevin Dunbar (Trial)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Attorney-General if the trial of Rony Kevin Dunbar at Knightsbridge crown court between 5 and 8 August, indictment No. 851029, was held wholly or partly in camera; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: During the trial referred to by the hon. and learned Member, an application was made by counsel for the defendant that evidence on the defendant's behalf should be received in camera, and the trial judge acceded to this application.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Airports Authority

Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the British Airports Authority will be published.

Mr. Howard: The report is published today.

The Monopolies and Mergers Commission was asked to investigate the efficiency and costs and standard of service of the commercial activities of the British Airports Authority. Its report concludes that the authority has shown a generally satisfactory standard of performance although there is room for improvement.

In the course of its inquiries the commission made a detailed study of the various elements of the authority's commercial activities including concessions, licences, leases, rents and property and the implications for competition and quality of service. The commission recognises that the authority is continually faced with the need to decide between competing demands for limited facilities and support the view expressed by the chairman of the authority, who told it that the duty to provide proper operation facilities for passengers and cargo shippers must take precedence over commercial activities. The commission says that in practice an airport constitutes a closed market in which monopolistic exploitation would be practicable and that such general considerations must be borne in mind in any attempt to assess how well—or badly — the authority carries on its commercial activities.

The commission recommends an increase in the size of the board to allow a member with retailing experience to be appointed, and that the board should pay a more active role in ensuring that when decisions on the provision and allocation of space at new and redeveloped terminals are needed a full range of feasible commercial possibilities is considered.

The commission recommends that planning guidelines be updated more frequently, that more challenging targets for commercial performance and budgets be set and notes the authority's awareness of deficiencies in the property mangement information systems.

The Commission also recommends that a distinction continue to be drawn in the authority's accounts between air traffic operations and commercial activities. Other recommendations concern regular tendering for concessions, fuel arrangements at Gatwick, and quality of service and performance indicators.

The commission explains that competition at point of sale is limited by the lack of space at terminals, but considers that even where competition would be possible the authority's policy sometimes restricts or prevents it. While the authority believes that it has an obligation to protect concessionaires' interests, it also believes that in some areas consumer choice is better secured through a variety of products for sale than through duplication of suppliers and tries to ensure by price regulation and other controls over concessionaires that customers get value for money. The commission did not find these arrangements fully effective and offered several recommendations to increase competition.

As is usual in such references, the commission was asked to consider whether the authority is pursuing a course of conduct contrary to the public interest. It concludes that while there is scope for improvement in the service provided by the authority in its commercial activities, it is not, in relation to those activities, pursuing a course of conduct which operates against the public interest. In a note of dissent one commission member found that the attitude of the BAA in effectively restricting or preventing competition to its concessionaires operated against the public interest and that a partial remedy would be for the authority to be obliged to implement the relevant recommendations in the report.

While the report necessarily deals with the present position at BAA airports, the commission notes that in the context of the White Paper "Airports Policy" it will be necessary for the authority's successor to assess the extent to which commercial opportunities may reasonably be pursued.

The authority will be producing its preliminary response to the commission's findings in three to four months and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will make a statement on this response at that time.

Grants (Paisley)

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many industrial and commercial schemes in Paisley, North have received financial assistance from his Department during the current financial year.

Mr. Peter Morrison: During the current financial year (from 1 April—30 November 1985) 39 offers totalling £1,689,000 have been made to companies in Paisley, North under the new regional development grants scheme or regional selective assistance.

I am afraid that information relating to other forms of assistance are not available on a constituency basis.

Motor Car Production

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the relative hours of labour required to produce a motor car in the United Kingdom, the Federal Republic of Germany and Japan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: There are no industry-wide comparisons available even in the United Kingdom.

Insurance Companies

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to prohibit the practice of insurance companies offering an immediate cash settlement of a claim in return for a reduction in that claim; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have no plans to introduce such legislation.

Medicines (Patents)

Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations he has had advocating measures to protect patents for new medicines; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to introduce measures to protect patents for new medicines.

Mr. Pattie: I have received representations from individual pharmaceutical companies and the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry for repeal of the licences of right provisions contained in the 1977 Patents Act affecting patents granted under the previous 1949 Act and for extension of the present 20-year patent term. On the licences of right issue, I am awaiting further data relevant to the pharmaceutical industry's case from the ABPI and the Department of Health and Social Security. With regard to extension of patent term, Community members resolved in 1975 to bring their national patent laws into conformity, as far as practicable, with provisions of the European patent convention. This was done in the United Kingdom by the Patents Act 1977, which provided inter alia for the extension of patent terms from 16 to 20 years in line with the European patent convention. There are no immediate plans for common action with other Community states to extend the term further. However, I am considering whether a United Kingdom initiative might be appropriate.

Systime plc

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he anticipates a loss to public funds arising from the proposed sale of the Millshaw Park factory of Systime plc.

Mr. Butcher: It is difficult at this stage to anticipate the effect on Systime of the proposed sale and therefore its implications for public funds.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further grant recoveries he anticipates making from Systime plc in addition to those shown in Systime's recent accounts.

Mr. Butcher: Detailed information about grants is a matter of commercial confidentiality between the Department and companies involved. I am therefore unable to comment on individual cases.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether Control Data Corporation of the United States of America gave an undertaking to his Department or to the British Technology Group to make available a sum of £20 million for Systime plc in spring 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: There is no question of CDC having given any undertaking in the terms suggested.

Book Piracy

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the meeting between the Minister of State for Industry and the hon. Member for Christchurch, together with a delegation from the Publishers' Association, concerning the problem of book piracy and its effects on the exports of British publishers.

Mr. Pattie: The Government have noted with concern, representations made at the meeting about the severe effects of book piracy in overseas markets. I stressed that we would continue to support the efforts of all sectors of industry to combat this sort of problem by pressing for comprehensive and enforceable copyright law in countries which lack it, and by participating in international initiatives against piracy and counterfeiting, for example, within the general agreement on tariffs and trade, the World Intellectual Property Organisation, and the European Community.

I am concerned that our support should be as effective as possible and we shall be looking at ways in which it might be made more so. Industry can help by keeping us well-informed about the nature and scale of the problem and its effect on United Kingdom exports, and I was grateful for the evidence provided at the meeting.

Regional Aid

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list, at 1985 prices, the amount of regional grants paid to Yorkshire and Humberside under (a) section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 and (b) under Part II of the Industrial Development Act 1982 for the financial years 1979-80 to 1983-84 inclusive;

(2) if he will estimate the amount of regional assistance to be allocated to Yorkshire and Humberside during the 1985-86 financial year.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will publish a table showing the total amount of money paid to Britain in European regional development fund grants in each year from 1979 to the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will list the figures (a) in cash terms, (b) in real terms at 1985 prices and (c) as a proportion of the total European Economic Community budget;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the ratio of European regional development fund payments to total regional policy expenditure for each year from 1979 to the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will estimate the ratios for the years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The available information is given in the following table:

£m

Year	ERDF Payments to UK—Actual	ERDF Payments to UK at 1985 prices	ERDF Payments to UK as percentage of total payments from European Community Budget
1979	107.251	178.10	1.00
1980	136.423	188.946	1.65
1981	143.161	177.192	1.64
1982	119.460	137.647	1.24
1983	176.816	193.896	1.41
1984	214.930	225.856	—
1979-1984	924.354

Footnotes:

1. Current price expenditure has been converted to 1985 prices by use of an estimated GDP deflator.
2. Figures of payments from the EEC budget in 1984 as certified by the Court of Auditors are not yet available.

Expenditure in Great Britain on regional development grant and regional selective assistance in the financial years 1979-80 to 1984-85 totalled £3,536 million in Great Britain and on standard capital grant and regional selective assistance in Northern Ireland for the same period £871 million. The majority of receipts from the European regional development fund were in respect of capital investments in infrastructure, but there is no definition of "regional policy expenditure" to form the basis of the other table requested.

Gas Cookers (Installation)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce legislation requiring all gas cookers to be installed with flues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

No. The Gas Safety (Intallation and Use) Regulations 1984 already require gas installers to ensure that piped gas appliances can be used without endangering persons or property. Most gas cooking appliances are designed not to need flues when properly installed.

SCOTLAND

Expenditure Plans

Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report details of his spending plans for 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Younger: Total expenditure on the programmes within my responsiblity will by £7,565 million in 1986-87, £7,410 million in 1987-88 and £7,430 million in 1988-89. The figure of £7,565 million which I have now provided for 1986-87 is £225 million higher than the figure for that year published in the 1985 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9428) and £407 million—5·7 per cent.—higher than the planned figure for the current year. Outturn for 1985-86 is currently expected to be about £7,356 million. That excess over provision largely reflects continued revenue spending by local authorities above the levels provided for. The outturn figure is likely to change as firmer information becomes available.

The lower totals in 1987-88 and 1988-89 are largely due to the completion of the Torness nuclear power station which allows the South of Scotland Electricity Board's external financing limit to be substantially reduced in each year. In addition, as in England and Wales, no decision has been taken on provision for local authority current expenditure for 1987-88 and 1988-89. The figures for those years included in the programme totals therefore simply repeat those for 1986-87. They will be reconsidered during next year's public expenditure survey.

As I announced on 3 December, I will shortly be completing my consultations with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities about the rate support grant settlement for 1986-87 and will then lay before the House the relevant rate support grant order. Subject to those consultations, the order will provide for a total relevant expenditure of £3,574·6 million and aggregate Exchequer grant of £2,005 million. A further addition will be made to both of these figures to take into account the transfer of financial responsibility for list D schools to local authorities as from 1 April 1986.

The proposed provision for relevant expenditure is, excluding loans charges, interest receipts and the list D schools transfer, 3·9 per cent. above the figure for 1985-86 and £59 million above the provision in the White Paper (Cmnd. 9428).

I thought it right to continue the revaluation rebates scheme for domestic and commercial ratepayers although relief next year will be 75 per cent. of the amounts presently available. The cost of the relief in 1986-87 will be about £20 million part of which will be provided by a transfer of resources from my block.

The figures for each of the services within my responsibility are given in the table; the following particular points should be noted:

Agriculture and Fisheries

The totals reflect the higher rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances announced on 28 November which raise the total paid through these allowances from £38 million to £43 million in a full year. The 1985-86 outturn includes £7·7 million for the emergency weather aid announced at the same time. Provision is also made for the purchase of an offshore aerial surveillance aircraft by DAFS in 1986-87.

Industry

Provision for 1986-87 will be about 8 per cent. more than provision for the current years in Cmnd. 9428. As anticipated in that White Paper, provision will decline in 1987-88 to reflect the end of the period in which payments under the former regional development grant (RDG) arrangements are being made alongside payments under the revised RDG arrangements introduced in November 1984. After this transitional adjustment, provision is planned to increase again in 1988-89. Provision for grant-in-aid in respect of net expenditure by the SDA and HIDB will continue at broadly the same level as in the current year to maintain the important work of these bodies.

Transport

The provision for transport in 1986-87 will be about £14 million more than was planned for the current year after taking account of technical adjustments. Further progress will be made on important trunk road bypasses, dual carriageways and other improvements. Strategic routes covered will include the A75 to Stranraer and main roads linking Aberdeen to Dundee and Inverness. The Government will also continue to honour their commitment to subsidise certain shipping and civil aviation services.

Housing

In 1986-87 total net provision for housing will be £645 million, an increase of £47 million over Cmnd. 9428 provision for the current year. Further growth in the net housing baseline is planned for future years with total net provision being set at £670 million for 1987-88 rising to £700 million in 1988-89. It remains my aim to concentrate resources on capital investment. Net capital expenditure will be about 64·4 per cent. of the total planned provision for the current year. I intend that this proportion should rise still further in later years. Once investment financed by net capital receipts is taken into account the programme will allow for gross capital investment next year of £636 million, an increase of about £55 million over the current year. This additional provision will enable local authorities to meet more of the needs for renovation and repair of their own stock. It will also allow some increase in the local authority non-HRA allocations for improvement grants to the private sector. As a consequence of concentrating the increased resources in the local authority sector, the gross capital expenditure provision for the other housing agencies next year will be broadly the same in cash terms as that allowed for this year.

Other Environmental Services

Provision for 1986-87 will be about £32 million higher than provision for the current year. Much of the increase relates to local authority expenditure but increased priority is also being given to capital expenditure on water and sewerage services, which is planned to increase by almost 20 per cent. over the current level during the survey period. This underlines the Government's commitment to the improvement, maintenance and renewal of the fabric of important infrastructure services.

Law, Order and Protective Services

The Government remain firmly committed to making adequate provision for the maintenance of law and order. My expenditure plans will meet the cost of the police service and permit a modest increase in police manpower to meet priority requirements. They allow also for the number of prison service officers to be increased by a further 125 over the next three years mainly to accommodate the opening of a new prison at Shotts.

Education

The bulk of this programme consists of local authority current expenditure. For the remaining elements which are within my direct control my highest priority remains the commitment I announced last year to increase the availability of engineering and IT courses within higher education. I have also been able to increase provision for higher education by some £10 million in 1986-87. This will help to meet costs associated with the transfer of Napier college and Glasgow college of technology to central institution status, including the acquisition of Craiglockhart for Napier college and to maintain access to higher education through students awards.

Arts and Libraries

In order to enable the trustees to develop the Royal Museum of Scotland I have made additional funds available to them for new posts and other improvements. In addition to the provision for this programme within my block I have made £600,000 available in each year to my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts to enable the Scottish Arts Council to maintain its partnership with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities over the funding of the Scottish national companies following changes in local government organisations.

Health

The Health Service in Scotland remains a high priority. I plan to increase cash provision for 1986-87 to £2,080 million, over £120 million more than this year's expected level of spending. Over the forthcoming three years to 1988-89 my plans are to increase spending on the NHS by over £300 million, or 15 per cent.

From the extra cash for 1986-87, I am setting aside £93 million for hospitals and community health services, to increase cash provision for this main programme by 6·8 per cent. For the following two years allocations to this programme are to increase by 1 per cent. more than the level of forecast inflation for each year. Over the three years to 1988-89 planned expenditure on hospital services and community health is therefore set to increase by £220 million or 16 per cent. Health boards will also be able to retain resources released within their own budgets by cost improvements and efficiency measures.

The resources set aside for the family practitioner services provide for the expected rise in public demand for these services.

The decisions I have taken reflect the Government's determination to keep public expenditure under firm control while ensuring that adequate resources are available for worthwhile expenditure. The Scottish block arrangements have again ensured that my programme receives its fair share of resources and have provided me with the flexibility to take Scotland's needs and circumstances properly into account.

Hip Replacement Operations

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the average waiting time in each health board area for the hip replacement operation.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 12 July 1985 at column 244.

Citizens Band Radio Equipment (Misuse)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the nature and place of all convictions in Scotland for offences relating to the misuse of citizens band radio equipment for the first nine months of 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: The offences for which information is requested cannot be separately identified in the classification of crimes and offences used by the Scottish Home and Health Department.

Kinnell Estate, Killin

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the approval by the Forestry Commission for planting grant of an application in respect of 1,000 acres of Kinnell estate, Killin, which had previously been turned down by the regional advisory committee of the commission.

Mr. John MacKay: During 1983 and the early part of 1984 the Forestry Commission considered two applications for grant aid under the forestry grant scheme for planting part of the hill land of Acharn farm on the Kinnell estate. The first of these applications was turned down on the grounds that the proposed planting would leave an unviable hill sheep farm. However, a subsequent sale of the Kinnell estate resulted in the Acharn farm buildings and some lower land passing into a different ownership from that of the hill land. Because of this change of circumstance, the continuing viability of the farm was no longer a key issue when the new owner of the hill land submitted his planting proposals, and these were approved for grant aid.

Cumbernauld and Kilsyth

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the buildings in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth which have been listed as being of architectural or historic interest.

Mr. Ancram: I am arranging to send the hon. Member the information he seeks.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many acres of land available for development in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth are owned by (a) Cumbernauld and Kilsyth district council and (b) Cumbernauld development corporation.

Mr. Ancram: Information on the amount of land available for development owned by district councils is not held centrally and should be sought from the district council. Cumbernauld development corporation owns approximately 1,100 acres of land available for development, permission for development on about 290 acres of which has been granted under section 6 of the New Towns (Scotland) Act 1968.

Inner City Regeneration

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report current programmes funded by his Department for inner city regeneration in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: A wide range of programmes contribute to our objective of inner city regeneration. The main ones are as follows:

(a) the urban programme provides 75 per cent. grant support to local authority and voluntary projects which tackle multiple deprivation in urban areas;

(b) the local enterprise grants for urban projects (LEG-UP) scheme administered by the Scottish Development Agency provides funding to lever desirable private sector investment into urban areas;

(c) in addition, the Scottish Development Agency has wide ranging powers to tackle the economic and environmental aspects of urban renewal. Specifically, it has nine local economic initiatives under way which are intended to regenerate the local urban economy and environment;

(d) housing associations (through the Housing Corporation) and the Scottish Special Housing Association contribute to urban regeneration through the rehabilitation and development of urban housing;

(e) regional assistance programmes (regional development grant and regional selective assistance) provide funding to support new economic activity in assisted areas.

In addition, many Government programmes assist urban areas, although not specifically targeted on them.

The Government remain committed to tackling the problems of urban decay and disadvantage through determined focusing of a wide range of resources, by central and local government, other agencies and the voluntary and private sectors.

Steel Industry

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with Church representatives on the future of the steel industry in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: I have received a number of written representations from the Churches, but they have not asked to meet me.

Teachers' Pay (Dispute)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with Church leaders on the teachers' pay dispute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend met representatives of the Churches on 29 November. He was interested to hear the Churches' views on the dispute and undertook to consider carefully any further initiatives which might help to bring an end to it. He still firmly believes, however, that pay cannot be considered in isolation from the duties for which teachers are paid and that the best way of moving forward is for negotiations to begin between teachers and their employers on both salaries and conditions of service.

Herring Fishing

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what controls applied to Scottish and Norwegian fishermen, respectively, in the herring fishery in the north and central North sea during 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: Scottish fishermen have been permitted to fish only in the European Community zone of the northern and central North sea this year. Their activities have been regulated by the relevant Community quota, conservation, control and marketing regulations. In addition, under United Kingdom fisheries legislation vessels over 10 m long require a North sea herring licence.

Norwegian herring fishermen also fished only in their own zone in 1985 and so were subject only to their domestic controls which include catch limits and conservation measures.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the European Commission's proposal that 40 per cent. of the total allowable catch of herring from the northern and central sector of the North sea should be allocated to Norway for 1986.

Mr. John MacKay: We have made clear to the Commission that we are not wholly satisfied with the agreement negotiated with Norway, and have reserved our position on it. The Fisheries Council will consider the matter on 16 December.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average percentage share of the herring fishing in the northern and central sector of the North sea that was taken by Norway in the 10 years immediately before the closure of that fishery.

Mr. John MacKay: Papers submitted to the International Council for the exploration of the sea herring assessment working group indicate that Norwegian catches of herring from the North sea in the period from 1967 to 1976 were about 36 per cent. by weight of the total catch by fishermen from Norway and European Community countries.

Crofting Townships Roads Programmes

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why no new applications will be accepted by him in respect of crofting townships roads programmes; why no applications already lodged under the programme will be approved; what is the total estimated cost of the townships road unapproved programme submitted by the Highlands regional council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: In 1983 the five local authorities concerned were advised that the crofting township roads scheme would end at 31 March 1987; that new applications would be accepted up to 30 September 1986; and that total funds available for the scheme would be about £350,000 per annum. Since then the number of applications, and the cost of the projects, have both risen faster than anticipated. Outstanding grant approvals will absorb all the available funds and, to allow for grant on these projects to be paid in full before the scheme ends, it has been decided that no further applications can be approved. The estimated total cost of projects submitted by Highland regional council which will not now qualify for approval under the scheme is £363,420.

Ewe Premium

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to seek to ensure that the ewe premium will be payable on untupped gimmers.

Mr. John MacKay: In accordance with European Community legislation sheep annual premium is payable only on female sheep which have been put to the tup for the first time or which have lambed at least once. The Government are continuing to press in the Council of Ministers for agreement that untupped gimmers should also be eligible for premium.

Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1985

Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to bring into force section 35 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1985.

Mr. Younger: I have made an order bringing this section, which contains provisions as to the rights of persons detained or arrested in respect of terrorism, into force on 1 January 1986.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Veterinary Medicine

78. Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to receive from the University Grants Committee its proposals for the reorganisation of the teaching of veterinary medicine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The University Grants Committee and the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons have set up a joint working party to consider the organisation of the training of veterinary medicine in the light of the report of the Manpower Review of the Veterinary Profession in the United Kingdom, which was published in August; it is not expected to report for several months.

University Grants

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the additional £25 million which he has announced for increases in university grants takes into account the projected increase in student numbers.

Mr. Chris Patten: The grants for the universities announced by my right hon. Friend on 12 November, at columns 104-8, take into account the costs arising from the additional students entering universities under the engineering and technology programme.

University Grants Committee

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if moneys granted to the University Grants Committee under the medical subhead are not spent in the financial year in respect of which they were granted, may be spent for other purposes; and how he monitors the use of these resources after allocation.

Mr. Chris Patten: From the current financial year the medical subhead forms part of one major capital subhead for the universities. Moneys allocated for major medical projects are therefore interchangeable with moneys for major non-medical projects. If funds for major capital projects are not spent, part of the underspend can normally be transferred forward to the next financial year under the end-year flexibility arrangements for capital works. Any remaining provision is either returned to the Exchequer or, with Treasury approval, vired to other subheads within the universities' vote. Detailed control of expenditure is a matter for the University Grants Committee, but outturn figures by university are published each year in the Official Report—most recently on 22 October 1985, at columns 111-18.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much has been allocated to the University Grants Committee under the medical subhead; upon what conditions these moneys are granted; and for what purposes they may be allocated by the University Grants Committee.

Mr. Chris Patten: The allocation to the University Grants Committee for the medical subhead A2(2) in the financial year 1985-86 was £12·87 million plus £0·66 million carried forward from the 1984-85 financial year. These moneys are provided to cover the construction and furnishing of teaching facilities for medical and dental schools in teaching hospitals or where the cost is shared with the National Health Service. The money can be used only for projects where the university share is estimated to cost £1 million or more. The selection of individual projects and the control of expenditure are undertaken by the University Grants Committee.

"Better Schools"

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about his proposals for the government of schools following the publication of the document, "Better Schools".

Mr. Chris Patten: The proposals for the reform of school government set out in chapter 9 of "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9469) are aimed at re-invigorating governing bodies as a force for good in the life of individual schools. As announced in the Gracious Speech, the necessary legislation will be introduced this Session.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much has been spent on the assisted places scheme in each local education authority in 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Mr. Dunn: Figures for the school year 1984-85 are not yet available. The information requested for the school year 1983-84 is as follows:

Mr. Christopher Hawkins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the level of parental contributions to the fees of pupils in the assisted places scheme in 1986-87.

Sir Keith Joseph: Subject to the usual consultations and to parliamentary approval, the parental contribution scales will be adjusted upwards for the school year 1986-87 as follows:

General Certificate of Secondary Education

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the preparation of teachers for the new general certificate of secondary education examination courses.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Government funded, national programme of preparation for the GCSE involves all teachers in introductory training seminars during 1986. These seminars will provide a general introduction to the GCSE and its assessment methods, particularly with application to the teacher's own specific subject. As GCSE courses begin, however, and teachers experience the inevitable difficulties associated with turning principles into practice, they will require further help and preparation related to the specific syllabuses that they are following and the assessment and moderation techniques involved. This further in-service training will need to be flexible and offered intermittently during the first two years of the new examination courses. The four examining groups in England are already drawing up plans for this further training and have estimated that their costs will be of the order of £4 million, of which £600,000 will be needed for the preparation of training materials. I have today written to the secretary to the joint council for the GCSE to say that the Department of Education and Science is prepared, subject to the approval of Parliament, to fund the production of these materials by means of a special grant of £600,000 to the Secondary Examinations Council for onward transmission to the examining groups in England.

One half of this sum, £300,000, would be payable in the financial year 1986-87 and the other half in the following year, on receipt of a satisfactory progress report about the first year's activities. The examining groups will each be considering the best means of providing training, based on these new materials, for teachers using their syllabuses. Both the examining groups and the Department are in no doubt of the importance of this further in-service training for the GCSE, which should be of very great help to the teachers concerned.

WALES

South Wales Coalfield (Coal Movements)

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce his decision on section 8 grant applications to facilitate coal movements from the south Wales coalfield.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has decided not to approve the application submitted by Cawoods of Northern Ireland Limited and has so informed the company. No further consideration can now be given to the related applications submitted by the National Coal Board.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local authorities in Wales owning (a) more than 40,000 dwellings, (b) between 20,000 and 30,000 dwellings and (c) between 30,000 and 40,000 dwellings, indicating the number for each authority.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The only local authority in Wales owning more than 20,000 dwellings is Cardiff. (22,800 dwellings).

No authority owns more than 30,000 dwellings.

Domestic Water Rates

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the percentage increase in domestic water rates in each year since 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Freud) on 21 November, at column 281.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total increase in domestic water rates in Wales between 1979 and 1985 in both real and cash terms.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The total increase in the average domestic water bill in Wales between 1979 and 1985 in both real and cash terms is £15·43 and £54·83 respectively.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many fatalities have occurred in the past two years on motorways in Wales; and how many of these accidents occurred at places where lanes have been restricted due to repair work.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: During the two years ending 15 August this year there have been 14 fatalities on the M4 in Wales. One of these fatalities occurred where lanes were restricted due to repair work being carried out.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were the infant mortality rates per 1,000 live births for children (a) under one year, (b) under four weeks, (c) under one week and (d) under 24 hours for each Welsh health authority in 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is given in the table. The asterisked rates are based on less than 20 events and in such cases the apparently large changes from year to year are not statistically significant.

PRIME MINISTER

South East Asia

18. Mr. Michael Morris asked the Prime Minister when next she expects to visit south east Asia.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Falklands War (Cabinet Leaks)

22. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if staff at No. 10 Downing street or at the Cabinet Office have been questioned by the police on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions as to the authenticity of the purported leaks of Falklands War Cabinet deliberations alleged to have been made to Miss Sarah Keays by the then Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, the right hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Parkinson); and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

Iran (Baha'i Community)

23. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to press for a debate at the General Assembly of the United Nations Organisation regarding the plight of the Baha'i community in Iran.

The Prime Minister: The human rights situation in Iran has just been considered by the third committee of the United Nations General Assembly. The United Kingdom voted for the adoption of a resolution on 6 December which expressed concern at allegations of human rights violations in Iran, urged the Government of Iran to respect their international human rights obligations and decided to consider human rights in Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, at its next session.

Chiltern Hundreds

60. Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Prime Minister whether she will recommend to Her Majesty that she create six offices of profit under the Crown by establishing for each of Her Majesty's three Chiltern Hundreds of Stoke, Desborough and Burnham separate posts of steward and bailiff.

The Prime Minister: No. The present two stewardships, of the three Hundreds of Chiltern and the Manor of Northstead, adequately meet the requirements of the House of Commons Disqualification Act 1975, and that of hon. Members.

European Assembly

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement setting out the additional areas of responsibility and powers of consultation which will be available to the European Assembly in consequence of the agreement made in Luxembourg on 2 and 3 December.

The Prime Minister: It was agreed that the European Assembly should be consulted on the Council's initial view of commission proposals for legislation in a limited number of areas (some internal market, technology and environment matters). It would be able, by an absolute majority of its members, to suggest amendments to such proposals. The last word would remain with the Council. The Assembly's assent would be required for new accessions to the Community and for new association agreements with third countries or groups of countries.

Value Added Tax (Luxembourg Summit)

Mr. Grylls asked the Prime Minister whether any decisions were taken at the European Council meeting at Luxembourg on 2 and 3 December on the threshold for value added tax; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No, but I made the United Kingdom's position quite clear to the Commission in the context of our discussions on deregulation. I understand that it will be making new proposals in the near future. The Government will continue to press for member states to have greater flexibility in determining their threshold.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 December.

Mr. Beith asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 December.

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 December.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 December.

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 December.

Mr. Alton asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 December.

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 December.

Mr. Ross asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 December.

Mr. Wallace asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 December.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others, including one with Secretary of State Shultz. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

Government Departments (Efficiency)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Prime Minister what plans she has to increase the efficiency of Government Departments.

The Prime Minister: I and all my colleagues are determined to get better value for every single pound of the taxpayers' money. This means making essential services better and reducing costs.

We are continuing and strengthening the programme of financial management and personnel reforms. With the help of Sir Robin Ibbs, Ministers are setting value for money targets as a means to secure improvements. The Efficiency Unit is currently studying how targets can be best used in departments.

There is a strong programme of efficiency scrutinies being carried out in association with Sir Robin Ibbs and the Efficiency Unit this financial year. The programme so far is as follows:

Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food

A number of further candidates are being discussed with Departments.

I and my ministerial colleagues are determined to keep up the momentum for improving value for money, which we have established so strongly.

Heads of Government (Entertainment Costs)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister what has been the total cost of entertaining foreign heads of Government for each of the past six years.

The Prime Minister: During the past six years the total cost of entertaining foreign Heads of Government has been as follows:

Year (April to March)	Cost at outturn prices £
1979-80	189,238
1980-81	97,183
1981-82	109,576

1983-84	56,183
1984-85	194,787

Prime Ministerial Travel (Aircraft Use)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister on how many occasions since 1979 Ministry of Defence aircraft have been used for Prime Ministerial foreign travel; on how many occasions civil aircraft were used: and what was the cost in each case.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 5 December 1985, c. 325]: I have not used civil aircraft for foreign travel on official business. The costs to the Prime Minister's Office of the use of Ministry of Defence aircraft for foreign travel since 1979 have been:

1. When on security advice I travel by RAF aircraft other than on official business, arrangements are made for a payment to public funds of the equivalent of first class airfare, or where there is no such commercial airfare, the equivalent of the tourist class airfare. These arrangements are similar to those which have applied under previous governments.

2. For the period up to 31 March 1981 Ministry of Defence aircraft were provided on an allied service basis. The costs shown are therefore notional.

3. On a number of occasions other Ministers have accompanied me on the journeys shown. The cost of their travel is borne by their Departments. The costs of flights undertaken during 1985 are estimates pending decisions on recoveries from other Government Departments.

Pensioners Charter

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister if she will publish the latest estimate of the cost of implementing the pensioners' charter of the National Pensioners' Convention, in the manner of the answer of 22 March 1983, Official Report, columns 384-86.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 9 December 1985, c. 421]: Some of the proposals are insufficiently specific for any costings to be made, but the following table sets out the proposals in summary form and the latest available costings:

Proposal	Comment	Additional annual cost to public expenditure £ million
1. Pension of half and one-third gross average earnings for couple and single person respectively.	Cost also includes other linked long-term benefits. The national insurance implications alone (£12,500 million) would increase the Class 1 national insurance contribution by £16·00 a week for male employees on male average earnings of £200 a week.	16,000
2. Six monthly uprating on a permanent basis.	Each 1 per cent. increase in pension and other long-term national insurance benefits brought forward by 6 months would cost £110 million (1985-86).	110
3. Adequate heating allowance covering all fuel.	Examples: (a) The cost of extending the basic rate heating addition to all pensioners on housing benefit would be about	300
	(b) The cost of extending it to all pensioners who are householders would be in the order of	or 500
4. Index-linked Christmas bonus of £20.	Each additional £1 on the bonus costs over £11 million.	110
5. Reducing pension age to 60 and abolition of the earnings rule.	Estimate based on 1983-84 benefit rates. Costs arising longer term. Net costs to central Government funds at least—	*2,600
	Net cost to central Government for abolition of the earnings rule on present pension age around £85 million*	190
6. Adequate death grant.	Estimate for restoring death grant to original value in respect of all deaths—£230.	135
7. Free health.	Unquantifiable.	—
8. Availability of community and personal social services.	Unquantifiable.	—
9. Appropriate accommodation including choice.	Unquantifiable.	—
10. National scheme of free off peak travel on local buses. Concessions for people of pensionable age.	Estimate is the minimum.	400
11. Access to education and leisure facilities.	Unquantifiable.	—

EMPLOYMENT

Skill Shortages

Mr. Golding asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received from the Confederation of British Industry in respect of shortages of skill; what has been his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My ministerial colleagues and I are in regular contact with the Confederation of British Industry about a wide range of issues. We have not received any direct representations from the confederation specifically in respect of skill shortages. However, in December 1984 the CBI conducted, on behalf of the Manpower Services Commission, a special survey of skill shortages to determine the effects on output and investment and to identify the occupations affected. The survey is to be repeated this month and we look forward to continued co-operation in this important area.

The commission's adult training programmes are now much more closely directed towards responding to local labour market needs; but the primary responsibility for training must rest with employers.

Lambeth

Mr. John Fraser asked the Paymaster General how many people in Lambeth have been unemployed between one and two years, between two and three years, between three and four years and more than four years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. Figures are given showing the number of claimants in the London borough of Lambeth who, on 10 October 1985, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available, had been unemployed for the durations requested.

	Number
Over one and up to two years	5,208
Over two and up to three years	2,734
Over three and up to four years	1,781
Over four years	1,926

Unemployment Statistics

Mr. Murphy asked the Paymaster General what evidence he has that employees within the Welwyn Hatfield constituency are registered as unemployed in other areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: A recent fraud drive in the Hertfordshire-Bedfordshire area has revealed that some people do work in one locality while drawing benefit in another. The number of known cases is small and I have no specific information about any in the Welwyn Hatfield constituency.

Area Manpower Board (Leicester)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General what plans he has for an area manpower board covering Leicester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Following a recent review of area manpower boards, the Manpower Services Commission has decided that the board which now covers Leicestershire and Northamptonshire should be divided into two county-based boards. This change will take effect from 1 July 1986 when the boards are due to be reconstituted. Copies of the review report are held in the Library.

EC Social Fund

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing the total amount of money paid to Britain under the European Economic Community social fund in each year from 1979 to the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will list the figures (a) in cash terms, (b) in real terms at 1985 prices and (c) as a proportion of the total European Economic Community budget.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General what is his estimate of the drop-out rate of those involved with the enterprise allowance scheme; and how many businesses are still operating one year after starting on the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Currently about 13 per cent. of those who join the enterprise allowance scheme do not complete 12 months on the scheme and therefore 87 per cent. are still operating a year after starting.

"Burdens on Business"

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General how many of the proposals listed in "Burdens on Business" he has implemented since the release of the White Paper; and what steps he has taken to implement these proposals.

Mr. Trippier: The White Paper "Lifting the Burden" (Cmnd. 9571) published in July records progress made in implementing many of the proposals set out in "Burdens of Business", as well as identifying further areas for action. these include establishing an enterprise and deregulation unit reporting to my right hon. and noble Friend, and procedures for monitoring the impact of new regulations on business.

Among other steps taken to reduce the burdens on business identified in the earlier report are the increase in employers' qualifying periods in unfair dismissal cases, the introduction of simplified planning zones and new building regulations, and proposals for amending legislation on wages councils and women's hours of work.

the Government intend to publish a White Paper reporting further progress on deregulation next spring.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General what is his estimate of the number of jobs created as a result of progress in implementation of the "Burdens on Business" proposals.

Mr. Trippier: The burdens on business report and the subsequent White Paper "Lifting the Burden" (Cmnd. 9571) contained a wide range of proposals designed to remove unnecessary constraints on businesses and reduce the costs to business of complying with Government regulations. As the White Paper indicated, it is not possible to prove a direct causal relationship between deregulation and job creation, and no reliable estimate can therefore be given of the effect on jobs of progress to date. The available evidence suggests however that there is a link between deregulation and jobs through stimulating economic activity.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Officers (Racial Discrimination)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been disciplined for racially discriminatory behaviour under the police discipline code.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall write to the hon. Member when I have received from chief constables the statistical returns relating to discipline cases for the period to 31 December 1985.

Immigrants (Detention)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will explain his criteria for continuing to detain an immigrant following representations from an hon. Member that that immigrant should be released from detention whilst the Minister considers the evidence relating to that immigrant's case.

Mr. Waddington: The criteria employed are those set out in the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Deakins) on 9 December. When representations are made against continued detention the case is reviewed at the level of immigration inspector.

Immigration Rules

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will propose amendments to the immigration rules to allow review by an adjudicator in cases where his decision was not made within the immigration rules; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: No. The action the hon. Member proposes could be achieved only by a change to the Immigration Act 1971 and this is not contemplated.

Police (Property Entry)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the number of occasions in each of the last three years on which police have used keys, lawfully in the possession of detained persons, to enter property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is not available.

Community Radio

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy and introductory time scale for the commencement of Greek-speaking and Afro-Caribbean community radio in London.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There have been over 180 applications from groups with a wide range of interests and ethnic backgrounds for the five experimental community radio licences available in London. The applications are now being considered by the Advisory panel on community Radio. We hope to announce the successful applicants in the New Year.

Hijacking Incidents

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer of 4 December to the hon. Member for Leicester, East, he will indicate for each hijacking incident the approximate number of police involved.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information is not readily available: even approximate figures could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Tactical Options Manual

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to the answer of 4 December, if he will seek to obtain from the Association of Chief Police Officers a copy of the tactical options manual with a view to placing it in the Library.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Participating Informers (Guidelines)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidelines issued to police officers concerning the use of participating informers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Guidance to the police on the safeguards which are needed before using an informant who is taking part in crime are set out in paragraph 1.92 of the consolidated circular to the police on crime and kindred matters. A copy of the circular is in the Library.

Police and Court Cells (Detained Persons)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average number of persons held in police and court cells overnight in the Metropolitan police district for the period January 1985 to date for (a) men, (b) women and (c) juveniles.

Mr. Mellor: The average number of prisoners held overnight in police court cells in the metropolitan police district from 1 January to 1 December 1985 is 21 adult males, five females and seven male young offenders. These figures are affected by high numbers held at various times this year as a result of industrial action at certain establishments.

Criminal Damage

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the absolute and the percentage increase in the number of offences of criminal damage recorded by the Metropolitan police between 1979 and 1984.

Mr. Mellor: Figures for 1979 are not directly comparable with those for 1984 because of changes made by the new counting rules which were introduced at the beginning of 1980. The increase in the numbers of offences of criminal damage recorded by the Metropolitan police between 1980 and 1984 was 25,900, or 34 per cent.

The numbers of such offences have been published in the "Criminal Statistics Supplementary Tables" volume 3 (table S3.1).

Black People (Attacks)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the percentage increase and the absolute number of attacks, alleged to have a racist element, against black people in each year since recording began, in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: The only available information relates to racial incidents in the Metropolitan police district and is given in the table: comparative figures for other forces are not available.

Racial incidents recorded in the Metropolitan police area

	Racial Incidents Recorded
1983	1,280
1984	1,515
*1985	1,733

* Provisional figures to 30 November.

Women (Violence)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the absolute and percentage increase in violent offences against women recorded in the Metropolitan police district between 1979 and 1984; and what new and additional resources have been used to tackle this problem.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Immigration

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fiancées have been granted admission to the United Kingdom since the change in August of the immigration rules requiring fiancées to have entry clearance; how many fiancées have been granted admission although they had not been granted entry clearance; and if the passports of such fiancées have been suitably endorsed in all cases.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1985, c. 26]: The latest available information relates to September and October, when about 150 fiancées were given leave to enter the United Kingdom, of whom a small proportion were granted admission although they had not been granted entry clearance. An additional number who did not hold entry clearances were refused leave to enter but are receiving further consideration in the light of hon. Members' representations.

All non-EC passengers given leave to enter the country have their passports endorsed at the port of entry giving the date, port of entry and conditions, if any.

Untaxed Vehicles (Prosecutions)

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have arisen following information on untaxed vehicles given to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre as a result of reports from the police and traffic wardens.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

The following table gives the number of prosecutions following reports on the unlicensed use of vehicles over the last three years. It also provides the number of cases where the evader agreed in lieu to settle out-of-court by payment of a penalty.

	Prosecutions	Out of Court Settlements
1982-83	126,000	91,000
1983-84	167,000	102,000
1984-85	167,000	123,000
1985-86*	120,000	90,000

* April to November

TRANSPORT

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much public dividend capital has been allocated to each of the nationalised industries for which he is responsible in each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Only British Airways among the transport industries has been allocated public dividend capital during the period in question. I therefore refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 2 December at column 110 to his previous question concerning the allocation of public dividend capital to British Airways.

Heathrow Airport (Signposting)

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the signposting for motorists travelling from Heathrow airport who wish to join the M4, M25 and M1 without entering London via the north circular road.

Mrs. Chalker: The M25-M4 interchange will be fully opened to traffic shortly and arrangements are already in hand to signpost the route from Heathrow to M1 via the M25 thereafter.

Cross-Channel Services

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate how many 700 passenger carrying unit ferries would be needed to meet the projected demand for cross-Channel services by 1995; what they would cost in aggregate; and how this cost compares with those of the various projected fixed links.

Mr. David Mitchell: This matter is being covered in the Government's assessment of fixed link proposals that is at present underway.

Channel Fixed Link

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the estimated cement tonnage to be used in each of the proposed Channel tunnel or bridge schemes in each of the years of construction.

Mr. David Mitchell: The fixed link proposals now being assessed by my Department remain confidential to the promoters, and it is for them to decide upon the release of such information.

Sealink Ferries (Belgian Ports)

Mr. Peter Rees asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations have been made to the Belgian Minister for Transport about access for Sealink ferries sailing from Dover to the ports of Ostend and Zeebrugge; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he will take if the Belgian authorities persist in their decision to exclude Sealink ferries from sailing from Dover to the ports of Ostend and Zeebrugge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: British Ferries Sealink have said that a result of the cessation of their commercial arrangements with the Belgian state maritime company could be their exclusion from the ports of Ostend and Zeebrugge. My officials, together with officials from the Department of Trade and Industry and the Office of Fair Trading, are today meeting Belgian officials to establish the facts on access to Belgian ports and the intentions of the Belgian authorities, and to make clear our concern about competition and access to Belgian ports before we decide on our next steps.

Helicopters (Offshore Diversions)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if the Civil Aviation Authority has reached any conclusions about the use of offshore diversions for helicopters.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I shall answer this question shortly.

British Airports Authority

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in view of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the British Airports Authority, he proposes that the British Airports Authority should continue to use revenue from its commercial activities to subsidise its traffic operations; what measures he has in miud to prevent the British Airports Authority using its monopoly power to exploit commercial activities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I welcome the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the publication of which was announced today by my hon. and learned Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. I welcome in particular the Commission's conclusion that in respect of its commercial activities the British Airports Authority is not pursuing a course of conduct which operates against the public interest. It is a very detailed and comprehensive report which I shall wish to consider carefully, and discuss with the British Airports Authority, before deciding what specific actions are required. I shall report to the House in due course.

I have made clear that to prevent any abuse of its monopoly power when in the private sector the British Airports Authority's successor will be subject to regulation. This will include periodic investigations by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission of all of its airport-related activities.

On the question of cross-subsidy I should point out that revenue from commercial activities makes an important contribution to the overall finances of the BAA, and to the extent that this cross subsidises traffic operations, allows traffic charges and thus air fares to be lower than they would be otherwise. We have made clear that we shall wish to ensure that, insofar as our international obligations require us to do so, airports's commercial activities (duty-free and tax-free shops, airport restaurants, car parks etc) will continue to contribute towards meeting airport costs.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report all current bilateral aid programme schemes being carried out in sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Raison: British bilateral aid supports schemes of three main kinds in sub-Saharan Africa. First there are some 300 current bilateral projects in the region. They are included in a list entitled "Projects by Country and Sector at 31 December 1984" a copy of which is being placed in the Library of the House. Secondly under non-project or programme aid we provide British goods and equipment for Ghana, Kenya, Malawi, Mauritius, Mozambique, Somalia, Sudan, Zaire, Zambia and Zimbabwe. Thirdly our technical cooperation includes schemes in areas such as consultancies, the supply of manpower and training, and related equipment. A general description of their nature and purpose is to be found in "British Overseas Aid 1984", copies of which are in the Library of the House. Further bilateral aid is given in the form of food, and, in cooperation with voluntary agencies, under such schemes as the British volunteer programme and the joint funding arrangements.

Hearing-impaired People (Aid)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 22 November, Official Report, column 311, if there is any action he will be taking to increase the £28,000 spent from the aid programme in 1984-85 on help specifically for the deaf and hearing-impaired in developing countries.

Mr. Raison: We do not set aside a specific sum from the aid programme for projects to help the deaf and hearing-impaired in developing countries. I am certainly willing to consider requests for assistance in this field but it is primarily for aid-recipient Governments to decide whether they wish to put forward such requests. Applications from British charities for help with eligible projects can be considered under the joint funding scheme.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animals (Transportation)

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to implement European Economic Community Council directive 77/489/EC on the protection of animals during international transit.

Mrs. Fenner: There is already extensive legislation to protect the welfare of animals in transit, which implements the provisions of this directive.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing the total amount of money paid to Britain under the European Economic Community common agricultural policy in each year from 1979 to the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will list the figures (a) in cash terms, (b) in real terms at 1985 prices and (c) as a proportion of the total European Economic Community budget.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Regional Land Drainage Committees

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the members, and their occupations, of each of the regional land drainage committees.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Randall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has made of the impact on the British fishing fleet of the possibility of Japan becoming self-sufficient in squid as a result of access to the fisheries within a 200-mile limit of the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 6 December 1985]: In recent years the arrangements for the purchase by East European factory ships of mackerel and herring caught by British fishermen have included barter deals for squid caught by East European trawlers and delivered to Japan and other markets. To the extent that Japan's import requirements were to be reduced as a result of increased catches by her own fishermen in the South Atlantic or elsewhere, this would clearly reduce the opportunity for the barter trade in this particular commodity. It is however impossible to estimate with any confidence to what extent, if at all, this would reduce the effective demand from the East European countries for our mackerel and herring.

Mr. Randall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has made of the effect on revenue to the Government and the British fishing industry since 1983, of the Government not imposing a 200-mile fishing limit around the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 6 December 1985]: It is difficult to give a categorical answer to what is essentially a hypothetical question, but it seems very unlikely that the revenue of the British fishing industry since 1983 has been significantly affected by the absence of an extended fishery limit around the Falkland Islands. The question of the effect, if any, on Government revenue is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Aggregate Dredging (North Sea)

Mr. Randall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for the enforcement of the code of practice for aggregate dredging in the southern North sea in order to protect fishing grounds and spawning areas.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 6 December 1985]: I am always ready to investigate breaches of the code of practice if firm evidence is provided.

Freezer Vessel Fleet

Mr. Randall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's longer-term policy regarding the capacity of the British freezer vessel fleet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 6 December 1985]: On matters affecting the structure of the United Kingdom fishing fleet the Government's general aim is to promote a satisfactory balance between catching capacity and the available fishing opportunities. In recent years the United Kingdom's distant water white fish opportunities under agreements between the European Community and third countries, such as Norway, Canada, Greenland and the Faroe Islands, have not been fully taken up and licences are available for freezer trawlers or other vessels wishing to do so. The licensing arrangements for the pelagic fisheries in the North sea and Western waters, including those for the licensing of freezer trawlers, are currently being reviewed, taking into account current and prospective fishing opportunities.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Randall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied that the common fisheries policy control system is currently working fully in the interests of the British fishing fleet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 6 December 1985]: I am satisfied that it is in the interests of the British fishing fleet that the rules of the common fisheries policy as agreed in 1983 should be fully applied and enforced throughout the Community. As a result of the work of the Commission's inspectorate of inspectorates it is clear that substantial progress has been made in tightening up control arrangements in all Member states. But there is inevitably room for further improvement at this stage and I am satisfied that the Commission are working to achieve this. The United Kingdom will continue to be at the forefront of those seeking effective control.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he has received any applications from Marples International Ltd. for a licence to dump at sea toxic waste, including asbestos, cadmium and mercury, from the Glory Hole, Portsmouth;

(2) if Marples International Ltd. appealed against the last decision not to allow dumping of toxic waste at sea.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 6 December 1985]: My Department indicated in July 1984 that it would not grant a licence for the disposal at sea of contaminated material excavated from the Glory Hole, Portsmouth. No appeal was lodged against this decision. A subsequent application for a licence to dispose at sea of naturally occurring materials taken from beneath Glory Hole has now been received. No decision will be taken on the issue of a licence until the content of the waste has been established.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from individuals and organisations opposed to the Anglo-Irish agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: As at 3 December 1985 the Prime Minister and I had together received comments from 387 individuals and organisations in response to the Anglo-Irish Agreement. The majority of these expressed reservations about or opposition to the agreement and came mainly from correspondents in Northern Ireland.

Construction Industry

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to seek to reduce unemployment in the construction industry in the Province.

Mr. Needham [pursuant to his reply, 9 December 1985, c. 443]: Public expenditure plans for the current financial year envisage over £400 million worth of work being generated in the Northern Ireland construction industry by direct public sector spending on capital projects and maintenance. In addition, Government grants and loans to the private sector are expected to give rise to a further £313 million of construction work.

Last year private sector house starts were at their highest level for 20 years.

ENERGY

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Energy what studies have been undertaken since 1979 and what studies are now being carried out into the use of lead containers for nuclear waste.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have been asked to reply.

Lead is not regarded as the most suitable containment material for nuclear waste. No studies have been carried out by my Department or by NIREX on lead containers. Mild steel and stainless steel containers are currently being studied.

Plutonium

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) of 11 November, Official Report, column 61, he will publish in the Official Report the details of the European Communities ministerial declaration of 20 November 1984; and for each country in the European Community what is the total amount of plutonium transferred from the United Kingdom for civil end use.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

The answer the hon. Member refers to was given by my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton).

I am arranging for a copy of the declaration of 20 November 1984, together with an informal translation, to be placed in the Library.

With regard to the information requested about transfers of plutonium to EC member states, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 15 July at columns 32-3.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gibraltar

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to renegotiate the status of Gibraltar with regard to the European Economic Community and the implementation of European Economic Community directives affecting the financial and company sector in Gibraltar.

Mr. Rifkind: No. The Gibraltar Government have made no request for a renegotiation of Gibraltar's status in the Community. Preparations are well under way for Gibraltar to give effect to European Community directives on insurance and company law, taking into account where possible Gibraltar's special circumstances.

Defence Attachés

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied with the work of defence attachés at British embassies and high commissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We are most grateful for the positive contribution made by defence attachés in the work of Diplomatic Service posts overseas.

Soviet Jews (Emigration)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from the United States Administration since the United States of America/Union of Soviet Socialist Republics summit talks in Geneva about the intentions of the Soviet Government with regard to pleas by those Soviet Jews who wish to emigrate to Israel and who have been refused; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, to the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) on 6 December, at column 367.

Boarding School Allowances

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much was spent in each of the last three years on boarding school allowances for members of the Diplomatic Service and for civil servants seconded abroad.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) on 28 October, at column 359. The figures provided included the cost for Home Civil Servants on secondment overseas with the Diplomatic Service.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Community

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what areas of decision making in the EEC affecting his financial and taxation responsibilities will now be subject to majority voting in the Council of Ministers in consequence of the agreement at Luxembourg on 2 and 3 December.

Mr. Brooke: Articles 2(2) and (3) of the internal market text in the European Council conclusions provide that unanimity should be retained for all matters dealing with taxation.

Article 2(1) provides that measures under certain articles of the EEC treaty, which were previously decided by unanimity, should in future be decided by qualified majority. These articles include Article 57(2) (concerning the taking up and pursuit of activities of self-employed persons), which covers measures concerned with the protection of savings, in particular with the granting of credit and the exercise of the banking profession. They also include Article 70(1), which covers the progressive co-ordination of the exchange policies of member states in respect of the movement of capital between those states and third countries.

The new monetary articles do not provide for any qualified majority voting. Institutional changes resulting from further developments in the field of economic and monetary policy will require treaty amendment and thus the unanimous ratification of member states in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements.

The treaty reform proposals are still subject to an overall reserve from Denmark and Italy.

Participating Informers (Guidelines)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidelines issued to investigating officers of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise concerning the use of participating informers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Customs and Excise issue instructions to their officers about the use of participating informants. I do not propose to place a copy in the Library.

Participating informers are used only with the express authority of senior management within customs who are required to know the proper identity of the informant and are able to consult the solicitor's office of customs, as necessary. Operations of this nature are invariably undertaken by specialist investigators.

EC (Contributions)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the net contribution paid by Britain to the European Economic Community in each year from 1979 to the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will list the figures (a) in cash terms, (b) in real terms at 1985 prices and (c) as a proportion of the total European Economic Community budget.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Small Businesses (VAT)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to reduce the value added tax requirements on small businesses including steps towards implementation of those proposals listed in "Burdens on Business".

Mr. Brooke: Customs and Excise has set up a deregulation unit which, amongst other duties, will examine the Department's policy towards small businesses and the practicability of any further special arrangements for them. With regard to the recommendations listed in "Burdens on Business" and the subsequent White Paper "Lifting the Burden" (Cmnd. 9571), these have been accepted in full or part and their implementation is being actively pursued.

Taxes Act 1979

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many applications have been made to the Board of Inland Revenue for the out-of-time admission of an election under the provisions of section 154(2) of the Taxes Act 1970; in how many cases the late election was accepted; and in what circumstances such late elections are accepted;

(2) how many applications have been made to the Board of Inland Revenue for the out-of-time admission of a claim under the provisions of section 264 of the Taxes Act 1970; in how many cases the late claim was accepted; and in what circumstances such late claims are accepted.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his replies, 6 December 1985, c. 355-56]: About 150 applications are made annually for the out-of-time admission of elections under section 154(2) of the Taxes Act 1970; of these about half are accepted. In relation to claims under section 264 of the Taxes Act 1970, the comparable figure is about 50 applications annually of which about one third are accepted.

In cases where no statutory discretion is given to the Board of Inland Revenue to extend a time limit for a claim or election, it must be assumed that Parliament's intention is that the limit should be applied strictly, and the number of cases in which it would be appropriate to exercise discretion under the board's powers of care and management (provided in the Taxes Management Act 1970) is correspondingly limited. Every such case has to be considered individually on its own merits, and in the light of all the factors relevant to the circumstances in which the claim was made late. However, there would be a presumption in favour of admitting a late claim where there has been a relevant error on the part of the Inland Revenue, and the claim is made shortly after the error has been drawn to the taxpayer's attention; where a taxpayer has given clear notice of his intention to claim, but before the time limit expires he has not completed any statutory requirement or specified the claim in sufficient detail; or where the reason for the delay in making the claim was clearly beyond the taxpayer's control (for example because he — or in the case of a company the only individual who had the relevant information and experience—was seriously ill and there was no one else who could reasonably be expected to stand in his shoes).

DEFENCE

Equal Opportunities Officer

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the applicants for the post of equal opportunities officer in his Department were (a) white males, (b) white females, (c) males of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin or (d) females of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin.

Mr. Lee: It is not the practice in my Department to fill posts of this nature by inviting staff to apply for them. The departmental equal opportunities officer, and the associated network of officers in our civilian personnel divisions, have been designated on the basis of their overall suitability and not on the basis of sex or ethnic origin. These officers are responsible for other personnel matters in addition to equal opportunities.

Advertising

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for Defence what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament over each of the last 10 years, respectively; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Lee: I shall reply to the hon. Member in the near future.

Service Personnel (Boarding School Allowances)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent on boarding school allowances for services personnel in each of the last three years.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is as follows:

	£ million
1982-83	66·3
1983-84	76·5
1984-85	78·0

Service Personnel (Signals Regiments)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the two members of 9 Signals Regiment currently in the process of being discharged prior to completion of their engagement have been asked to leave the Service;

(2) whether the two members of 9 Signals Regiment currently in the process of being discharged, prior to completion of their engagement, have asked to leave the Service.

Mr. Lee: Both are female personnel. One is being discharged at her own request on marriage and the other is to be discharged on pregnancy.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the five members of 9 Signals Regiment, who have applied for discharge prior to completion of their engagement, have been asked to leave the Service by their superiors.

Mr. Lee: No.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the two members of 14 Signals Regiment who are currently being considered for discharge before completion of their engagements, have asked to leave the Service.

Mr. Lee: One has applied to be discharged and one may be discharged administratively following a civil conviction.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many of the 81 service men of 14 Signals Regiment discharged since 3 February 1984 upon completion of their engagement applied to and were not permitted to extend their service;

(2) how many of the 121 service men of 9 Signals Regiment discharged since 3 February 1984 upon completion of their engagement applied to and were not permitted to extend their service.

Mr. Lee: This information could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many of the 50 service men of 14 Signals Regiment, who have been discharged prematurely since 3 February 1984, have had to reimburse the Ministry of Defence for not completing their engagement;

(2) how many of the 83 service men of 9 Signals Regiment, who have been prematurely discharged since 3 February 1984, have had to reimburse the Ministry of Defence for not completing their engagement.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many former members of 14 Signals Regiment have been subject to interrogation by military or civil police since 3 February 1984.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any former members of 9 Signals Regiment have had their passports withheld.

Mr. Lee: My noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Support will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the 83 service men of 9 Signals Regiment who have been discharged since 3 February 1984, prior to completion of their engagement, were asked to leave the service by their superiors; and for what reasons.

Mr. Lee: This information could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a breakdown of the rank and trade and length of service of the 83 service men of 9 Signals Regiment who have been discharged since 3 February 1984, prior to completion of their engagement.

Mr. Lee: This information could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a breakdown of the rank and trade and length of service of the 50 service men of 14 Signals Regiment who have been discharged since 3 February 1984 prior to completion of their engagement.

Mr. Lee: This information could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the 50 service men of 14 Signals Regiment, who have been discharged since 3 February 1984 prior to completion of their engagement, were asked to leave the service by their superiors.

Mr. Lee: This information could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any former members of 14 Signals Regiment have had their passports withheld.

Mr. Lee: My noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Support will write to the hon. Member.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Board and Lodging Regulations

13. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many letters he has received about the recently introduced board and lodging regulations.

Mr. Major: We have received about 300 letters since the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Miscellaneous Provisions (No. 2) Regulations 1985 were laid on 11 November 1985.

Herbal Medicines

14. Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will report progress on his Department's negotiations with the natural medicines group on the review of licences for herbal medicines under the Medicines Act procedures.

Mr. Whitney: Following consultation, the Department issued guidance on arrangements for reviewing herbal products on 21 October. Since then more discussions have been held with the British Herbal Medicine Association —the body which represents herbal manufacturers—on the operational detail and the Association has expressed satisfaction with progress made so far. When the review of herbal remedies, now in progress, is completed, consumers will be able to buy products which have been assessed on an up to date basis as to their safety, efficacy and quality.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessments have been made by the medicines division of his Department as to the effects of herbal medicines and synthetic drugs on the condition of patients; and to what extent its findings were taken into account when the Medicines Act information sheet of October 1985 was prepared by the medicines division.

Mr. Whitney: When product licences are sought under the Medicines Act, it is for the manufacturers to provide information about the safety, efficacy and quality of each product in question. The Department then assesses that information again in respect of each product. We do not assess in general terms as this question implies. That is not a requirement of the Medicines Act. Judgments about the relative values of different philosophies of medicine for patients are for the professions at large and not for the Department.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what response he has made to the representations from the Natural Medicines Society concerning the effects of guidelines issued in the Medicines Act information sheet of October 1985 on the availability to the public of herbal medicines.

Mr. Whitney: The Department has received a number of letters from members of the Natural Medicines society. The letters deal generally with freedom of choice in health care and not specifically with the Department's Information Sheet for manufacturers. In replies we have assured correspondents that the Medicines Act will not be used to restrict the general availability of alternative medicines such as herbal and homoepathic remedies.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give a breakdown of the professional people or bodies which have been appointed by his Department to advise him on the theory and practice of natural medicine;

(2) whether any expert in the theory and practice of natural medicine has been appointed to serve on any committee or body of advisers reporting or making recommendations to him on questions of licensing in respect of natural medicines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the operation of the Medicines Act. The Medicines Commission and the advisory committees between them provide expert advice on all aspects of medicines. No one body specialises in natural medicines although it is the Committee on the Review of Medicines that has the major interest because it is concerned with existing rather than new medicines.

Professional members of Medicines Act bodies are not appointed to represent particular interests, but rather for their individual capacity for sound and impartial judgment based upon expertise and wide experience in a field relevant to the administration of the Medicines Act 1968. The Department is particularly fortunate in having an expert on the pharmacy of plant materials both on the Medicines Commission and the Committee on the Review of Medicines. In addition two further experts in the same field are members of one of the main Medicines Act sub-committees. There have also been fruitful informal discussions with various organisations representing manufacturers of alternative medicines, such as the British Herbal Medicines Association.

As to the future, Ministers have wide powers to add to the membership of existing Medicines Act bodies either temporarily or permanently as the need arises and we shall keep the matter under careful scrutiny in the period ahead.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent his decision to review licensing procedures in respect of herbal products takes into account directives issued by the European Community.

Mr. Whitney: Directive 75/319/EEC requires all member countries to review for safety, efficacy etc. proprietary medicinal products which were on the market when the Directive came into force (20 May 1975) within 15 years. Herbal products are not excluded from this requirement. We are proceeding with the review of these products with a view to completing the task within the EC timetable. Review of these products is in any event consistent with our own legislation—the Medicines Act 1968.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many meetings he and his Department officials have had with representatives of the Natural Medicines Society; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: None. We can trace no requests for a meeting from the Natural Medicines Society.

Mrs Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why he decided that the licensing authority should when considering herbal medicines be provided with details of all clinical trials that have taken place, including patient selection criteria, randomisation process, composition of placebo control and clinical assessment parameters.

Mr. Whitney: It is the Department's normal practice as Medicines Act Licensing Authority to require the information outlined in the hon. Member's question in respect of medicines intended for serious conditions. This we must do to protect patients from ineffective and harmful medicines. Herbal products for serious conditions are not excluded from this requirement. If manufacturers have difficulty in producing the necessary information, the Department's officials are happy to dicuss with them modifications to their therapeutic claims to make them consistent with the available evidence. Such detailed information would not normally be required when claims are limited to the symptomatic relief of minor disorders thought appropriate for self-diagnosis and treatment.

Local Office, Deeside

15. Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the future of the proposed Deeside, Flint integrated local office of his Department.

Mr. Major: It has for several years been the Department's intention to open a new integrated local office to serve the Deeside area.

A building in Flint has been leased by the Property Services Agency and I regret the delay in bringing this property into use. We are currently discussing with PSA the work necessary to adapt these premises and hope to conclude these discussions early in the new year. Subject to the availability of funds we hope to provide a new office to serve the Deeside area.

Contraceptives

16. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is yet in a position to announce the revised guidelines for the prescription of contraceptives to girls under 16 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I hope to be able to announce revised guidance shortly.

Disabled People

18. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received in favour of his proposals for the disabled.

Mr. Newton: Responses to the Green Paper proposals are not generally in a form which can sensibly be used to provide a simple breakdown of numbers for or against particular aspects of the proposals.

Regional Health Authorities

19. Mr. Rathbone asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department takes to monitor the efficiency of regional health authorities.

Mr. Whitney: We monitor the efficiency of regional health authorities in a range of ways including statutory audit, regular reports on aspects of performance and statistical returns.

Care in the Community

20. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will meet a delegation of members of the North-West Association of Social Services Authorities to discuss the adequacy of funding for care in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have no plans to meet this delegation. I can only repeat what has already been said in correspondence with the hon. Member, that particular issues of funding between social services authorities and health authorities in the north-west are best resolved locally.

24. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to respond to the Social Services Committee report on care in the community.

Mr. Whitney: The Government's response was published on 20 November. I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on that date to my hon. Friend the Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Mr. Howarth) at column 219.

NHS (Capital Spending)

21. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services by what percentage capital spending in the National Health Service has increased since 1978-79; and if he will make a statement on future plans.

Mr. Whitney: Between 1978-79 and 1984-85, capital spending in the National Health Service increased by 117 per cent. in cash terms; an increase of 30 per cent. over and above increases in general construction industry prices.

The Government plan to increase cash provision to £794 million in 1986-87 and to £835 million by 1988-89. Health authorities will also retain the proceeds of land and property sales, which we expect to rise very substantially. This will enable them to carry through major programmes of investment in hospitals and community services.

Pharmacists (Contract)

22. Mr. Cockeram asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from retailing organisations about the proposed new National Health Service pharmacists' contract.

76. Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from retailing interests concerning the proposed new National Health Service pharmacists' contract.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have received representations from two retailing organisations.

Wrightington Hospital (Children's Ward)

23. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to make a statement on the future of the children's ward at Wrightington hospital.

Mr. Whitney: Soon, I hope.

Elderly Persons (Residential Care)

25. Mr Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to arrange the assessment of need for residential care of those entering private homes for the elderly.

Mr. Newton: A joint central and local government working party has examined the scope for improving collaboration between the Department and local authorities over support for residents in private and voluntary residential care homes. They gave particular attention to the assessment of supplementary benefit claimants' need for residential care, and to ensuring that charges met from public funds are reasonable. We have discussed the report with the local authority associations, and I hope to make an announcement shortly about arrangements to examine the possibilities in more detail.

Social Security Reform

28. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to publish his proposed White Paper on social security reform.

48. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish his White Paper on the reform of social security.

57. Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is yet in a position to announce the date on which the White Paper on social security will be published.

Mr. Newton: The White Paper will be published in the next few weeks.

43. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received any representations in favour of abolishing the state earnings-related pension scheme.

46. Mr. Torney asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he received in favour of abolishing the state earnings-related pension scheme.

71. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he received in favour of making all on supplementary benefit pay 20 per cent. of their rates.

Mr. Newton: Responses to the Green Paper proposals are not generally in a form which can sensibly be used to provide a simple breakdown of numbers for or against particular aspects of the proposals.

Ancillary Services (Privatisation)

29. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the savings so far achieved from the contracting out policy of ancillary services.

37. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on progress with privatisation in the Health Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 25 November at columns 499-502.

Community Care

30. Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he is satisfied with the progress being made in developing community care.

Mr. Whitney: I am reasonably satisfied with the progress made so far. Much has been achieved; but there is still a long way to go before a range of services is available to meet the care needs both of people already in the community and of people still in hospital who could benefit from moving into community care. The Government's response (Cmnd. 9674) to the report from the Social Services Committee on community care, published on 20 November, described the task ahead in the development of community services for mentally handicapped and mentally ill people.

Limited List Prescribing

31. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest position regarding the work of the advisory committee on the limited list of drugs available under the National Health Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: To date the Committee has met four times and has considered representations from the pharmaceutical industry and medical profession in respect of a number of drugs affected by the Selected List Scheme. In the light of the Committee's recommendations, the status of some drugs under the scheme was changed by Regulations which came into effect on 1 December.

Cold Climate Allowance

32. Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce the payment of a cold climate allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. McQuarrie) on 12 November at column 157.

Cigarette Smoking

33. Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans to bring forward any measures during the current Session of Parliament to seek to reduce the incidence of cigarette smoking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: There are at present no plans to introduce legislation. The Government are committed to reducing the incidence of cigarette smoking by way of voluntary agreements with the tobacco industry, and we are currently having discussions with the tobacco industry about a new voluntary agreement to control the advertising of tobacco products. Other measures being taken include a £1 million campaign to test the effect of media advertising in discouraging teenagers from smoking and a new health promotional drive in the schools organised by the Health Education Council.

Benefit Claimants (Diet)

34. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that supplementary benefit and family income supplement give adequate moneys to allow claimants to conform to the dietary guidelines used by his Department.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 2 December at column 132. The Department has not issued dietary guidelines for individuals.

Parallel Imports

35. Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his assessment of the cost to the National Health Service of the increasing incidence of parallel imports.

Mr. Hayhoe: There is a potential saving to the National Health Service in the dispensing of medicines which are cheaper through parallel import but I am not at present able to quantify this.

Hospitals (Hygiene)

36. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding action he has taken in connection with unhygienic conditions in hospitals.

Mr. Hayhoe: In recent months, there have been two deputations on the issue of hygiene in hospitals and more than 50 letters have been received on the subject. The views expressed will be taken into account in drawing up additional measures to ensure good standards of hygiene are achieved throughout the National Health Service.

NHS Expenditure

38. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the level of National Health Service spending per capita for the last available year.

Mr. Hayhoe: National Health Service spending, as measured in the national accounts but excluding patients charges, is estimated to have been about £305 per head of population in the United Kingdom in 1984.

Hospices

39. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will increase the resources available to hospices for the terminally ill.

Mr. Hayhoe: Most hospices are run by voluntary groups and it is for individual health authorities to consider what financial support is appropriate for each hospice. I am encouraging health authorities to collaborate with the voluntary sector in the planning and provision of all services for the dying.

NHS (Bed Occupancy)

40. Dr. Mawhinney asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, on average, how many National Health Service hospital beds are unoccupied on each day of the week.

Mr. Whitney: In 1984, the latest year for which information is available centrally, there was a daily average of 65,188 beds recorded as being available but not occupied in National Health Service hospitals in England. Bed occupancy figures are based on a midnight count and do not therefore reflect the use of beds by patients who do not stay overnight.

Heart Bypass Operations

44. Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what progress is being made in the provision of heart bypass operations.

Mr. Whitney: We have asked health authorities to develop coronary artery surgery as a priority in the acute sector. Since 1977 there has been a steady growth in the number of operations performed and annual totals for the United Kingdom, according to information supplied by the United Kingdom Cardiac Surgical Register of the Society of Thoracic and Cardiovascular Surgeons, were as follows:

	Number	Percentage increase over previous year
1977	2,875	*
1978	3,191	11·0
1979	3,538	10·9
1980	4,859	37·3
1981	5,951	22·5
1982	6,766	13·7
1983	9,443	39·6

* Not available

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients are awaiting cardiac bypass treatment; and how long is their average wait.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

Mentally Ill People

47. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much his Department is spending on mentally ill people living in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: National Health Service expenditure on mentally ill people living in the community is not separately identified. Local authority gross current expenditure, including joint finance, on residential and day care services for the mentally ill is estimated to have been some £36 million in 1983-84.

Hip Replacement Operations

49. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time for a hip replacement operation.

Mr. Whitney: The estimated median interval between the date a patient was placed on the waiting list and the date of admission to a National Health Service hospital for total hip replacement or other arthroplasty of hip in England in 1983, the latest year for which information is available centrally, was 24 weeks.

Severe Weather Payment Scheme

50. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the operation of the severe weather payment scheme.

66. Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps have been taken to improve the operation of payments for heating in exceptionally severe weather.

73. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has for making exceptional severe weather payments this winter.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Members and my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Batley and Spen (Mrs. Peacock) on 6 December at column 400-401.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the further guidance to adjudication officers on claims for exceptionally severe weather payments to be issued.

Mr. Newton: I understand that the Chief Adjudication officer issued guidance on such claims on 6 December, and I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the temperature that triggers exceptionally severe weather payments in (a) Truro, (b) Bermondsey, (c) Brecon, (d) Wisbech, (e) Leeds, (f) Berwick upon Tweed, (g) Selkirk, (h) Inverurie, (i) Aviemore and (j) Lerwick.

Mr. Newton: A tribunal of social security commissioners has recently ruled that eligibility for exceptionally severe weather payments should not be decided by reference to predetermined trigger points based on temperature levels, and such an approach is not now being used. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Batley and Spen (Mrs. Peacock) on 6 December at columns 400-401.

Energy Conservation

51. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings have been achieved by energy conservation measures in the National Health Service.

Mr. Whitney: In England the National Health Service has cumulatively saved over £400 million by energy saving measures between 1972-73 and 1983-84, the latest date for which figures are available.

Without these measures, in 1983-84 the energy fuel bill would have been £80 million greater.

Fuel Poverty

53. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent discussions he has had with officers of the citizens advice bureaux service on the problems caused to people by fuel poverty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend has had no recent discussions with officers of the citizens advice bureaux service about fuel poverty.

Nurses

54. Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses have been asked to leave or been given notice to quit (a) nurses homes and (b) self-contained houses rented from their employing authority, since July 1985 under the terms of the Department of Health and Social Security circular HC(85)19.

68. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses have been asked to leave or been given notices to quit (a) nurses homes and (b) self-contained houses rented from their employing authority, since July 1985, under the terms of DHSS circular HC(85)19.

Mr. Hayhoe: No nurses have been so evicted. Staff who are no longer to be offered accommodation will either have the chance to buy at a discount the property they currently live in, or be given at least a year to make alternative arrangements.

Housing Benefit

56. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any evidence of abuse of the housing benefit scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The housing benefits review indicated that there was little hard information about the nature and extent of abuse of the housing benefits scheme, but expressed concern about the potential for abuse by both claimants and landlords. This concern has also been voiced by others, including individual local authorities and the Audit Commission. The Green Paper, Reform of Social Security (Cmnd. 9518) included proposals for strengthening safeguards against abuse of the scheme.

Family Income

58. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children are currently living in families whose income is at or below his Department's defined poverty levels; and how this figure compares with the figures for 1979.

Mr. Major: The Department does not have defined poverty levels on which to base such a calculation.

In Vitro Fertilisation

59. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is satisfied with the current distribution of clinics providing in vitro fertilisation within the National Health Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: National Health Service provision for in vitro fertilisation is for health authorities, who have to take account of other demands on available resources.

Invalid Care Allowance

60. Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the invalid care allowance will continue to be paid in his revised social security scheme.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to change invalid care allowance.

Ambulances

61. Mr. Andrew Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the provision of ambulance services for emergencies during the current restrictions on overtime worked by ambulance men in many areas.

Mr. Whitney: We have no evidence that any restrictions on overtime worked by ambulance men are leading to unsatisfactory provision of service.

Severe Disablement Allowance

62. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has to change the qualifying conditions for severe disablement allowance.

Mr. Newton: None at present.

Pensions

63. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average net additional weekly amount which will be received by (a) a single pensioner and (b) a married pensioner couple as a result of the combined effects of the recent benefits uprating and the measures announced in the autumn statement.

Mr. Major: As a result of the recent benefits uprating the standard rate of basic retirement pension has been increased by £2·50 for a single pensioner and by £4·00 for a married pensioner couple. Increased amounts of additional pension and graduated retirement benefit may also be payable, but the exact amounts will depend upon the pensioner's individual circumstances.

The Chancellor's recent autumn statement announced no measures which affected pensioner incomes: it outlined Government spending plans for the forthcoming year.

Child Benefit

64. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the recent increase in child benefit.

Mr. Newton: About 130 representations have been received most of which expressed dissatisfaction with the recent increase in child benefit.

Bloomsbury Health District

65. Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is satisfied with the current allocation of funds to the Bloomsbury health district.

Mr. Hayhoe: Allocation of funds to district health authorities is the responsibility of the regional health authority; for Bloomsbury the North-East Thames regional health authority.

Birth Statistics

67. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the numbers of babies born in the Basildon and Thurrock district health authority area in each of the last five years and in the constituency of Basildon.

Mr. Whitney: The numbers of live births during each of the five years 1980 to 1984 to mothers usually resident in the Basildon and Thurrock district health authority and in the Basildon parliamentary constituency were as follows:

Year	*Basildon and Thurrock district health authority	Basildon parliamentary constituency†
1980	4,225	‡1,490
1981	4,042	1,411
1982	3,827	1,418
1983	3,901	1,435
1984	4,010	1,420

* As constituted under the National Health Service restructuring of 1 April 1982.
† As constituted at the general election of June 1983.
‡ Estimate.

Privatisation

69. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the proposal by some health authorities to invite private enterprise to provide financial sponsorship for hospital beds and wards.

Mr. Hayhoe: I welcome the enterprise shown by a number of health authorities in looking for ways to increase their income for the benefit of patients.

Buildings and Land (Disposal)

72. Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress is being made by the regions in advising their plans for the disposal of unnecessary buildings or unused land belonging to the National Health Service.

Mr. Whitney: The disposal of surplus National Health Service land and property is an ongoing task and health authorities do not routinely submit plans or forecasts of future disposals. As at 31 March 1985 some 4,900 acres had been declared surplus to National Health Service requirements and were in process of disposal. In the year ending 31 March 1985 approximately 1,000 acres were disposed of resulting in proceeds of approximately £49 million all of which was retained by health authorities for re-investment in the service.

75. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has for the resources realised from the sale of surplus land belonging to the Health Service.

Mr. Whitney: Health authorities have been advised that, in general, they will retain the proceeds of their disposals for funding future health service developments.

Mobility Allowance

74. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to extend the scope of mobility allowance to cover cases where there is only an ability to walk if supervised and cases where public transport is established to be unsuitable and including specifically, children suffering from Raynaud's disease.

Mr. Newton: The main medical condition for mobility allowance is that a person must be unable or virtually unable to walk because of physical disablement. The test for the allowance is always one of walking ability and there is no specific diagnostic condition which gives automatic entitlement. We have no present plans either to change the nature of the qualifying conditions for the allowance or to extend its scope.

Children (Specialist Units)

77. Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specialist units for physically and sexually abused children are now open or are planning to open within the next three years.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not held centrally. The provision of services for physically and sexually abused children is a matter for local authority social services departments, health authorities and voluntary organisations concerned with child protection. The National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children provide specialist services in their units; and I am aware of the work being done at Great Ormond street hospital for sick children, and know that there are a number of other local initiatives.

Social Fund

17. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has discussed the Social Fund proposals with the local authority associations.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) earlier today.

70. Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received in support of his proposals for a social fund.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 13 November at columns 209-10.

SERPS

27. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to announce the results of his consultations on the future of the state earnings-related pension scheme.

Mr. Newton: The Government's conclusions about the future of the state earnings related pension scheme will be announced in a White Paper to be published shortly.

Social Security Reviews

41. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further representations he has received regarding the proposed social security reviews.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Gummer) on Tuesday 12 November at column 417.

Students (Benefit)

42. Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received regarding students' entitlement to benefit.

Mr. Newton: About 100.

Embryo Research

45. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the number of organisations and individuals who have responded to the Warnock report on embryo research; and how many were in favour of the committee's recommendations.

Mr. Hayhoe: Comments from 180 organisations about the Warnock report recommendations on embryo research have been received. Of these, 105 were broadly in favour of the recommendations and 75 against. Over 4,000 letters about the report have been received from individuals, nearly all of which express concern about research on human embryos. Copies of evidence and responses to the report from organisations have been placed in the Library, where the organisation has consented.

Private Residential Care

52. Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage increase in total Department of Health and Social Security payments to elderly people in private residential care between 1978 and 1985, or the latest figures available.

Mr. Newton: The latest available information relates to elderly people in private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes and shows an increase of nearly 3,000 per cent. between total expenditure in 1978 and total estimated expenditure in 1984.

Hypothermia

55. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the action he intends to take to seek to prevent old people dying from hypothermia.

Mr. Newton: The Government provide considerable help with the heating costs of the least well off through weekly rates of supplementary benefit. Many elderly people and others who may need to spend more on heating also receive extra weekly help known as heating additions. Spending on these has risen to some £400 million in the last financial year—£140 million more in real terms than in 1978-79. All heating additions were uprated again recently. We have indicated that expenditure on heating additions would be included in the income support scheme proposed in the Green Paper, "Reform of Social Security", and that the pattern of such additions would be taken into account in setting the income support premiums for pensioners and other groups such as the disabled.

In addition to cash help, it is important that elderly people and those who care for them should know the best ways to combat the effects of cold. The Department has co-operated with the Health Education Council in producing "Warmth in Winter", a leaflet containing simple, practical advice on keeping warm. In addition, a pack of information and training materials on this subject for those in contact with elderly people is being developed by the Council and will be available next year.

Infants (Congenital Anomalies)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children were born in each of the last three years for which figures are available with severe congenital anomalies requiring complete hospital care.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

Pensions Funds (Annual Reports and Statements)

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on the content of regulations governing disclosure in pension fund annual reports and statements to members.

Mr. Newton: The Department has received a total of 75 submissions on the proposals for regulations on disclosure of information by occupational pension schemes.

Contact Lenses

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the extent of corneal damage or destruction caused by soft contact lenses.

Mr. Hayhoe: I understand from evidence from the United States of America that some soft contact lenses for extended wear can cause corneal ulcers. However, there is as yet insufficient information on this problem to determine its prevalence in the United Kingdom. I have extended the yellow card system for reporting adverse reactions on a pilot basis to include ophthalmic opticians so that if corneal ulcers are found the Department would be told, and I have arranged for consultant ophthalmologists to be reminded to use the existing yellow card system for this purpose. I am considering the provision of funds for research into the relationship between corneal ulceration and contact lens wear. I am also arranging with the manufacturers the provision of adequate written instructions to all wearers of contact lenses.

Vaccination

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why he is considering halting the routine vaccination procedure for school children.

Mr. Whitney: We have no plans to halt routine childhood vaccination in general.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) on 6 December at column 395, which dealt with BCG immunisation.

Tuberculosis (Vaccination)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be able to provide a detailed analysis of the costs and benefits of his proposal for a selective vaccination policy against tuberculosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) on 6 December at column 395. The joint committee on vaccination and immunisation will continue to monitor data on the incidence of the disease and will reconsider the benefits of a switch to a selective vaccination policy before 1990.

Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to introduce legislation to implement the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee contract.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Pavitt) on 28 October at column 373.

Hospital Services (Contracting-Out)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate has been made of savings to the National Health Service resulting from the contracting-out of hospital services.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 25 November at columns 499-502.

Druglink

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the amount and purpose of his Department's grant to Druglink, Hemel Hempstead, Hertfordshire.

Mr. Whitney: A grant totalling £79,706 over three years has been approved under the Department's drugs initiative for a Druglink—West Herts project to develop a community support programme under which volunteers will be recruited and trained to provide an advisory and education service for professionals and for drug misusers and their families.

Hip Replacement

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking to meet the demand for hip replacements.

Mr. Whitney: Health authorities have been informed that Ministers regard joint replacement as one of the main priorities for the development of services in the acute sector. The latest available statistics show that in 1983 there were some 9,000 more hip replacement operations than in 1978, an increase of over 30 per cent.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients needing hip replacement are awaiting treatment; and what is the average length of wait.

Mr. Whitney: Information on the numbers of people awaiting admission to National Health Service hospitals for particular operations is not available centrally. The estimated median interval between the date a patient was placed on the waiting list and the date of admission to a National Health Service hospital for total hip replacement or other arthroplasty of hip in England in 1983, the latest year for which informaton is available centrally, was 24 weeks.

Spectacles (Prices)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to conduct a survey of the price of glasses following the abolition of the National Health Service supply.

Mr. Hayhoe: At present I see no need for any more elaborate arrangements than the collection of general informaton on the market prices of budget spectacles.

Child Nutrition

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what studies into child nutrition have been undertaken by or for his Department since 1979.

Mr. Whitney: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys has undertaken three such studies for the Department since 1979: a survey of infant feeding practice in 1980, a dietary survey of schoolchildren, the fieldwork for which was done in 1983, and a 1985 survey of infant feeding practice, for which fieldwork is currently in hand.

NHS (Cost Improvement Programmes)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how he arrived at the total of £150 million anticipated to be saved by cost improvement programmes in the National Health Service in 1985-86 mentioned in his National Health Service annual report 1985.

Mr. Hayhoe: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services told the House on 22 April at columns 629-30, regional health authorities' plans for 1985-86 included proposals for cost improvement totalling £150 million. These proposals are the basis of the figures quoted on page 2 of the National Health Service annual report 1985.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from health authorities about the scope for savings from cost improvement programmes in 1985-86 compared with 1984-85.

Mr. Hayhoe: Regional health authorities themselves put forward proposals for cost improvement totalling £150 million, compared with the £100 million proposed for and achieved in 1984-85, in their short-term programmes for 1985-86, which were approved in April.

School Health Service

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is satisfied with the current state of the school health service.

Mr. Whitney: A total of 59 per cent. of the whole maintained school population was seen by school nurses during child health surveillance programmes in 1984 compared with 47 per cent. in 1979, and this reflects the increase in the number of school nurses employed in the health services in recent years. We are, through the community nursing review and other studies, looking at ways in which community child health services, including the school health service, may be improved.

Voluntary Sector Funding

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment has been made by his Department of the impact on voluntary services in health and social services of the reduction in funding for the voluntary sector which will result from the abolition of the metropolitan counties and the Greater London council.

Mr. Whitney: We believe that adequate arrangements have been made by central Government to enable the boroughs and districts to support worthwhile voluntary sector activity following the abolition of the metropolitan county councils and the Greater London council. Decisions on the most effective use of available resources are for the local authorities concerned.

Inpatient Statistics

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence his Department has on patient attitudes to the reduction in inpatient average stays for hospital maternity services, acute surgical and geriatric services, respectively.

Mr. Whitney: We are not aware of any national surveys covering this point but the patient's attitude, clinical condition and home circumstances would all be important considerations for any consultant in reaching a decision upon the date of discharge.

NHS (Staff Numbers)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) why the number of administrative staff in the National Health Service increased by 10,000 between September 1978 and September 1984;

(2) why the number of ancillary staff in the National Health Service decreased by 20,000 between September 1978 and September 1984;

(3) why the number of technical and professional staff in the National Health Service increased by 20,000 between September 1978 and September 1984.

Mr. Whitney: The changes in the staff groups referred to are as follows:

England—Whole-Time Equivalent

	September 1978	September 1984	Change
Administrative and Clerical	100,300	110,300	10,000
Ancillary	172,200	152,200	−20,000
Professional and Technical (excluding works)	57,200	72,700	15,400

Recruitment and deployment of individual staff and decisions on the staff mix are a matter for health authorities themselves, in the light of local circumstances and service needs. Factors which have influenced the changes in manpower levels over the period in question include, the general increase in hospital activity; the emphasis on improved care for elderly, mentally ill and mentally handicapped people; the introduction of manpower targets in 1983, under which health authorities were asked to reduce overall staffing levels and to improve the proportion of staff involved directly in patient care (medical and dental, nursing and midwifery, and professional and technical staff); improved productivity following the introduction of incentive bonus schemes for ancillary staff; the impact of the Government's initiative on cost improvement, including competitive tendering; and the transfer of 2,700 operating department assistants from the ancillary staffs Whitley Council to the professional and technical 'B' Whitley Council from 1 April 1984.

NHS (Staff Pay)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average pay of an ancillary worker, technician or professional and administrative worker, respectively, in 1984-85.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not available in the form requested. The following average gross weekly earnings for full-time staff in 1984-85 are estimated from returns supplied by 10 English regions.

Ancillary Staff	111·67
Administrative and Clerical Staff	123·92
Professional and Technical Staff*	146·36

* Includes scientists, technicians, speech therapists, opticians, pharmacists and professions allied to medicine.

NHS (Capital Schemes)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those capital schemes mentioned in appendix D of his National Health Service annual report 1985 which were commenced or committed before June 1979.

Mr. Whitney: Following is a list of those hospital developments shown in appendix D of the National Health Service annual report 1985 which were commenced or committed before June 1979.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which of the capital schemes listed in appendix D to his National Health Service annual report 1985 are not in full use.

Mr. Whitney: The cardiac block at the hospital for sick children, Great Ormond street was not brought into use because remedial works became necessary. Of the other 66 capital schemes costing more than £2 million completed between 1979 and the end of 1984 listed in appendix D to the annual report on the National Health Service for 1985, a total of 59 are fully in use. The remainder have elements which have yet to be brought into use, and details are as follows:

Queen's Medical Centre Development Phase 3:—166 beds will be brought into use following planned changes in patterns of services elsewhere in district.

Queen Mary's—Roehampton—Phase 1:—Commissioning of four theatres is to be completed in January 1986.

Southampton General Hospital Phase 5:—28 Geriatric beds awaiting identification of revenue funds.

Derriford DGH Phase 1:—Occupation of the hospital is progressive and will be complete by 1989 following planned changes to the pattern of services elsewhere in district: 270 beds of a total of 570 have been brought into use.

New Cross Wolverhampton Wards and Theatres (Nucleus):—10 beds will be opened when problems in recruiting staff are resolved.

Stafford DGH Phase 4 Main Hospital:—14 obstetric beds are being converted for use as gynaecology beds because of lack of demand.

Royal Liverpool Hospital:—10 beds designated for renal services will be brought into use following changes in overall pattern of services as part of development of regional strategy.

Ambulance Drivers

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether ambulance drivers have to undergo special training before being allowed to drive ambulances on motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Training, including the scope and content of courses, for all health service staff is the responsibility of the National Health Service training authority. Qualified ambulancemen and ambulancewomen are required to undertake a specific course of ambulance driver training at a recognised regional ambulance training centre but this is concerned with driving the vehicle in all circumstances, not specifically on motorways.

Cervical Cancer Screening

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all health authorities with a backlog of more than one month, two months, and three months, respectively, in the processing of cervical smears through pathology laboratories.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what recent information his Department has considered on the recommended interval of five years between cervical smears;

(2) if it remains his policy to support the advice of the Committee on Gynaecological Cytology on the five-year interval between cervical smears.

Mr. Whitney: The Department is advised on all aspects of the cervical screening programme by the independent committee on gynaecological cytology.

Current policy on age and frequency follows its advice. The committee reviews regularly all the relevant scientific and epidemiological evidence available, including information on the frequency of cervical screening. At its last meeting on 22 November it concluded that it should not amend its previous advice that five years is the appropriate interval between smears.

London Health Services

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he remains satisfied that the funds allocated to health authorities in Greater London ensure that the same levels of service are available throughout London.

Mr. Hayhoe: Although there has been considerable progress towards achieving equality of access to services, not only in London but throughout the whole country, more needs to be done. The four Thames regional health authorities, who are the responsible planning authorities for London, have prepared strategies, and progress towards reducing disparities in access will be taken into account in considering their plans and programmes.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of compiling, preparing, printing, circulating, publicising and updating the information package on London's health services proposal by the regional liaison council of his Department; and who will bear the cost.

Mr. Hayhoe: Although some preliminary consideration has been given by officials to the desirability of producing such an information package, I have made no decision about it.

Benefit Entitlement (Earnings Disregard)

Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will increase the earnings disregard for benefit entitlement to £18 per week for the long-term unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Under the Government's Green Paper proposals for the introduction of income support to replace supplementary benefit, the earnings disregard for couples who are unemployed for two years or more would be increased to £15 per week.

Supplementary Benefit Claims (Walthamstow)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the number of supplementary benefit claimants in Walthamstow in each of the past six years.

Mr. Major: The table shows the number of people receiving supplementary benefit from the Department's office at Walthamstow on 30 July 1985 — the latest figures available and at comparable dates in the preceding five years.

	Numbers
July 1985	13,486
July 1984	13,160
July 1983	13,081
July 1982	12,401
July 1981	10,840
July 1980	9,557

Polyunsaturated Margarines

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to increase the availability of margarines high in polyunsaturates in National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. Whitney: The Department's Catering and Dietetic Branch devoted Issue No. 10 of the Health Service Catering Bulletin (August 1985) to healthy food in hospitals, and this included the suggestion that margarines high in polyunsaturates should be more widely available. Further advice on healthy food in hospitals will be given in the next edition of the Branch's publication "Nutrition and Modified Diets" which will be published early next year.

AIDS

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department was first aware that acquired immune deficiency syndrome infected blood supplies from abroad could be dangerous to those suffering from blood disorders; and what action was then taken to seek to combat the danger.

Mr. Hayhoe: Supplies of whole blood are not imported since the United Kingdom is self sufficient in its needs for blood for transfusions; it is only certain blood products which are imported.

In 1983 evidence emerged that in the United States of America haemophiliacs were contracting AIDS. Although the mechanism of infection was not known, it was presumed that it had been transmitted through use of blood products such as Factor VIII. Once the virus HTLV III had been identified as the causative agent (first reported in April 1984) and it had been characterised, experimental evidence suggested that heat-treatment processes could inactivate the virus and could be employed to reduce the risk of transmission. Even before product licences were granted earlier this year, clinicians were free to prescribe imported commercial heat-treated products such as Factor VIII on a named patient basis. All Factor VIII now released for use in the United Kingdom is heat-treated.

Unemployment Pay

26. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the working of the regulations which terminate an individual's right to unemployment pay after three years of working just during the summer.

Mr. Newton: For unemployment benefit purposes a seasonal worker is a person who works for only part of the year (whether just the summer or a longer period) at about the same time each year for long enough to establish a seasonal work pattern, which usually means for each of the last three years. Such a person may receive unemployment benefit during his off season if he can show that he has had or can reasonably expect to obtain a substantial amount of work during that off season. There is no practical way of distinguishing between voluntary and involuntary seasonal workers and the regulation applies to all. I am satisfied that the rule achieves its purpose. The regulation does not apply to supplementary benefit and an unemployed seasonal worker can receive that benefit if otherwise eligible, though there are special rules about income earned during the on season.

Organ Donations

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 12 November, Official Report, columns 160-61, when he hopes to complete his consideration of further measures to maintain the momentum of his 1984 campaign to increase organ donation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: We are constantly looking for new ways of increasing the number of organs becoming available for transplantation and of promoting the donor card scheme, and we continue to support local campaigns and initiatives. A meeting has been arranged in January for representatives of 12 organisations concerned with the promotion of organ donation to discuss possible future initiatives.

Dental Fees

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is currently reviewing the appropriate level of fees within the fee structures of the dental National Health Service for the use of (a) light-cured anterior restoratives and (b) occlusin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: No. Dentists' fees are normally reviewed in the summer of each year.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest available figures for the number of ordinary board and lodging claimants with dependent children under 18 years of age in Wales.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 2 December at columns 129-130.

Voluntary Organisations (Direct Services)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all current or proposed short-term funding initiatives by his Department which include an element of direct services to clients by voluntary organisations which are also within the competence of local social service authorities.

Mr. Whitney: We believe that local authority social service departments are in general best placed to decide on the most effective means of meeting the priority needs in their areas, and that this will often include partnerships with the voluntary sector. The Department's funding for local voluntary sector activity is designed either to explore or demonstrate new or experimental types of services. The short term initiatives are:

Intermediate treatment fund
Intermediate treatment initiative
Under 5s initiative
Helping the Community to Care
Drugs misuse initiative
Tadworth Court

Social Workers (Bolton)

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what additional resources Her Majesty's Government will make available to district councils covering Bolton and surrounding areas to implement recommendations relating to administration, staffing and training of social workers arising from the inquiry into the death of Jasmine Beckford.

Mr. Whitney: It is for local authorities themselves to decide the priority they should give in allocating resources to particular parts of their responsibilities, but we shall be considering very carefully the recommendations of the inquiry into the death of Jasmine Beckford within the programme of work the Government have in hand to help prevent child abuse cases and improve their handling.

Children in Care

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many children were placed under supervision in each year from 1979 to 1984 on grounds of child abuse or neglect;

(2) how many children were in local authority care in each of the years from 1979 to 1984;

(3) how many children were admitted to care in each year from 1979 to 1984 as a result of child abuse or neglect.

Mr. Whitney: Children subject to abuse or neglect can be admitted to care by a variety of legal routes and are not separately identifiable in the statistics held centrally. The information available on children admitted to care for 1979 to 1983 is given in table 1 of "Children in Care of Local Authorities, Year Ending 31 March 1983, England" (A/F83/12), copies of which are available in the Library. Figures for 1984 are given in the table. Information on the number of children in care in England at 31 March from 1979 to 1983 is given in table 2 of the same volume; the number in 1984 is 74,845.

Information is not available centrally on the reasons why supervision orders are made.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the infant mortality rate per 1,000 live births for children (a) under one year, (b) under four weeks, (c) under one week and (d) under 24 hours for the Leeds Western district health authority for 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Whitney: The information is shown in the table. The rates are based on small numbers and are therefore liable to chance variation from year to year.

*Numbers and rates for (a) infant, (b) neonatal, (c) early neonatal and (d) deaths under 24 hours for children in Leeds Western Health Authority 1982-84

Speech Therapists

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average take-home pay of a basic-grade speech therapist working in the National Health Service; and how this compares in real terms with average take-home pay in (a) 1980 and (b) 1983.

Mr. Whitney: We do not have information about take-home pay, which varies with an individual's personal circumstances. New entrant speech therapists normally join the National Health Service in the senior II grade. The pay scales for that grade for the years requested are as follows:

	1 April 1980 £	1 April 1983 £	1 April 1985 £
Minimum	5,330	6,345	6,955
Maximum	6,274	7,468	8,187

These rates do not include London weighting or any other allowances which may be earned.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many vacancies exist for speech therapists in the National Health Service in England and Wales; and what are the equivalent figures for 1980 and 1983.

Mr. Whitney: We do not collect this information centrally.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many speech therapists there are per 1,000 population in England and Wales; and what are the comparable figures for (a) 1980 and (b) 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The figures are as follows:

Speech therapists at 30 September	England and Wales Whole time equivalent per 1,000 population
	1980	1983	1984
England	0·036	0·042	0·046
Wales	0·026	0·033	0·037

Notes:
1. Excludes helpers.
2. Figures for 30 September 1984 are the latest available.

Private Practice

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1979, and for each region, the total number of authorised pay beds, the total number of deaths and discharges of private patients occupying those beds and the average daily occupation of those beds by private patients.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985, c. 482-84]: I regret that the figure for average daily number of beds occupied by private patients in National Health Service hospitals in south-western region for 1983 was erroneously given as 53, and the England total as 1,264. The correct figures should be 42 and 1,253, respectively.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list such information as is available to him, by National Health Service institution, as to the numbers of staff engaged in full or part-time teaching on courses leading to an honours degree in speech science, speech pathology or speech therapy; and if he will give any information he has as to whether their contracts are with the National Health Service or with some other employer.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1985, c. 609-10]: Of the 21 academic staff employed at the National Hospital's college of speech sciences, 20 hold contracts with the National Health Service and one with another employer. All contracts are full-time.

Repatriation Assistance

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy with regard to the granting of assistance for the repatriation back to their country of origin of applicants who have had their supplementary benefit converted to special hardship allowance.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1985, c. 276]: A single payment may be made in limited circumstances to enable certain people who are receiving supplementary benefit to return to their country of origin. It is unlikely that someone receiving special hardship allowance would also be entitled to supplementary benefit, and receipt of special hardship allowance alone does not confer eligibility for help with repatriation expenses under the supplementary benefits scheme. However, most applications for this assistance are now dealt with under a scheme operated by International Social Service of Great Britain. This scheme does not require that the applicant for assistance is in receipt of supplementary benefit.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Technology Group

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the present performance and future role of the British Technology Group.

Mr. Pattie: The role of the British Technology Group (BTG — the name under which the National Research Development Corporation and the National Enterprise Board have been co-operating since 1981) was set out by the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in 1983. The BTG now concentrates its efforts on technology transfer, helping British industry to exploit technology mainly derived from United Kingdom public sector sources. This task is intended to be carried out in such a manner as to become self-financing.

The 1983 statement also required a high priority to be given to the disposal of the group's portfolio of equity investments inherited from the NEB. The corporate plan to carry out these objectives was agreed with Ministers in 1984 and updated in 1985. The BTG has been very successful in meeting these objectives.

On the NRDC side, revenues from technology transfer were significantly better than forecast and the NRDC paid dividends of £2 million to the Exchequer from surplus funds for both 1983-84 and 1984-85. It has also now been agreed that in future NRDC will pay dividends equal to 50 per cent. of the post-tax profits for the previous year, although this would not necessarily be regarded as the upper limit, if the corporation enjoyed a "windfall" profit. It remains a major objective for the NRDC to generate increased revenue from a wider range of inventions than in the past.

On the NEB side, progress on the disposal of equity investments has been very good. The rate of disposals and their value has exceeded expectations and from the disposal proceeds a total of £168 million was paid to the Exchequer as a refund of public dividend capital in 1984-85. A further £22 million has been paid so far in the current financial year. The BTG also repaid outstanding loans of £2 million to the Exchequer in 1984-85.

For the future, the Government regard technology transfer of great importance to British industry, leading to the starting up of new industries and new product lines, with consequential job creation. Mr Ian Harvey, a qualified engineer with experience of industry, the World Bank and consultancy, was appointed chief executive of the BTG in October 1985, to develop the BTG's technology transfer role. This has been accompanied by a reorganisation of the group, to place increased emphasis on technology transfer.

Civil Aviation (Anti-trust Laws)

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, in the light of the recently announced provisional settlement of the class action relating to the collapse of Laker Airways, what is the Government's policy towards the application of the United States anti-trust laws to civil aviation.

Mr. Brittan: The Government have consistently maintained the view that in so far as the activities of airlines are authorised and regulated in accordance with an air services agreement, the domestic laws of a contracting party may not be used to constrain or regulate those activities, unless that is provided for expressly, or is necessary in order to implement the agreement, or the laws can be applied in a manner which is compatible with the agreement. Regulation under the agreement by the contracting parties jointly of matters such as market access, capacity and tariffs necessarily displaces the unilateral application of the domestic competition laws of each party which implements the national economic philosophy of each country and are not designed to deal with the special characteristics and needs of international civil aviation.

In particular, the Government's view is that the unilateral application of United States anti-trust law to air services operated under the United Kingdom-United States air services agreement (Bermuda 2) is not only incompatible with the United Kingdom's rights under the agreement, but is damaging to the trading interests of the United Kingdom. In 1983 the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry exercised his powers under the Protection of Trading Interests Act 1980 to prohibit compliance by persons carrying on business in the United Kingdom with requirements for the enforcement of United States anti-trust laws in relation to activities of United Kingdom airlines and concerning the operation of air services under Bermuda 2.

Our policy is unchanged, and I therefore intend to exercise powers unde that Act to whatever extent is necessary if proceedings under the anti-trust laws were to be begun in the future in United States courts against any United Kingdom airline in relation to air services operated by it under Bermuda 2, and would not envisage consenting to requests to comply with discovery orders made by United States courts in such cases.

While maintaining this position, the Government's longer-term objective is to reach mutually acceptable arrangements as appropriate with foreign Governments to deal with anti competitive behaviour by airlines. As a first step we have indicated to the United States Government that we are ready to discuss these issues with them.

Register of Companies

Mr. Knowles asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made by the Companies Registration Office towards meeting the target for improving the reliability of the register of companies.

Mr. Howard: As was reported to the Public Accounts Committee on 20 June 1984, the Registrar of Companies is aiming to achieve compliance by 80 per cent. of the companies on the register by the middle of 1986.

In May 1984 an estimated 457,000 companies were in default. Only 60,000 of those defaults remain unrectified and the majority of the companies concerned are likely to be struck from the register as defunct. Since then, the Registrar has sent out over 1 million letters to defaulting companies and their directors, has prosecuted over 1,500 directors for failure to deliver accounts and-or returns and has struck off 64,000 companies identified as defunct. In addition, a programme of reminders has begun with the aim of bringing to the attention of directors of companies their filing obligations before companies go into default. A total of 286,000 such letters has been despatched.

Of the 1,004,000 companies on the register at 29 November 1985, 66,000 are in liquidation and will ultimately be removed from the register. A further 143,000 are in the course of being struck off the register. There remain 795,000 active companies; 592,000 (74 per cent.) of these are currently up to date with filing accounts and 631,000 (79 per cent) are up to date with their annual returns. A total of 541,000 (68 per cent.) are in full compliance, some 165,000 more than in May 1984.

The proportion of companies in default for long periods has also decreased. In May 1984 an estimated 400,000 companies were in default for more than six months, compared with the present figure of 150,000.

With over 1 million companies now on the register, the 80 per cent. compliance target effectively means that over 800,000 companies would have to be up-to-date with their filing of both accounts and returns. As there are currently over 200,000 companies in liquidation or in the course of dissolution, I think it more sensible to express the target in terms of the number of active companies and, in addition, to require the Registrar to give particular priority to eliminating the number of companies in default for more than six months.

Progress has so far been considerable. Full compliance now stands at 68 per cent. of active companies. 80 per cent. by mid-1986 is an ambitious target and I am satisfied that the Registrar and his staff are making every effort to reduce the amount of arrears with the continuing co-operation of the accountancy profession, which I gratefully acknowledge.

Life Policies and Unit Trusts

Sir John Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the present number of individuals selling life policies and selling unit trusts who would have to be licensed for part-time as well as full-time work if his proposed legislation came into effect.

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, before deciding whether to compel all individuals selling life policies and all individuals selling unit trusts to become licensed, he will estimate the present number of such persons who would have to be licensed for part-time as well as full-time work.

Mr. Howard: When the Marketing of Investments Board organising committee makes a detailed case to me for the inclusion of licensing in the forth-coming Financial Services Bill, I shall look at all relevant aspects of the case, including what information the committee has on the number of salesmen likely to be covered by such a licensing scheme. It is very difficult to produce firm estimates of the numbers involved, particularly because it ranges from those involved in selling such products on a full-time basis to an even larger number who occasionally sell such products.

Computers and Electronics

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of his staff are directly assisting computer and electronics exporters from the United Kingdom; and what direct funding he is making to such programmes.

Mr. Howard: Staff in my Department engaged in running BOTB export services deal with companies from all industries and details are not available to illustrate how total staff effort, or total export promotion expenditure, breaks down by sector.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what forms of assistance are available to retail developments opting to trade in designated assisted areas.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Retail firms both inside and outside the assisted areas may be able to benefit from the loan guarantee scheme, enterprise allowances and the small firms service. However, regional assistance is not generally available to retail developments serving only the immediate locality because of the net effect of such developments on competitors and jobs in the assisted region.

Rolls-Royce

Mr. Norris asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has appointed merchant bank advisers for the privatisation of Rolls-Royce.

Mr. Pattie: Following my announcement on 4 June, Samuel Montagu and Co. Limited was appointed to give preliminary advice in connection with the privatisation of Rolls-Royce Limited. On 8 November, I indicated that I had received Samuel Montagu's advice, and I confirmed that, subject to market conditions, the Government intended to privatise Rolls-Royce before the end of the present Parliament. I have now decided to appoint Samuel Montagu as the Government's merchant bank adviser for the privatisation itself.

Textiles and Clothing

Mr. James Lamond asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what funds have been made available from the European Community Social Fund for purposes connected with the United Kingdom textile and clothing industries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

The social fund has made the following allocations of funds for the training of workers and former workers in the United Kingdom textile and clothing industries:

1977	2,756,753
1978	5,036,766
1979	1,922,296
1980	1,201,469
1981	1,960,891
1982	3,138,630
1983	3,761,840

With the introduction in 1984 of new social fund rules, the separate budgets for textile and clothing workers and for various other categories were abolished from 1984. The information is therefore not available in the form requested.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Ocean Drilling Programme

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on British participation in the ocean drilling programme.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his reply, 26 November 1985, c. 522]: The United Kingdom is to join the ocean drilling programme (ODP) as a full member. The United Kingdom will be represented through the Natural Environment Research Council, and its Secretary, Dr. John Bowman, has written today to the National Science Foundation of the United States of America applying for membership in the ODP. A group of United Kingdom oil producers—BP, Britoil, Burmah, Enterprise, Shell UK and Tricentrol—have agreed to contribute to the annual subscription of US $2·5 million as have the Departments of Energy, (which will contribute 20 per cent.), Environment, and Trade and Industry. The NERC regards this programme as high priority and will contribute the balance of almost £1 million per annum. The NERC will also provide support to British scientists participating in the cruises and subsequent research.

The involvement of the Government, the NERC and industry underlines the Government's keeness to encourage joint funding in partnership with industry of strategic research projects such as ODP which traditionally have been funded from the public sector.

Her Majesty's Inspectors (Voluntary Colleges)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the average period which elapses between visits by Her Majesty's inspectors to voluntary colleges and the publication of their subsequent reports; what steps he is taking to reduce this period of time; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: Visits by Her Majesty's inspectors to educational establishments, including the voluntary colleges, have a variety of purposes. The majority are informal visits to enable Her Majesty's inspectors to keep in touch with developments in the particular institution. Her Majesty's inspectors report orally to the staff concerned on what they find, but these visits do not lead to published reports. In the academic year 1984-85 all the voluntary colleges in England received at least two such visits and most were visited each term. Formal inspections leading to published Her Majesty's inspectors reports are less frequent. Since 1 January 1983 there have been four such reports on provision in voluntary colleges, in each case initial teacher training in a particular institution. The average time between inspection and publication has been nearly 10 months. It remains the aim of the Department and Her Majesty's Inspectorate, as set out in the 1983 policy statement "The Work of Her Majesty's Inspectorate in England and Wales", that reports be issued to individual institutions within six months of the inspection; ways of accelerating current procedures are being considered.

Eye Disease Research (Grant-aid)

Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what level of grant aid the Medical Research Council makes available to Moorfields eye hospital and the Institution of Ophthalmology for the purposes of research into the inherited eye disease, retinitis pigmentosa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I understand that in the financial year 1984-85 the Medical Research Council spent £74,000 on research into the inherited eye disease retinitis pigmentosa, at the Moorfields eye hospital institute of ophthalmology. The council's overall expenditure in the same financial year on research into this disease amounted to £197,000. The Medical Research Council is always willing to consider soundly based scientific proposals in competition with other applications.

Teachers (Pay)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teachers' pay dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: The teachers' panel of the Burnham committee met on 5 December and resolved to seek an early resumption of negotiations. The management panel is to meet today. The Government will continue to work for a settlement of this damaging and unnecessary dispute of a kind which would secure progress towards its objectives for better schools.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that the latest offer to teachers is made known to school governors and to individual teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The offer made by the management panel on 12 September, and constructed on the Government's conditional willingness to see an extra £1,250 million spent on teachers' pay in the four years 1986-87 to 1989-90, was rejected by the unions after just 20 minutes. That offer is no longer on the table, although the Government's conditional offer of additional resources still stands. The holder of my office does not employ the teachers and I was not in a position to write to them direct about the 12 September offer. However, it is my judgment that most teachers did learn about the content of the offer through their unions, their employers or the educational press.

Children (Special Educational Needs)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the implications for his policy on the education of those with special educational needs of the recent judgment of Mr. Justice Taylor on the education of a dyslexic child from Southampton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is awaiting the transcript of the judgment in this case.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about the proportion of schools which have been modified since 1981 with aids to assist handicapped pupils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not available centrally. However, the Department's building bulletin 61 "Designing for Children with Special Educational Needs — Ordinary Schools", published last year, included guidance on how existing school buildings could be used or adapted for the purpose.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about the proportion of children assessed as to their special educational needs and the proportion of children in special schools on whom statements have been prepared, under the terms of the Education Act 1981.

Mr. Dunn: According to returns submitted to the Department by all LEAs in January 1985 as part of the annual statistical exercise, a total of 127,889 children have statements of special educational needs under the 1981 Act. Overall, this represents 1·6 per cent. of all the school population. It is not possible to identify from the returns the proportion of children in special schools with statements.

The figures for individual LEAs are as follows:

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report, for each local education authority in England, at the latest available date, the number and proportion of children of compulsory school age in (i) mainstream, maintained schools and (ii) special schools whose education is governed by a statement under the provisions of the Education Act 1981.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1985 c. 158]: The number and proportion of children with statements of special educational needs in maintained primary, middle and secondary schools and in maintained and non-maintained special schools in each LEA in January 1985 were as follows:

	Number of pupils with statements in special schools	Number of pupils with statements in primary, middle and secondary schools	All pupils with statements	Percentage of pupils with statements in special schools	Percentage of pupils with statements in primary, middle and secondary schools

Capital Investment

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the gross capital investment in (i) schools and (ii) higher and further education in 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81, 1984-85, 1985-86 and planned for 1986-87, expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1984-85 prices.

Sir Keith Joseph: The information is as follows:

£ million (England)

	Schools		Higher and Further Education
	Cash	1984-85* Real Terms	Cash	1984-85* Real Terms
1970-71	192	927	129	623

Note:

* Real terms are the cash expenditure for each year repriced using the Gross Domestic Product (Market Prices) Deflator (1984-85=100).

University Grants Committee

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the percentage change in the funding of each university by the University Grants Committee between 1980-81 and 1983-84, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home student fees, compensation for redundancy and early retirement, changes to take account of minor capital works from the recurrent grant changes in the level of local authority rates additions made for the information technology and new blood programmes;

(2) what is the percentage change in real terms, measured by the gross domestic product deflator, in the funding of each university by the University Grants Committee between 1980-81 and 1983-84, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home student fees, compensation for redundancy and early retirement, changes to take account of minor capital works from the recurrent grant and changes in the level of local authority rates (a) including and (b) excluding additions made for the information technology and new blood programmes.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1985, c. 161]: The percentage changes in the funding of each university by the University Grants Committee between 1980-81 and 1983-84 in (a) cash and (b) real terms measured by the gross domestic product deflator, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in the level of home student fees, compensation for redundancy and early retirement, provision for capital in recurrent expenditure, local authority rates and additions made for the information technology and new blood programmes are as follows. The percentage changes shown will be in part the consequence of the withdrawal of the overseas student subsidy and to the extent that these losses have been made up by increased fee income will not accurately reflect the changes in the universities financial position.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Exporters

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what help is currently given to British exporters by British embassies and high commissions abroad.

Mr. Rifkind: Over a third of the front-line staff of nearly 200 British embassies, high commissions and consular offices in 130 countries are engaged in the promotion and protection of Britain's commercial and economic interests overseas. The help and advice they give in support of exporters is outlined in the recently-produced booklet "Ambassadors for Exports", copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House and given a wide distribution to the business community.

Nuclear Arms Control

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the current capacity and state of the art of seismographic verification in nuclear arms control.

Mr. Eggar: In our view there are many questions, of both a theoretical and a practical nature, which must be resolved before an adequate verification regime could be established. These difficulties were outlined by my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Luce) in the speech that he made in the House during the Adjournment debate on 7 June at column 617-24. We follow closely developments in seismology to see what contribution, if any, we can make to the resolution of these outstanding difficulties.

South Africa

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to monitor and secure compliance with the United Nations Organisation's ban on arms exports to South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The United Nations arms embargo is implemented in the United Kingdom by means of the Exports of Goods (Control) Order 1985 (as amended). Her Majesty's Customs and Excise is responsible for implementing the control. Any alleged breaches are fully investigated and, where appropriate, prosecutions follow.

Freedom of Worship (Soviet Union)

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the level of compliance by the Soviet Union with those provisions of the Helsinki final act relating to freedom of worship.

Mr. Rifkind: Despite its United Nations and Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe commitments, the Soviet Union does not permit freedom of religion and belief as we know it. Significant numbers of Soviet citizens do attend religious services, but the Council of Religious Affairs maintains tight controls through the requirement to register a congregation and through controls on the printing and distribution of prayer books, and so on. Unofficial worshippers suffer discrimination and harassment and there have been several cases in which individuals who persist in the face of official discouragement have been imprisoned.

Hungary (Visas)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the response to the proposal by the Hungarian Government for abolition of visa requirements between Hungary and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: No. The Hungarian Government have made no proposal for the abolition of a visa requirement.

Appropriation Accounts (Grant)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the specific purpose of the grant of £1,000 in 1984-85 under class II, Vote 2, section B3 of his Department's appropriation accounts, entitled "Palestine".

Mr. Eggar: The payments were for replacement artificial limbs for pensioners of the former Palestine Government and arise because on termination of the mandate for Palestine in 1948 certain liabilities of the former Palestine Government fell to Her Majesty's Government.

DEFENCE

Capital Construction Investment

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the gross capital construction investment on defence, as defined by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81, 1984-85, 1985-86 and planned for 1986-87, expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1984-85 prices.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is as follows:

£ million

	Cash	*1984-85 prices
1971-72†	60	263
1975-76	146	370
1980-81	283	364
1984-85	603	603
1985-86	750	714

* Cash figures have been converted to 1984-85 prices using the GDP (market prices) deflator.

† Information is not available prior to 1971-72.

Provision for 1986-87 is not currently available.

PRIME MINISTER

British War Widows and Associates (Correspondence)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Minister what reply she is sending to the letter sent to her on 2 December by the honorary president/secretary of British War Widows and Associates; and if she will seek Mrs. Strange's agreement to publish the exchange of correspondence in the Official Report.

The Prime Minister: My office will be replying to the honorary president/secretary of British War Widows and Associates on my behalf shortly. It is not my practice to publish correspondence sent to me by members of the public.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency Year

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Energy what degree of interest has been shown by private companies in energy efficiency year since its launch; and what steps they are taking to support this campaign.

Mr. David Hunt: In the short time since Energy Efficiency Year was announced, private companies have shown a substantial level of interest. Over 170 events have already been planned by individual private sector organisations or companies acting together through their trade or professional associations. This is in addition to the substantial number of events being run by my Department, the nationalised fuel industries, universities, local authorities and chambers of commerce. As planning for the year progresses, we would expect private companies to account for an increasing proportion of events. We also expect the breakfast briefing sessions planned during the year to receive the same high level of support from private companies as the original series which finished in May 1985.

Radioactive Material (Reprocessing)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will indicate the percentage of the total amount of radioactive material reprocessed in the B204 plant at Sellafield that arises from electricity board reactors.

Mr. Goodlad: Less than 1 per cent.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list for each year snce the B205 chemical separation plant at Windscale/Sellafield came into operation (a) the weight of plutonium separated from the spent nuclear fuel arising from electricity board reactors and (b) the tonnage of civil spent nuclear fuel processed.

Mr. Goodlad: The total weight of plutonium derived from the boards' reactors cannot be given for national security reasons as explained in note (g) to the answer given to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 23 July 1985 at column 473 and by my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore) in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet) on 9 March 1983 at column 401. However, plutonium production figures such as those given in the answer on 23 July have been provided in each year since 1981.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 27 May 1977 at column 626 for the tonnages of spent fuel reprocessed in B205. This covered the position from 1970-71 to the end of the financial year 1976-77. The figures for subsequent years are:

Year	Tonnes uranium (TeU)
1977-78	867
1978-79	722
1979-80	858
1980-81	888
1981-82	975
1982-83	1,024
1983-84	1,040
1984-85	781

Information about the tonnages of spent fuel reprocessed in the years up to 1970-71 cannot be disclosed for he reasons given in the reply to the hon. Member for Livingston on 12 May 1983 at columns 377-78.

Fast Reactor Programme

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many employees are currently engaged by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority on the fast reactor programme.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) that as at 31 August this year some 2,300 staff were employed at Dounreay, their principal centre for fast reactor development.

Within the authority overall, in terms of qualified scientific and engineering staff, 715 man-years of effort will be deployed on the fast reactor programme in 1985-86 at Dounreay and at other sites. In addition, more junior technical and other ancillary staff provide support to this and to other UKAEA programmes at these locations.

EMPLOYMENT

Graduates (Industrial Training)

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Paymaster General if he will give details of Her Majesty's Government's measures or proposed measures to help and encourage the training of graduates in private industry.

Mr. Trippier: It is primarily the responsibility of employers to provide suitable training for their graduate employees. As part of the adult training campaign, the Government are encouraging employers to recognise the importance of investing in training to improve the skills of their work force at all levels, including graduates. In addition, employees may benefit from the pump-priming training grants available to industry through the Manpower Services Commission, and from the commission's development programmes. Measures of particular relevance to graduates are the national priority skills scheme, under which support is provided to a number of industrial training organisations to help meet graduate level key skill needs in their industries; the graduate gateway programme which encourages new graduates to consider working in new businesses and owners of small business to consider recruiting graduates; and the management development programme, the aim of which is to develop improved methods of management training and to promote the spread of good practice.

Earnings

Mr. McTaggart asked the Paymaster General what were the average gross male industrial earnings in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest figures for the United Kingdom are as follows:

Average gross weekly earnings (£) of full-time adult male employees in manufacturing industry†*

April	Aged 21 and over	On adult rates
1980	124·1	—
1981	136·9	—
1982	152·3	—

† Orders III to XIX of Standard Industrial Classification, 1968, for 1980 to 1982, and divisions 2 to 4 of Standard Industrial Classification, 1980 for 1983 to 1984.

Figures for April 1985 for the United Kingdom are not yet available, although figures for Great Britain are published in table 5.6 of Employment Gazette, November 1985, a copy of which is in the Library.

Wages Inspectors

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General how many of the wages inspectors currently employed are of ethnic origin.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is not currently available. All staff are appointed on the basis of their overall suitability irrespective of ethnic minority origin.

Lambeth

Mr. John Fraser asked the Paymaster General how many people in Lambeth are employed on special employment and training measures in Lambeth, identifying the numbers in respect of each separate employment or training scheme.

Mr. Alan Clark: Some 2,000 people were covered by the employment and training measures in Lambeth at the end of November. Because of the various bases on which local information is collated, an unknown proportion will be in areas outside the borough of Lambeth. The numbers in respect of each scheme are as follows:

	Number
Community Industry	108
Community Programme	289
Enterprise Allowance Scheme	1,364
Job Release Schemes	165
Young Workers Schemes	57

Textiles and Clothing

Mr. James Lamond asked the Paymaster General what funds have been made available from the European Community social fund for the training of workers and former workers in the United Kingdom textile and clothing industries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The social fund has made the following allocations of funds for the training of workers and former workers in the United Kingdom textile and clothing industries:

Year	Amount £
1977	2,756,753
1978	5,036,766
1979	1,922,296
1980	1,201,469
1981	1,960,891
1982	3,138,630
1983	3,761,840

With the introduction in 1984 of new social fund rules, the separate budgets for textile and clothing workers and for various other categories were abolished from 1984. The information is therefore not available in the form requested.

Business Accounts (Delayed Settlement)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Paymaster General when he expects to publish a leaflet setting out practical advice for small firms affected through the delayed payment of accounts by larger firms.

Mr. Trippier: We are aiming to issue practical guidance on this subject early in 1986. It is intended to help purchasing and supplying organisations in the public and private sectors.

Ault and Wiborg Paint Factory (Safety)

Mr. Greenway asked the Paymaster General if, pursuant to the answer of 29 November, Official Report, column 677, he will specify the nature of the safety improvements being carried out at the Ault and Wiborg paint factory at Perivale; and when the work is expected to be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The works being carried out are extensive modifications to the bulk storage facilities and improvements to the distribution system for highly flammable liquids in the factory. The work is due to be completed by the end of 1985.

Special Employment Measures

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General what have been the numbers on special employment measures in each of the last six months.

Mr. Alan Clark: Numbers on the employment and training measures were as follows:

Month in 1985	Number
May	587,000
June	600,000
July	630,000
August	635,000
September	671,000
October	675,000

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Fatchett asked the Paymaster General if he will provide a breakdown of the number of youth training scheme trainees in the Leeds metropolitan district council area on (a) mode A courses and (b) mode B courses, by ethnic group.

Mr. Trippier: The following table shows the number of young people in training on the youth training scheme on 31 October 1985 in the Leeds metropolitan district council area, according to the mode of training and ethnic origin:

In-training on 31 October 1985

Mr. Fatchett asked the Paymaster General if he will provide the number and percentage of youth training scheme trainees in the Leeds metropolitan district council area on (a) mode A courses and (b) mode B courses who leave during the first three months of the course.

Mr. Trippier: Of the young people who joined the youth training scheme in Leeds metropolitan district during the financial year 1984-85, 681 mode A trainees (19 per cent.) and 518 mode B trainees (31 per cent.) left during the first three months of their course. These figures must be treated with caution as they will include young people who may have joined and/or left the scheme more than once during the period.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General how many loans have been made under the small firms loan guarantee scheme in each year since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: The table shows the number of guarantees issued in each financial year since 1981.

Financial year	Number issued
1981-82	3,351
1982-83	6,045
1983-84	4,890
1984-85	2,084
1985-86*	365

* 31 October 1985.

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General what has been the value of the guarantee called in under the small firms loan guarantee scheme in each year since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: The table lists the values of guarantees called in each financial year since 1981.

Financial year	Value £ million
1981-82	0·188
1982-83	14·830
1983-84	34·501
1984-85	42·371
1985-86*	25·72

* To date.

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General how many guarantees called in under the small firms loan guarantee scheme have been the subject of criminal investigation.

Mr. Trippier: The investigation of crime is a matter for the police. Loans covered by the guarantee scheme are made to small firms by banks and other financial institutions, which are entitled to claim under a guarantee following default by the borrower. No claim by a lender under a guarantee has been the subject of a police investigation. Police inquiries into the affairs of a borrower or associated persons have occasionally come to my Department's notice.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Magistrates

Mr. John Fraser asked the Attorney-General (1) if he will provide a breakdown of the political opinions of all magistrates appointed to benches in Greater London in each of the last five years;

(2) how many justices of the peace served for more than eight years after their appointment in each of the last five years.

The Solicitor-General: The information required could not be ascertained except at undue cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Detainees

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young people under 18 years of age were in detention centres at the latest available date; how many were in youth custody; and what was the average cost of a detention centre place and a youth custody place, respectively, at the latest available date.

Mr. Mellor: According to the records held centrally, on 30 September 1985 there were about 690 persons aged under 18 in detention centres, about 1,140 in closed youth custody centres and 280 in open youth custody centres. In addition, about 250 youth custody trainees aged under 18 were being held in prisons and remand centres. The estimated average weekly cost per inmate for 1984-85 was £334 for detention centres, £260 for closed youth custody centres and £294 for open youth custody centres.

Disabled Persons (Prison Sentences)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many registered disabled persons have been sentenced to prison during the last six years for (a) theft and (b) refusal to pay fines.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not available.

Youth Detention Centres and Prisons (Officers)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases have been brought to his attention concerning alleged assaults by officers on inmates in youth detention centres and prisons; and what action he has taken as a result of such complaints.

Mr. Mellor: Statistics of allegations are not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. All allegations of assaults by officers on inmates in prison department establishments are investigated, at the appropriate level and whenever a criminal offence may have been committed the matter is referred to the police.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers in youth detention centres and prisons have been suspended from duty or dismissed during the last five years; and what were the reasons for their suspension or dismissal.

Mr. Mellor: Since 1 January 1981, nine officers serving in prison department young offender estalishments have been dismissed (five following convictions for criminal offences; four for internal disciplinary reasons) and 23 suspended for a range of managerial reasons.

Crime Statistics

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many robberies and burglaries took place in Lambeth district in 1984; and how this compares with the number in 1979.

Mr. Mellor: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information available is as given in the following table. It is not possible to specify all the robberies and burglaries that took place since information is only available on those recorded by the police. Figures for 1979 are not directly comparable with those for 1984 because of changes made by new counting rules which were introduced at the beginning of 1980. For this reason, figures are given for 1980 instead of 1979.

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners sentenced to be detained during Her Majesty's pleasure before 1955 are still so detained.

Mr. Mellor: According to the records held centrally, on 30 September 1985 two persons were detained during Her Majesty's pleasure in a prison department establishment in England and Wales having been sentenced before 1955. Both had been recalled following release on licence.

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners convicted for murder in each year from 1970 to 1977 have since been released from prison; and what was the length of sentence served for each prisoner released.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted murderers released from prison since 1975 have committed murder a second time; and what was the average sentence served for the first offence.

Mr. Mellor: According to the records held centrally, four sentenced murderers released from prison department establishments in England and Wales since 1975 have been sentenced for further murders committed following release. The average time they spent under sentence in prison department establishments in England and Wales for the first murder was about twelve and a half years.

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been sentenced to be detained during Her Majesty's pleasure in each year since 1970.

Mr. Mellor: The information is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables": for 1983 and 1984 in volume 2, table S2.1(A) under offence classification 1 (murder) in column (24); and for earlier years in table S2.1(a)(i).

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many convictions for manslaughter occurred for each year between 1964 and 1985, resulting in the deaths of children (a) under five years, (b) aged five years to 10 years and (c) aged 11 to 16 years; and what was the average sentence served;

(2) how many children (a) aged under five years, (b) aged five years to 10 years and (c) aged 11 to 16 years have been murdered in each year since 1965.

Mr. Mellor: Information on offences of homicide by age of victim is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales": in table 4.6 of the issue for 1984 (Cmnd. 9621) and in the corresponding tables for earlier years. For victims aged under 16, the available information on convictions for murder and manslaughter is given in the following two tables. Provision of corresponding details for earlier years would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were sentenced to be detained during Her Majesty's pleasure for each year between 1955 and 1970; how many have sought a review of their sentence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested on those sentenced to be detained during Her Majesty's pleasure is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales". Of the 48 so sentenced in the years 1955 to 1970, one prisoner sentenced in 1965, one sentenced in 1968 and one sentenced in 1969 were still in prison department establishments on 30 September 1985. Statistics of how many such prisoners have sought a review of their sentences by way of an appeal or otherwise are not readily available.

City Fraud Squad

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied that the present strength of the city fraud squad is adequate to deal with impending fraud investigations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The commissioner's commitment to combating fraud is demonstrated by the contribution of 63 detective officers of his force's establishment to the Metropolitan and City company fraud branch. The deployment of additional officers to fraud duties from within the City and Metropolitan forces is a matter for the commissioners.

Keith Lionel Jones

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied that Keith Lionel Jones, L37780, a remand prisoner at Pentonville prison is receiving the medical treatment he requires.

Mr. Mellor: Yes. Mr. Jones has been receiving treatment at Pentonville and arrangements are being made for him to be seen by an outside specialist.

Remanded Persons (Court Hearings)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) males and (b) females remanded in custody awaiting trial were not produced at their court hearings at the due date due to shortage of prison staffs in the metropolitan area in each of the months of 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available centrally and could only be collected at disproportionate cost.

Capital Investment

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the gross capital investment in (i) prisons, (ii) police stations and (iii) courts in 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81, 1984-85, 1985-86 and planned for 1986-87, expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1984-85 prices.

Mr. Hurd: I set out information about the services for which I am responsible:

For the years to 1984-85 the figures reflect gross outturn, for 1985-86 the forecast of gross outturn and for 1986-87 the planned gross provision. The totals cover acquisition of land and buildings, construction including staff housing, and vehicles, plant and machinery.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is (a) the basic salary, (b) average earnings, (c) the value of fringe benefits and (d) average overtime for each rank in the Metropolitan police force in each year since 1979; and if he will give the percentage rise for police officers by rank using 1980 wage levels as the base line.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Bob Astles

Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the conditions on which Mr. Bob Astles has been granted entry into the United Kingdom; for what length of time; whether any restrictions will apply whilst he remains in the United Kingdom, and if he has applied for his British nationality to be reinstated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: We agreed to the admission of Mr. Astles to the United Kingdom because he is entitled to, and has applied for, registration as a British citizen under section 10(1) of the British Nationality Act 1981, and the Home Secretary has no discretion to refuse such an application. He travelled to this country on a declaration of identity issued by our high commission in Kampala. He was admitted for three months in the first instance, without other restrictions.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Diligence

48. Mr. McKelvey asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what provision he is making for consultations on the Scottish Law Commission report on diligence.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: A consultation paper was issued by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate on 14 November inviting comments on the report from a number of bodies and individuals who were thought to have an interest in the proposed reforms.

Copies of the consultation paper are available in the Library.

High Court (Work Load)

49. Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how much the work load of the High Court has increased in each of the last five years, giving figures for each year.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The work load of the High Court breaks down into several categories and figures for each are given in the table. the percentage increase for each category in each year is given as shown and the percentage increase over the whole period is given in the last column.

Drunken Driving

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many cases are currently being pursued by procurators fiscal relating to alleged offences of drunken driving; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Statistics recording the information sought by the hon. Member are not kept. However, provisional figures for 1984 indicate that of 14,976 offences recorded, 14,296 were prosecuted and 13,556 were successfully proved, representing a conviction rate in excess of 90 per cent.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table to indicate by how much thresholds could be raised on a revenue-neutral basis if a new band of income tax were introduced at 35 per cent. on taxable incomes of (a) £6,000, (b) £8,000 and (c) £10,000.

Mr. Moore: By about 8 per cent., 5 per cent. and 3 per cent. respectively in 1986-87 over and above the indexation of allowances and thresholds illustrated in the Autumn Statement 1985. These estimates assume that the 35 per cent. rate would apply to taxable income between the stated levels and the indexed 40 per cent. threshold of £17,100.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many customs officers were employed in drug detection duties over the past 12 months; and what number he estimates will be so engaged over the forthcoming year;

(2) what steps he is taking to see that customs officers have adequate capital equipment, such as X-ray machines, to assist in the detection of drug imports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Departmental Staffs

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff-in-post in central Government Departments at 1 October.

Mr. MacGregor: At 1 October 1985 there were 595,764 staff-in-post — 495,981 non-industrials and 99,783 industrials.

EC (Budget Contributions)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the net contribution paid by Britain to the EEC in each year from 1979 to the latest date for which figures are available and if he will list the figures (a) in cash terms (b) in real terms at 1985 prices and (c) as a proportion of the total EEC budget.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 10 December 1985]: The figures requested are as follows:

Year	Cash*	Constant 1985 prices	†Per cent. of Community budget
1979	947	1,571	10·2
1980	706	977	7·3

Inland Revenue (Enforcement Powers)

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish his consultation document on the enforcement powers of the Inland Revenue; and if it remains his intention to include provisions on those matters in the Finance Bill 1986.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 9 December 1985, c. 542]: The Keith committee identified a need to modernise the powers and rights which regulate the day-to-day working relationship between the Inland Revenue, taxpayers and tax advisers. These matters have been the subject of detailed consultation with a number of interested parties over recent months. Although good progress has been made, there remain a number of points which require further examination and the Inland Revenue has therefore been authorised to continue its consultations for a further period. Accordingly, the Government now hope during 1986 to publish draft clauses, representing their conclusions, with a view to legislation in 1987.

The Inland Revenue will also be continuing, for a further period, its consultations on the proposals made in volume 3 of the report.

WALES

Capital Investment

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the gross capital investment in (i) schools and (ii) higher and further education in 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81, 1984-85, 1985-86 and planned for 1986-87 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1984-85 prices;

(2) what was the gross capital investment in (i) trunk roads and (ii) local roads in 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81, 1984-85, 1985-86 and planned for 1986-87 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1984-85 prices;

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Gross public sector capital expenditure in Wales for the services requested is estimated to be as follows:

£ million

The sums shown for 1980-81 and onwards are consistent with those which will underlie the forthcoming White Paper on public expenditure.

The figures shown at 1984-85 prices have been derived by the application of the GDP market price deflators.

On account of changes in definition, the figures for the years before 1980-81 may not be strictly comparable in every case.

The 1970-71 figures for schools and further education are not readily available. The education service in Wales did not then come within my responsibility.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Consolidation Measures

Mr. White asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will list the consolidation measures Her Majesty's Government propose to introduce during the coming Session.

The Solicitor-General: I have been asked to reply.

A Bill dealing with agricultural holdings in England and Wales was introduced in another place on 3 December. Bills relating to sea fisheries, insolvency and winding up, opticians and parliamentary constituencies are being prepared with a view to introduction this Session, and it is hoped it may prove possible to prepare one or two others.

TRANSPORT

Advertising

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for Transport what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament over each of the last 10 years, respectively; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Ridley: The advertising agencies appointed to handle campaigns involving communication of information on subjects for which my Department is responsible to Parliament over the past five years, plus the subject of each capaign and how much was spent on each, was as follows:

National Bus Company

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has had any discussions with the National Bus Company about reallocation of capital resources consequent upon implementation of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend and I have had a number of discussions with the National Bus Company on the restructuring of its operations to prepare for deregulation and privatisation.

M1

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport why there are at present no plans for additional lanes or carriageways on the M1.

Mrs. Chalker: I am awaiting the outcome of the wider review of motorway capacity announced in "National Roads England 1985" to establish whether there is a need for any additional capacity on the M1.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the effect of the addition of separate outer lanes for short-distance traffic on the M1 northwards from the M25 to junction 10; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: A scheme to widen the M1 between junctions 5 and 8, at some points to four lanes, was completed in November 1983. The three-lane southbound carriageway between junctions 6A (with M25) and 7 (with M10) was built with overbridges wide enough to accommodate a fourth lane if one proves necessary in the future. The Department has made no assessment of the effect of further widening, but the carrying capacity of the M1 is currently under review.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has made of ways of increasing the capacity of the M1 between the M25 and Milton Keynes.

Mrs. Chalker: The Department has begun a national review of motorway capacity which includes the M1. The study will identify stretches of motorway that may need relief or widening by the end of the century.

Trunk Road Schemes

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport what trunk road schemes are under study or in preparation along the M1/A5 corridor between the M25 and M45.

Mrs. Chalker: Bypasses for traffic on the A5 through Dunstable in Bedfordshire and Little Brickhill in Buckinghamshire were added to the trunk road programme in June 1985. I expect to appoint design agents within the next few weeks.

A5 (Milton Keynes)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the average daily traffic flow and the maximum design flow on the A5 diversion, Milton Keynes.

Mrs. Chalker: The most recent survey, taken in 1984, showed that on average about 16,000 vehicles a day were then using the A5 diversion through Milton Keynes. A road of this standard would normally be expected to cope satisfactorily with 30,000 vehicles per day.

Noise Insulation

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any proposals to update the noise insulation regulations to deal with the position of dwellings adjacent to highways which have not been improved since 1969; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We are considering with other Departments the possibility of selective changes in the present arrangements for providing insulation against increased traffic noise associated with the road schemes of highway authorities. I cannot, however, encourage the hope of any general retrospective provision for unimproved roads in existence before the cut off date of the current noise insulation regulations.

Capital Investment

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the gross capital investment in (i) trunk roads and (ii) local roads in 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81, 1984-85, 1985-86 and planned for 1986-87, expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1984-85 prices.

Mrs. Chalker: The 1984-85 price base is not yet available for trunk roads. All figures have been provided therefore at 1983-84 prices. Future years plans are shown only in cash.

Bus and Coach Safety

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been conducted by or for his Department into the potential benefit to the safety of bus and coach passengers involved in accidents of requiring buses and coaches to be constructed with roll over bars in the roof structure; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Research undertaken for my Department by the Cranfield Institute of Technology and the Motor Industry Research Association has been a major input into a new European standard on coach roof strength. We will shortly be publishing formal proposals to require new coaches to meet this and other safety requirements.

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents to buses and coaches in 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively, involved the rolling-over of the vehicles.

Mrs. Chalker: The number of buses and coaches which overturned after accidents in Great Britain in 1982, 1983 and 1984 is as follows:

Year	Number
1982	19
1983	20
1984	12

Calder Valley Motorway

Mr. Dover asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive and publish the consultant's report on the linking of the existing Calder Valley motorway to the M61 and M6 in Lancashire.

Mrs. Chalker: I expect to receive the consultant's report later this month and to make an announcement in the spring.

Helicopters (Offshore Diversions)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if the CAA has reached any conclusions about the use of offshore diversions for helicopters?

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to the reply, 10 December 1985]: The Civil Aviation Authority has informed me that it has not yet reached a conclusion about the use of offshore diversions for helicopters. An analysis of the total risk involved in the use of offshore diversions is being undertaken and should be complete early in 1986.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Tricinosis

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has given any advice or undertakings to horse slaughterers who are engaged in the export trade to France about the tests for tricinosis required since 12 November.

Mrs. Fenner: My Department has issued advice to exporters about the certification and testing arrangements required to meet the additional import requirements introduced by the French authorities. I have undertaken to relieve the industry of the cost of carrying out the examinations for trichinae. The EC Commission, at our request and that of other member states, are considering the validity of the French measures.

Agriculture (Long-term Planning)

Mr. Maclean asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has within his Department a section which specialises in long-term strategic planning for the agriculture industry.

Mr. Jopling: My Department does not currently have a specific section which specialises in long-term planning for the agricultural industry. Many staff in many parts of the Department are regularly involved in studying the trends and prospects in agriculture and in the other industries with which we are concerned, taking into account wider aspects including the rural economy, consumers and the environment.

Aspartame

Mr. Dykes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress the Food Advisory Committee is making with its review of the use of Aspartame in aqueous solutions.

Mrs. Fenner: In its report (FAC/REP/34) the Food Additives and Contaminants Committee recommended a review of intake levels of permitted sweeteners within five years of the implementation of regulations following the report. The market is continuing to develop and it is not yet appropriate for a start to be made on the review.

Market Regulation

Mr. Soames asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide details of expenditure in 1984-85 and 1985-86 by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce and the agricultural departments on market regulation under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Jopling: Details are given below of the outturn for 1984-85 and the latest forecast of outturn for 1985-86.

Expenditure includes the beef and sheepmeat variable premium schemes (net of clawback for sheepmeat and charges on beef exported and sold into intervention), the premium schemes for the non-marketing of milk and the conversion of dairy herds, suckler cow premium scheme, annual premium on ewes, refunds on imports and exports (net of levies), the butter and school milk subsidies, and the net cost of buying commodities into intervention less proceeds from sales. It also takes account of certain receipts treated as negative expenditure, namely monetary compensatory amounts levied on intra-Community trade and the co-responsibility and supplementary levies on milk producers. Of the estimated outturn for 1985-86, £1,253·4 million is expected to be financed from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund compared with £1,120·1 million in 1984-85. In addition the EAGFF contribution towards the cost of financing intervention stocks is estimated at £77·8 million for 1985-86 compared with £39·5 million in 1984-85. Some of the expenditure shown above benefits consumers and trade interests rather than United Kingdom producers.

Mr. Maclean asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of expenditure in 1984-85 and 1985-86 by the agricultural departments on agricultural grants and subsidies excluding market regulation under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Jopling: Details are given below of the outturn for 1984-85 and the latest forecast of outturn for 1985-86.

Some of this expenditure attracts contributions from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund. These are mainly received in the following year. In 1985-86 £55·3 million is expected to be received from the fund compared with £52·5 million in 1984-85.

The individual figures may not add up to the totals shown due to roundings.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Conway asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting held in Brussels on 9 and 10 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made to the House earlier today.

Regional Land Drainage Committees

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the members, and their occupations, of each of the Regional Land Drainage Committees.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 10 December 1985]: The information requested is given below. Details of the ministerial appointees are current; those relating to local and water authority appointments are as at August 1985.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing the total amount of money paid to Britain under the European Economic Community common agricultural policy in each year from 1979 to the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will list the figures (a) in cash terms, (b) in real terms at 1985 prices and (c) as a proportion of the total European Economic Community budget.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 10 December 1985]: The information requested, rounded to nearest £10 million, is set out in the table:

Field Drainage

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and food whether the field drainage design service, including conservation advice, will be available to the non-agricultural sector, such as sporting interests.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 9 December 1985, c. 484]: As part of the agricultural services scheme the field drainage design scheme is not available to the non-agricultural sector.

ENVIRONMENT

Water

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he intends to publish the Watts report on water metering;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to permit water authorities to enter into trials of universal metering provided that the trials are financed by the contracting company, repayable by the authority over not less than 10 years.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce legislation to establish compulsory water metering.

Mr. John Patten: The report of the joint study group under the chairmanship of Mr. R Watts, chairman of the Thames Water Authority, is being published today by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. I have placed copies in the Library.

The Government welcome the report. It presents a new view of the economic aspects of domestic water metering. Unlike earlier studies, it concludes that in some circumstances charging households by means of water metering may be cost effective.

This radically alters the options: and justifies undertaking the extensive trials which the report calls for.

We shall legislate at the earliest suitable opportunity to make progress possible. But before responding to all the recommendations in detail I intend to seek the views of water consumers and others who may be affected. I shall work out with the industry a programme of follow up action.

Public Money Allocations (Wolverhampton)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the overall identifiable allocation of public money made by the Government since 1979 to Wolverhampton (i) in total, (ii) per person, (iii) per unemployed person, (iv) per unemployed person aged 21 years and (v) per retirement pensioner.

Mrs. Rumbold: The available information is given in the table.

Notes:

1. The figures include rate support grant, housing subsidies, housing benefit, specific revenue grants and capital grants. Capital grants are not available however for 1984-85 and 1985-86. The amounts included for capital grants in the totals for the earlier years are shown in brackets under line (i) of the table.
2. The figures included for rate support grant are affected by the change which occurred in 1981-82 when block grant and domestic rate relief grant superseded the needs, resources and domestic elements. Figures prior to 1981-82 are not on a comparable basis.
3. Up to 1982-83 the figures include rent and rate rebates paid by the DOE. The 1982-83 figures also include some housing benefits paid by the DHSS. Thereafter, all housing benefits were paid by the DHSS.
4. The figures only include grants and subsidies to the Wolverhampton district council and do not include any payments to persons, companies or other organisations within the area administered by that authority. Information on the latter is not readily available. If such payments could be included, the figures would be very much larger.
5. The figures also exclude any proportion of the grants paid to West Midlands county council which is the upper tier authority for Wolverhampton.
6. Estimates of population figures for use in calculating lines (ii) and (v) of the table were obtained from OPCS. 1984-85 figures have been used as estimates for 1985-86.
7. The figures in lines (iii) and (iv) are based on unemployment data from the Department of Employment. These are not available before 1983-84. Figures for unemployed persons under 20 have been used in place of those for persons under 21, which are not available. These can only be supplied for 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Capital Investment

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the gross capital investment in (i) housing and (ii) local environmental services in 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81, 1984-85, 1985-86 and planned for 1986-87 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1984-85 terms.

Sir George Young: Gross capital investment in housing in the United Kingdom was as follows:

	Cash £ million	1980 prices £ million
1970-71	1,930	8,754
1975-76	5,011	9,369
1980-81	8,358	7,955
1984-85	12,117	8,848

Figures for 1985-86 are not yet available. There are no planning figures for 1986-87. Cost figures are calculated at 1980 prices.

Gross capital investment in local environmental services (excluding coast protection) in England is as follows:

	Cash £ million	1984-85 prices £ million
1970-71	194	938
1975-76	408	1,038
1980-81	664	854
1984-85	879	879
*1985-86	780	743

Derelict Land

Mr. Parris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the expenditure on derelict land reclamation undertaken with the aid of grant, by West Derbyshire district council from 1980-81 to 1984-85 and on its allocation for 1985-86.

Sir George Young: Grant aided derelict land reclamation activity by West Derbyshire district council increased during the period 1980-81 to 1984-85. Reclamation expenditure by the council was £293,000 over this period. In 1985-86, about £123,000 will be spent. the major current reclamation scheme is at Butts road, Darley Dale, where land is being reclaimed for private housing. It is expected that the value of private investment on this site will be six times the expenditure on reclamation.

Chatham (Enterprise Zone)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now in a position to make an announcement about an enterprise zone in the non-historic part of the dockyard at Chatham.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am keen that the former dockyards should be regenerated by modern development bringing new jobs.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King) announced in the House on 10 May 1983 that statutory invitations had been sent to certain local authorities in north-west Kent to prepare jointly a scheme for an enterprise zone in their areas. He added at that time that consideration would be given to the designation of part of the non-historic dockyard at Chatham as an enterprise zone when it became surplus to defence requirements.

I have received a joint application from Rochester-upon-Medway city council and Gillingham borough council for such a zone. I am pleased to announce my agreement to this subject to satisfactory arrangements being agreed on the boundaries of the zone, the planning regime in the zone and the administrative arrangements to be adopted.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the shares of (i) block grant and (ii) rate support grant paid to (a) London, (b) metropolitan areas and (c) non-metropolitan areas at (i) budget and (ii) estimated outturn in each year from 1981-82 to 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [pursuant to his answer, 9 December 1985, c. 473]: The available information is as follows:

Local Government Act 1985

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 5 December, Official Report, columns 297-98, if he will explain why 101 applications for consent under the Local Government Act 1985 from the Greater London council are still outstanding after three months.

Mr. Tracey: Each application needs to be considered carefully on its merits. In at least 50 cases my right hon. Friend is awaiting further information requested from the council.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 5 December, Official Report, column 297-98, about outstanding requests for consent under the Local Government Act 1985, if he will explain why the figures supplied do not add up.

Mr. Tracey: Neither the hon. Member nor his hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) requested details of the number of applications outstanding for between two and three months. Accordingly, those figures were excluded from my answer.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 5 December, Official Report, columns 297-98, if he will list each of the applications for consent under sections 91 and 92 of the Local Government Act 1985 and section 9 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 as amended by section 93 of the 1985 Act from (a) Greater Manchester, (b) Merseyside, (c) South Yorkshire, (d) Tyne and Wear, (e) the West Midlands and (f) West Yorkshire that have been outstanding for over three months.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list former members of regional and district health authorities and family practitioner committees whose membership has not been renewed in 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Hayhoe: Regional health authorities appoint members of district health authorities and, before 1 April 1985, district health authorities appointed members of family practitioner committees. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairmen of the health authorities concerned for the information he requires which is not held centrally.

The last review of regional health authority membership was in 1984. Details of members not reappointed — but excluding those who retired or resigned—in that year are as follows:

Binder Hamlyn Report

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he proposes to publish the Binder Hamlyn report on primary care.

Mr. Hayhoe: This is being considered in the context of the preparation and publication of the Green Paper on primary health care.

Cardiac Bypass

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking to meet in full the demand for cardiac bypass operations.

Mr. Whitney: The provision of services for patients requiring cardiac bypass operations is a health authority responsibility. In January 1984 and again in January 1985 health authorities were asked to develop facilities for coronary artery surgery as a priority within the acute sector. This is one of the recognised priorities within the resources generated by authorities' cost improvement programmes.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average percentage level of mortality in the course of, or immediately following, heart bypass operations; and which district had the highest level and which district had the lowest in the last full year for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: According to information provided in the United Kingdom cardiac surgery register of the Society of Thoracic and Cardiovascular Surgeons, the mortality rate in all coronary artery bypass grafts performed in the United Kingdom in 1983 was 4·8 per cent. For all open heart operations, which include valve and cogenital heart disease operations as well as coronary artery bypass grafts, the mortality rate was 7·0 per cent. Information on mortality rates in individual districts is not available centrally.

Renal Failure

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients suffering from chronic renal failure were treated in 1984; and how many were not.

Mr. Whitney: According to information supplied by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, 11,235 patients with chronic or end stage renal failure were receiving treatment in the United Kingdom at 31 December 1984. No information is available on the total number of patients with chronic renal failure who might have benefited from treatment.

Health Services Board (Membership)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make it a condition of membership of the Health Services Board that each member shall be treated only in the National Health Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: No. Such a restriction upon an individual's freedom of choice within the United Kingdom would be quite intolerable and when abroad would be patently absurd.

Post Operative Infection

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the level of post operative infection for each health district in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to my predecessor's reply to him on 20 June at column 202. An analysis of these figures by district health authority is not available from the sample information held centrally.

NHS (Staff Pay)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the total National Health Service wage bill was paid to ancillary workers, technicians or professional workers and administrative staff, respectively, in each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Whitney: Following is the information requested derived from the annual accounts of health authorities in England:

	Ancillary Staff Per cent.	Professional and Technical Staff Per cent.	Administrative and Clerical Staff Per cent.
1978-79	21·8	9·7	12·5
1979-80	21·1	9·8	11·9
1980-81	19·1	9·5	11·6
1981-82	18·8	9·8	11·7
1982-83	18·4	10·1	11·2
1983-84	18·0	10·2	11·2
1984-85	16·5	10·6	11·4

Notes:
1. Payments to doctors, dentists, pharmacists, opticians and others contracted with the National Health Service to provide family practitioner services are excluded.
2. The expenses of the Dental Estimates Board and special health authorities providing National Health Service central services, for which detailed analyses of staff pay are not readily available, are also excluded.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will produce figures showing changes in real terms in expenditure, after allowing for inflation measured by the National Health Service cost deflator equivalent, to the figures given in his National Health Service annual report 1985 covered by note 3 of appendix B.

Mr. Hayhoe: The expression "real terms" refers to changes in expenditure by reference to movements in general inflation, the accepted measure for which is the GDP deflator; "real terms" cannot be applied to specific National Health Service pay and price movements.

There are in fact only a limited number of places in the report where figures for expenditure are given in real terms and these mainly relate to social services expenditure to which National Health Service pay and price movements have no relevance. The two references to National Health Service expenditure in real terms both occur on page 2 of the annual report. In the case of total National Health Service spending the equivalent figure for which the hon. Member asks is given. In the case of capital expenditure the equivalent figure to the 5·8 per cent. real terms growth in 1984-85 is 6·4 per cent.

Social Workers (Education Standards)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department issues any guidance to (a) local authorities and (b) voluntary organisations concerning minimum education standards for social workers.

Mr. Whitney: No. Qualifying courses in social work are approved by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work, which is appointed by the Government for the purpose. It is the responsibility of employing authorities and organisations to determine whether to employ qualified social workers and in what posts, to decide what educational standards to require of unqualified staff and to provide appropriate initial and in-service training for them.

Local Authority Social Services (Registration)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to establish a statutory system of registration for social workers.

Mr. Whitney: There are no such plans. The views in the report of the working party on the role and tasks of social workers under the chairmanship of Mr. Peter Barclay, in the responses to that report and in further consultations carried out by the Department do not persuade me that at present the potential benefits of the statutory registration of social workers outweigh the possible disadvantages.

Cervical Cancer Screening

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any health authority has indicated to him an intention to have cervical smears examined abroad in order to reduce backlogs in pathology laboratories.

Mr. Hayhoe: No.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average time taken by a health authority to process a cervical smear through a pathology laboratory; and how this figure compares with previous years.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the information on which to calculate such an average is not available centrally.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all family practitioner committees which possess a computer capable of operating a cervical screening call and re-call scheme, distinguishing between those which will carry out all other computerised functions of a family practitioner committee and those which will not.

Mr. Hayhoe: The 45 family practitioner committees listed have computers capable of operating a cervical screening call and recall scheme, of which 35 (above the line) are equipped with computers capable of other functions, primarily patient registration and certain finance tasks.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's estimate of the total cost of running a fully computerised system of call and re-call for cervical cancer screening covering all women in the age groups at risk in every part of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hayhoe: District health authorities are responsible for cervical cancer screening. Many have arranged for a family practitioner committee to operate computerised call and recall systems on their behalf. The re-chargeable costs are a matter for local negotiation between the district health authority(s) and the family practitioner committee, and because this is the first year of separate funding for family practitioner committees no figures are held centrally on which to base an estimate of the total running costs.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all health authorities, family practitioner committees and community health councils, respectively, which have expressed concern to his Department about delays in processing cervical smears in pathology laboratories.

Mr. Hayhoe: Organisation of cervical cancer screening including provision of laboratory facilities is a health authority responsibility. I would not therefore expect health authorities to express concern to my Department on this subject and have not identified any such cases. Concerns from family practitioner committees or community health councils will have been referred to the responsible health authority. Such cases cannot readily be identified.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate when all health authorities will have a fully computerised system for identifying women in the high risk category for cervical cancer.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 6 December 1985, c. 401-2]: All district health authorities have been asked to arrange with their corresponding family practitioner committees to implement computerised call and recall systems for cervical cancer screening and it is estimated that this objective should be fully achieved by March 1988.

Health Service Commission (Reports)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to change the law so that Health Service Commission reports have to be published locally.

Mr. Whitney: The existing arrangements for publication of the commissioner's reports, and their confidential nature, make local publication unnecessary and inappropriate.

Dysentery

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has carried out any investigation into the causes of the quadrupling of dysentery rates since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Notifications of dysentery in England and Wales from 1979-84 were as follows:

	Number
1979	2,787
1980	2,709
1981	3,401
1982	2,850
1983	5,004
1984	6,844

Notifications of dysentery have fluctuated considerably since 1919 when the disease became notifiable. The reason for this is unknown.

Part of the increase in recent years is thought to be due to more effective reporting arrangements to local medical officers for environmental health and the Government financed communicable disease surveillance centre.

MOEHs investigate outbreaks of dysentery and recommend preventive measures in the light of local circumstances. The CDSC monitors the incidence of the disease and provides expert advice on local control measures as appropriate.

Dental Services

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the average length of time for a section 21 appeal in the general dental service to be heard; and what plans he has for speeding up appeal hearings;

(2) what criteria are used when selecting referees for section 21 appeals;

(3) if he will make it his policy to restrict the appointment of referees in section 21 appeals to those currently on the dental list of a family practitioner committee;

(4) if he will enlarge the list of referees for section 21 appeals (i) by accepting nominations from the General Dental Practitioners Association and (ii) by including all those on the dental list of family practitioner committees who are prepared to carry out this duty.

Mr. Hayhoe: The average time from the date of an appeal under regulation 21 of the National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations to the hearing is six months. Additional staff have been recruited and the number of referees available has also been increased to cope with a very large increase in the number of appeals since 1983.

In accordance with the regulations referees are selected from two lists of dentists. The first list comprises dentists selected by the British Dental Association, which is recognised as representative of the dental profession. The second is drawn up by my Department and comprises dentists of good standing who have indicated their willingness to serve. For each hearing one referee is selected from each of the two lists. My Department is always willing to consider any dentist who is willing to serve as a referee for inclusion in the list.

The selection of referees for individual hearings is primarily a question of their location, availability and, for cases where specialist knowledge is desirable such as orthodontics, relevant expertise.

The vast majority of dentists appointed as referees are currently in contract with family practitioner committees. I have no plans however to confine the appointment of referees to such dentists.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to end the advertising and promotion in any form of tobacco products.

Mr. Whitney: The Government's policy is to continue to restrict tobacco advertising and promotion by means of voluntary agreements.

Parallel Imports

Mr. Laurie Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, if parallel imports of the kind listed in the document sent to him by the hon. Member for Brent, South are available to pharmacists.

Mr. Hayhoe: At the date specified (31 October 1985), the licensing authority had not granted any parallel import product licences for the medicinal products named in the list provided by the hon. Member in respect of the countries of origin quoted.

Anyone with knowledge that these or other unlicensed medicinal products were on offer to pharmacists at that date should bring this to the attention of the enforcement branch in the medicines division of my Department.

Pensions

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to make regulations on disclosure of information by occupational pension schemes; and whether he intends to set up a register of pension schemes as provided for in the Social Security Act 1985.

Mr. Newton: We intend to bring regulations on disclosure of information into effect during 1986. This will be a little later than originally planned, in response to requests in a number of replies to the consultative document to allow pension schemes more time to examine the detail of the regulations and make any administrative changes which are necessary before they come into effect.

Meanwhile, I have today laid regulations concerning other important aspects of the occupational pension provisions of the Social Security Act 1985, for example in giving better protection for the rights of early leavers. These are:

The Occupational Pension Schemes (Transfer Values) Regulations 1985,
The Contracting-Out (Transfer Premiums) Regulations 1985,
The Occupational Pension Schemes (Revaluation) Regulations 1985,
The Occupational Pension Schemes (Discharge of Liability) Regulations 1985,
The Contracting-Out (Protection of Pensions) Regulations 1985,
The Occupational Pension Schemes (Preservation of Benefit) Amendment Regulations 1985.

In considering the need for a register of pension schemes, account has been taken of the estimated costs and staff numbers involved in setting up and running it, the burden which would be placed on schemes and the benefits which could be expected to flow from it. In addition to considering the variety of views expressed in response to the consultation the Government have sought the advice of the Occupational Pensions Board.

Recognising that circumstances have changed significantly since it recommended a register, the board has suggested that the question whether there should be such a register should be reviewed in three years time when the pattern of pension provision will be clearer and there will be some evidence of how effective the regulations on disclosure of information have been. The Government accept this view and have decided not to set up a register of occupational pension schemes at the present time.

The Occupational Pensions Board was concerned, however, that scheme members should be able to obtain the information they are entitled to have about their scheme without difficulty and have suggested that an existing body should have the power to enforce, if necessary, compliance with the disclosure regulations. The Government agree and have decided to ask the OPB to act in this capacity.

Supplementary Benefit

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated 1985 spending, on the basis of December figures, on supplementary benefit board and lodging allowance for independent homes; and what is the estimated number of residents for 1985 and the estimated average payment in 1985.

Mr. Newton: I regret that it is not possible to make any reliable estimates at this time, largely because the impact of the 1985 changes in supplementary benefit payments to people in residential care and nursing homes have not yet been fully assessed.

Capital Investment

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the gross capital investment in hospital services in 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81, 1984-85 and planned for 1986-87 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1984-85 prices.

Mr. Hayhoe: The following table shows capital expenditure on hospital services since 1970-71 and total capital expenditure by health authorities from 1975-76. The figures are derived from the summarised accounts of health authorities or, for 1970-71, regional hospital boards. It is not yet possible to give comparable planned figures for 1986-87.

Year	Health authorities' total capital expenditure £ million		Capital expenditure on hospital services £ million
	Cash	At 1984-85 prices (using gross domestic product deflator)	Cash	At 1984-85 prices (using gross domestic product deflator)
1970-71	*	—	119·2	575·4
1975-76	331·7	844·6	276·8	704·8
1980-81	563·2	724·6	439·8	565·8
1984-85	795·4	795·4	618·4	618·4

Aspartame

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has regarding a possible correlation between the use of the artificial sweetener Aspartame and the incidence of epileptic seizures in previously healthy adults; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: A letter published in the Lancet on 9 November reported three cases of epileptic seizure in previously healthy adults in the United States of America who consumed large quantities of aspartame-sweetened drinks. The author claimed only that this suggested an association between epilepsy and the consumption of aspartame.

Epilepsy is a relatively common condition which may affect previously healthy adults at any age. Some cases of first seizures in people who are also consumers of large amounts of aspartame would be expected simply by chance during the two years that aspartame has been extensively used in the United States of America. The letter provides no evidence that consumption of aspartame increases susceptibility to epileptic seizures.

Mentally Handicapped Children

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the homes and hospital units making special provision for mentally handicapped children who are either blind or suffer from impaired vision and state the number of places available at each.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

Joint Planning (Report)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what measures he is considering to strengthen the joint consultative committees and the joint planning process in the light of the recommendations made by the internal departmental working group on joint planning;

(2) when he intends to publish the report of the departmental working group on joint planning in England.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 3 December at columns 210-11.

Medicines

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total number of medicines which have had their licences of right withdrawn during the past six years; and which specific medicines this applied to.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 29 November 1985, c. 715]: I regret the information is not available in the precise form requested. Medicines placed on the United Kingdom market require a licence granted under the Medicines Act 1968 and such licences may be revoked or not renewed in various circumstances including cases where the licence holder asks for cancellation or does not seek renewal of a licence. In the last six years, 5,185 product licences of right have been cancelled and 47 revoked.

Details of the medicinal products whose products licences of right have been revoked in that period have been placed in the Library.

National Health Service (Red Alerts)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the hospitals and their district health authorities which have already been on red alert for no further admissions other than emergencies at least once in the current winter; and how many red alerts in how many hospitals there were last winter.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 9 December 1985, c. 494]: The information requested is not collected centrally. It is the responsibility of health authorities to manage and supervise hospital and specialist services to meet local need. Arrangements for admissions to National Health Service hospitals are planned to take into account circumstances which would significantly affect demand. We would expect extremes of weather conditions, epidemics, major accidents and natural disasters to be amongst the factors taken into account. It may occasionally be necessary to restrict routine admissions for a short period due to such things as unseasonably severe weather.

SCOTLAND

Rate Relief

9. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is yet in a position to announce the level of rate relief available in 1986-87 to domestic and commercial ratepayers in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. Friend in his statement on 3 December said that revaluation rate relief would continue in 1986-87 but that the level of relief would be reduced from 100 per cent. to 75 per cent.

He has circulated to authorities proposals for the distribution of grant in 1986-87 in preparation for his meeting with the convention of 16 December. These include a proposal to set domestic rate relief for the coming year at 7p per pound of rateable value.

Rural Forum

10. Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has had any discussions with Rural Forum about Her Majesty's Government's rural policy for Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: The chairman of Rural Forum has written to me in support of the recommendation by the Scottish Affairs Committee for a rural development fund for Scotland. I have assured him that the forum's views will be taken into account in the Government's continuing consideration of this matter.

Veterinary Laboratories, Lasswade

11. Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received in relation to the proposed closure of the Lasswade (Midlothian) veterinary laboratories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about the proposed closure from parliamentary colleagues, representatives of the farming and poultry industries and members of the veterinary profession.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, whose Department is responsible for the services currently provided by the laboratory, made it clear that essential services needed in Scotland will continue to be provided for the benefit of Scottish agriculture. The most appropriate means of doing so are under active consideration.

Housing Associations

12. Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much public money has been paid to housing associations in Scotland since May 1979; and how this compares with the preceding five years.

Mr. Ancram: Total payments from public funds amounted to £524·3 million in the six years from 1 April 1979 to 31 March 1985; this compares with £41·91 million for the five years from 1 April 1974 to 31 March 1979.

Teachers' Pay Dispute

13. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the dispute in Scottish education with particular regard to the ability of the Scottish Examinations Board to organise the appropriate examinations in 1986.

Mr. Younger: I have nothing to add to the statement I made to the House on 22 October, at column 161, and to the reply my hon. Friend gave the hon. Member on 13 November at column 189.

14. Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the teachers' dispute.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made in the House on 22 October, at column 161.

31. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a further statement about the teachers' pay dispute.

35. Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the current negotiations in the teachers' dispute.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friend to the statement my right hon. Friend made in the House on 22 October, at column 161.

38. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he plans any further initiative to resolve the teachers' dispute.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has already offered to make substantial additional resources available. That offer remains open, at least for the moment.

Agricultural Advisory Services

15. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received supporting his proposal to cut spending on agricultural advisory services fom April 1987.

Mr. John MacKay: Prior to the recent issue of our formal consultation paper, a number of representations have been received on the proposed future funding of the agricultural advisory services in Scotland, including some which recognise that there is merit in the Government's view that industry should make a greater financial contribution towards the cost of services from which it benefits.

30. Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of the agricultural advisory services in Scotland.

Mr. Younger: My Department's consultation paper on the agricultural advisory services in Scotland, which was published on 14 November 1985, has been given a wide circulation to interested organisations within the industry. Careful consideration will be given to all the comments received.

Rating Reform

16. Mr. Lambie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is now in a position to announce the Government's proposals for rates reform in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: We are looking carefully at the whole system of local government finance, including rating. A consultative document setting out the Government's proposals will be published early in the new year.

17. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the National Federation of Small Businesses and the Self-Employed to discuss reform of the rating system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I met representatives of the federation on 11 March and since then its Scottish secretary has written to me and to my right hon. Friend on some two dozen occasions so I am not unaware of the federation's views on a range of issues concerned with local government finance. Following publication of the Government's proposals on this early in the new year, there will be an opportunity for detailed comment and consultation.

24. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many recent representations he has received concerning the proposed replacement of the domestic rating system in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Throughout most of the past year there has been a steady flow of representations urging changes in the local domestic taxation system in Scotland. These will be taken into account in our proposals for reform of local government finance, due to be published early in the new year.

33. Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies are being undertaken in his Department into the practicalities of replacing the rating system with a poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: We shall be publishing a consultative document early in the new year setting out proposals for the reform of local government finance. This will include the information necessary to reach a view about the consequences of the proposals.

Labour Statistics

18. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people under the age of 25 years are currently unemployed in the Lothian region and Leith, respectively.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information as at 10 October, the latest date for which figures are available, may be obtained from the House of Commons Library for both Lothian region and the Edinburgh, Leith constituency.

32. Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the latest unemployment figures for Scotland.

Mr. Younger: On 14 November 1985 the number of unemployed claimants in Scotland was 351,463, a fall of 1,848 from the October figure. The seasonally adjusted figure shows a similar fall.

42. Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the most up-to-date youth unemployment figures in Scotland.

Mr. Younger: At 10 October 1985, the latest date for which information is available, the number of unemployed claimants in Scotland under the age of 18 was 27,908. This figure shows an overall improvement on the position 12 months previously when the figure stood at 30,228, a reduction of 2,320. The Government are, of course, committing considerable resources through the youth training scheme to improving young people's skills and thus their employment prospects. With the expansion of the scheme from next April, all young people under 18 will have the opportunity to obtain a recognised vocational qualification.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

19. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the financing of the Greater Glasgow health board.

Mr. John MacKay: Representations have been received from one member of the public and one employee of the board, and I have been in correspondence with the chairman of the board. Other representations about specific issues have referred in general terms to the funding of this board.

Gartcosh Steelworks

20. Dr. Bray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the future of Gartcosh works.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave today to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke).

36. Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from local authorities about the financial consequences to them of the closure of Gartcosh steelworks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations.

NHS (Funding)

21. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the increase in real terms in the funding of the National Health Service in Scotland from 1979 to the latest convenient date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Gross expenditure on the National Health Service in Scotland has risen from £883 million in 1978-79 to an estimated £2,000 million in 1985-86. In real terms, this represents an increase of over 20 per cent. over the period. Further real terms increases in health spending in each of the next three years are planned.

House Sales

22. Mr. Hugh Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the most up-to-date figures for council and Scottish Special Housing Association house sales in Glasgow.

Mr. Ancram: The number of houses sold by the City of Glasgow district council between 1 April 1979 and 30 September 1985 was 3,881. The Scottish Special Housing Association reported 503 sales in Glasgow between 1 April 1979 and 31 March 1985.

Job Creation

23. Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he plans any new initiatives to reduce the level of unemployment in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Government's economic strategy of keeping inflation down, offering real incentive for enterprise and restoring competitiveness to industry, provides the only sensible means of improving the prospects for the unemployed people in Scotland and in Great Britain.

The Government's full range of special employment and training measures to help unemployed people will continue to be available throughout Scotland.

Grampian Region (Health Care)

25. Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current annual expenditure per head of population in the Grampian region on health care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Total expenditure by Grampian health board in 1984-85 amounted to £303 per head of population or £349 when account is taken of the estimated cost to other health boards of providing treatment to patients from the Grampian area, along with the board's estimated share of the cost of other health services funded centrally.

Bridge of Allan (Flooding)

26. Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations or requests for assistance he has received from Central region following the serious flooding in Bridge of Allan; and if he will introduce legislation to impose on local authorities a duty to provide assistance and take remedial measures when such flooding occurs.

Mr. Ancram: No representations or requests for assistance have been received from Central regional council.

Regional and islands councils may already exercise powers in the Flood Prevention (Scotland) Act 1961 to take measures for the prevention or mitigation of flooding of non-agricultural land in their areas. We have no plans for further legislation.

Steel Industry

27. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next meet the chairman of the British Steel Corporation to discuss the steel industry in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of the British Steel Corporation on 28 November. We have no plans for another meeting in the near future.

Abattoirs (Competitiveness)

28. Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the implications of the regulations governing the skinning of sheep's heads in EEC abattoirs in Scotland for the relative competitiveness of such abattoirs in England and Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Abattoirs in both Scotland and England which are approved to participate in intra-community trade are required to skin sheep heads.

Prisons (Overcrowding)

29. Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement on the problems the prison authorities in Scotland are having with regard to the increased numbers of persons staying longer in prison or remand before trial, and the larger number of persons in prison as a result of drug offences; and whether he will make a detailed investigation into the overcrowding problems in Saughton prison and elsewhere in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: Following a sustained rise in the level of admissions, the Scottish prison service number of inmates for 26 November 1985 reached a record level of 5,697. This is approximately 10 per cent. above the total number of places available. The main elements in this increase are larger numbers of prisoners on remand, mainly because of an increase in the length of time prisoners are being held on remand, and an increase in the number of persons convicted of drug-related offences and other serious crimes which are attracting longer sentences.

My right hon. Friend is well aware of the overcrowding and the problems associated with it. Serious overcrowding exists in four establishments, Barlinnie, Edinburgh and Inverness prisons and Longriggend remand institution. Unless numbers decline from their present levels, no significant relief is likely to be achieved until the refurbished Greenock prison and phase II of Shotts prison become available next March and in March 1987.

Assisted Places Scheme

34. Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the amount of money received by each school participating in the assisted places scheme in Glasgow in each year since its inception.

Mr. Allan Stewart: As the answer is lengthy and contains a number of figures, I will, with permission, circulate the information in the Official Report.

Housing Associations Sales

37. Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the new housing legislation in Scotland in favour of retaining the voluntary code of practice in sales by housing associations.

Mr. Younger: I have received representations from the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations and from Williamsburgh Housing Association in favour of retaining the present voluntary code governing sales. One of my hon. Friends has also passed on to me similar representations made to him by Shelter. In addition, six individual housing associations have written expressing a desire to modify certain aspects of the provisions contained in the Housing (Scotland) Bill which are of particular concern to them. I have also received representation from a number of tenants of housing associations and residents' associations welcoming the new legislation.

Teachers (Pay and Conditions)

39. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with the representatives of the teaching profession about pay and conditions of service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer to my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 22 October, at column 161.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

40. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the arrangements for paying hill livestock compensatory allowances to farmers in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: Payment on the 20,000 or so claims for hill livestock compensatory allowances made each year in Scotland normally starts about the end of January and is virtually completed by the end of May. Exceptionally, for 1986, we have decided that, provided farmers submit their claims very quickly after they are issued to them at the end of December, a 75 per cent. payment on their claim will be issued straight away. The balance due to them will be paid after the claim has been checked in the normal way.

Coxsachie Virus Illness

41. Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the most recent information on the incidence of coxsachie virus illnesses in the west of Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: Illness caused by coxsachie virus is not a notifiable disease, and data are not therefore available centrally which would enable the incidence of the disease to be determined.

Motorways

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of motorway in Scotland have safety barriers on the central reservation; on which motorways; and what plans currently exist to increase the provision of such safety barriers.

Mr. Ancram: At present there are approximately 28·8 miles of trunk motorway with safety barriers on the central reservation in Scotland. The details are as follows:

Motorway	Length of barrier miles
M8*	9·0
M9	2·0
M74	12·0
M80	0·3
M85	0·6
M876	1·4
M90	3·5

* The figure for the M8 does not include the Glasgow urban section for which Strathclyde regional council are responsible.

I am currently reviewing policy on the provision of central safety barriers for new motorways.

European Poverty Programme

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has for the statement of the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Ancram) the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State in his letter to David Martin MEP of 1 May, that participation in the second European poverty programme would have imposed a significant extra administrative burden on central Government, and on the local authorities and community and voluntary bodies involved.

Mr. Ancram: In reaching our decision not to participate in the second European Commission anti-poverty programme, we took into account the likely level of demand as compared with the likely level of resources; and concluded that participation was bound to require significant and disproportionate work for all concerned on preparation and evaluation of projects which would not ultimately be supported. The soundness of this judgment can be measured in terms of the decision of the European Commission announced on 11 October, under which only 14 of over 250 projects forwarded to the Commission in respect of England and Wales were approved.

Capital Investment

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the gross capital investment in (i) prisons, (ii) police stations and (iii) courts in 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81, 1984-85, 1985-86 and planned for 1986-87 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1984-85 prices.

Mr. John MacKay: Capital expenditure in these services for the years to 1984-85 with estimated outturn expenditure for 1985-86 and planned expenditure for 1986-87 in terms of cash and expressed at 1984-85 prices by use of the GDP deflator, are as follows:

‡Provision for local roads for 1985-86 and 1986-87 enhanced by transfers made from the trunk roads provision to assist the construction of the Edinburgh outer city bypass.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the gross capital investment in (i) housing and (ii) the local environmental services in 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81, 1984-85, 1985-86 and planned for 1986-87 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1984-85 prices.

Mr. Ancram: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the gross capital investment in hospital services in 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81, 1984-85, 1985-86 and planned for 1986-87 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1984-85 prices.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested for the years to 1985-86 is given in the table, in terms of cash, and expressed at 1984-85 prices by application of the gross domestic product deflator. Decisions have yet to be taken about the allocation of capital expenditure provision to hospital services in 1986-87.

* Estimate.

These figures are for capital expenditure on the hospitals and community health programme together: they do not represent total capital expenditure on the NHS in the years concerned.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the gross capital investment in (i) schools and (ii) higher and further education in 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81, 1984-85, 1985-86 and planned for 1986-87 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1984-85 prices.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Support Finance

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the amount of new money that was added by the Scottish Office to the 1985-86 budget of each health board in respect of support finance.

Mr. John MacKay: Health boards have been set indicative levels of expenditure on support finance projects totalling £6 million in the current year. From within that total, expenditure on projects approved before 1 April 1985, amounting to some £2·9 million, will continue to be met from funds held centrally. Expenditure on new projects is to be met from health boards' financial allocations, which include the following sums distributed from the uncommitted balance of the funds formerly held centrally:

Health Board	£'000
Argyll and Clyde	110
Ayrshire and Arran	90
Borders	30
Dumfries and Galloway	40
Fife	80
Forth Valley	70
Grampian	110
Greater Glasgow	250
Highland	50
Lanarkshire	130
Lothian	170
Orkney	10
Shetland	10
Tayside	100
Western Isles	10
Total	1,260

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the amounts of money and the project titles, health board area by health board area, that have now been allocated support finance in 1985-86.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally.

Joint Liaison Committees

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list joint liaison committees which now have voluntary sector representatives in full and regular membership and the joint liaison committees which have them on a partial basis;

(2) if he will list the joint liaison committees that now have meetings which are open to the press and public;

(3) if he will list the joint liaison committees between health boards and local authorities known to his Department to have amended their constitutions in response to the proposals for changes contained in the 29 April Scottish Office circular "Community Care: Joint Planning and Support Finance."

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally.

Monofilament Nets

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any representations on behalf of the English fishermen about the effects on them of the proposed ban on the carriage of monofilament nets in Scottish waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Representations have been made by the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations and the Northumberland Sea Fisheries Committee and have been taken into consideration along with other comments made about the Government's intentions.

Scottish Transport Group

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial targets he has agreed with the Scottish Transport Group for 1986 and beyond.

Mr. Younger: I have agreed with STG that the Scottish Bus Group will seek an average annual return of 4 per cent. on average net fixed assets at current cost over the period 1 January 1986 to 31 December 1990. The return will reflect current cost operating profit adjusted to take account of capital grant on an historical cost basis. The existing targets for the other areas of STG's business will be continued. Caledonian MacBrayne is required to break even in historic cost terms after receipt of grant. On its other activities the group is required to make a surplus of 8 per cent. on turnover, after replacement depreciation.

Scottish Examination Board

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report a statistical breakdown of the total number of official markers for the 1984 Scottish Examination Board certificate examinations which details (a) the number of markers who were otherwise employed as college lecturers, (b) the number of markers who were otherwise employed as full-time teachers; (c) the number of markers who were retired school teachers.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985 c. 434]: The information requested for 1984 and in addition for 1985, with the numbers in each category expressed as a percentage of the total, is as follows:

	1984		1985
	Number	Per cent.	Number	Per cent.
(a) Lecturers in tertiary education	347	8·6	383	10·0
(b) Full time teachers*	3,473	85·6	3,126	82·1
(c) Retired lecturers in tertiary education	9	0·2	18	0·5
(d) Retired school teachers	80	2·0	122	3·2
(e) Others†	148	3·6	157	4·1
Total	4,057		3,806

* Category (b) includes also part time teachers and teachers who were temporarily out of teaching.

† Category (e) covers mainly former teachers now otherwise employed that is Her Majesty's inspectors, board staff and education authority advisers. It also covers a small number of markers with a proven track record whose recruitment antedated the setting up of the Scottish Certificate of Education Examination Board in 1965.

WALES

Prescriptions

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Wales, for the financial years 1983-84 and 1984-85, what were (a) the costs of producing and distributing literature about exemption from from prescription charges, (b) the costs of inspection for fraud in claiming exemption from prescription charges and (c) the cost of administering the sale of pre-payment certificates.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information to patients about exemption from prescription charges is contained in leaflet P11, which is produced by the DHSS for England and Wales. There is no separate charge against the Welsh Vote. Distribution costs, costs of fraud inspection and costs of administering the sale of pre-payment certificates are not separately indentifiable within the overall administrative budgets of family practitioner committees.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Wales, for each quarter of the calendar year 1984, the first three quarters of 1985 and for the financial years 1983-84 and 1984-85, what was (a) the number of prescriptions dispensed, (b) the percentage of prescriptions exempt from charges, (c) the costs of prescriptions, (i) the payents by patients (excluding pre-payment certificates), (ii) the payments from public funds, (iii) the total costs and (iv) the average gross costs per prescripton, (d) the number and type of pre-payment certificate and (e) revenue from sale of pre-payment certificates.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information required is set out in the following table:

Farmers (Exceptional Weather Aid)

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much he is contributing towards the £5·3 million savings announced by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in his statement of 28 November, Official Report, column 1033.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: A contribution of £1·85 million is being made by way of a reduction of the cash limit on class XVI, vote 5, from £46,610,000 to £44,760,000. This saving in reduced grant in aid to the Welsh Development Agency arises from a further increase in the level of anticipated receipts in the current financial year. A spring Supplementary Estimate will be sought for class XVI, vote 2, to cover expenditure in Wales on both the exceptional weather relief for farmers (£1,700,000) and the additional expenditure arising from the hill livestock compensatory allowance uprating.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police (Expenditure)

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, with appropriate statistics, the principal elements of expenditure which have caused anticipated expenditure on the police in 1985-86 to exceed by £92 million the figure stated in Cmnd. 9428.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I assume that the right hon. Member is comparing the figure given for police expenditure in 1985-86 in the White Paper on the Government's expenditure plans (Cmnd. 9428), with that given in reply to a question by him on 18 November, at columns 15-16. The first is the central and local government expenditure on the police planned at the time the White Paper was published last year. The second, as explained in the reply to his earlier question, represents the sum of current expenditure provided for in local authority budgets for 1985-86 set at the beginning of the financial year. The figures are not comparable.

Coal Industry Dispute (Police Overtime)

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much expenditure on overtime pay for police officers in connection with the miners' dispute is accounted for in the financial year 1985-86.

Mr. Giles Shaw: For the purposes of the Budget estimates for 1985-86 it was assumed that £9 million would be necessary for claims for the special payment which we are making available for the additional costs of policing the miners' dispute. This figure relates to all forms of expenditure eligible for the special payment, including overtime payments. No separate assumption has been made for expenditure on overtime payments arising from the dispute.

Public Order Bill

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether, in view of the errors contained in the version of the Public Order Bill published on 6 December, he will withdraw the Bill;

(2) if he will undertake not to proceed with a Second Reading of the Public Order Bill until a corrected and accurate version of the Bill is published.

Mr. Giles Shaw: A corrigendum slip was published on 10 December.

Mr. Colin Hewitt

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Mr. Colin Hewitt on his appointment as national co-ordinator of police activities in relation to drug crimes is to continue to be a member of the Metropolitan police department; and if the Metropolitan police establishment is to be revised to enable him to serve as an assistant commissioner.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Criminal Injuries (Compensation)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has yet received the report of the interdepartmental working party reviewing the criminal injuries compensation scheme; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that the working party has not yet completed its deliberations, but we hope to receive its report early in the new year.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the level of grant to the National Association of Victim Support Schemes in 1984-85 and 1985-86; and what level of grant is proposed for 1986-87.

Mr. Mellor: The Government's grant to NAVSS in 1984-85 was £58,500. In 1985-86 it was £120,000, with an additional payment of £6,000 towards the cost of the association's move to new premises. The grant for 1986-87 has not yet been settled, but it will be based on that for 1985-86 with a modest increase to reflect inflation and the higher level of activity resulting from the recent recruitment of new members of staff.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the number of additional part-time and full-time staff recruited by the National Association of Victim Support Schemes in 1985-86 as a result of his Department's increased grants.

Mr. Mellor: The National Association of Victims Support Schemes has been able to recruit four additional full-time staff in the current financial year.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board has yet made available to criminal courts guidelines for the level of compensation orders in courts.

Mr. Mellor: The board has prepared a set of draft guidelines for the criminal courts and we have received comments on them from the Magistrates' Association. We will be consulting further on these with the board and the association.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has yet completed his consultation with the Association of Chief Police Officers about the provision of a leaflet, together with a Criminal Injuries Compensation Board claim form, to all victims of crime when the crime is first reported.

Mr. Mellor: The police already provide victims of violent crime with a leaflet about the criminal injuries compensation scheme and how to apply for compensation under the scheme. We intend to produce another leaflet, for distribution to all victims of crime, explaining the powers of the criminal courts in England and Wales to order the payment of compensation by a convicted offender. We are consulting the Association of Chief Police Officers, among others, about the nature and content of the leaflet, including the possibility of a standard application form for compensation by the offender.

Block Insurance

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made on his invitation to local authority associations, the British Gas Corporation and the Electricity Council to consider block insurance arrangements to cover household contents and thefts from meters.

Mr. Mellor: The Associations of Metropolitan Authorities, District Councils and County Councils, and the Electricity Council and British Gas Corporation were invited early this year to consider the possibility of block insurance arrangements. The Associations of Metropolitan Authorities and District Councils have agreed to circulate their members with a view to encouraging the development, where appropriate, of block insurance schemes such as already exist in some areas. The Electricity Council and British Gas Corporation see a number of difficulties with such schemes, especially as regards the widespread insurance of household contents by individual customers, the difficulty in finding insurers willing to quote for such cover and the problem of meter thefts by or in collusion with a member of the household concerned; in the case of thefts from meters, crime prevention may have a more significant part to play than block insurance arrangements.

Ilkeston Police Station

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he is satisfied that the present conditions and facilities at Ilkeston police station are suitable for policing requirements and meet current statutory obligations;

(2) what proposals he has received, and when, from Derbyshire county council, for the modernisation or rebuilding of the Ilkeston police station.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is the responsibility of the police authority to provide and maintain the buildings required for police purposes in its area. Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary for the region considers that the authority should improve conditions at Ilkeston police station and I understand that the authority is undertaking interim improvements there so that it can be used as a designated custody station under the provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. I also understand that the authority is considering proposals for the modernisation of the police station, but these have not yet been sent for my right hon. Friend's approval. In December 1981 and in December 1982, in response to a request from the police authority for approval to build a new Ilkeston police station, the authority was offered the opportunity to plan with a view to starting building in, respectively, 1983-84 and 1985-86, but in the event these offers have not been taken up. I shall be glad for officials to discuss the position further with the police authority should they wish to do so.

Robert Maxwell and Michael King

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to exchange Robert Maxwell and Michael King, two British citizens held in Libya, for Libyans imprisoned in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: No.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Meals

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give figures for each year since 1975 for primary and secondary maintained schools in England for the total number of pupils in attendance, the number of pupils taking school meals on payment and free and the number of pupils bringing their own food.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is shown in the Department's annual published school meals census, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate for primary and secondary maintained schools in England the number of pupils receiving free school meals where the entitlement derives from families' (a) receipt of supplementary benefit, (b) receipt of family income supplement and (c) local authority discretionary powers.

Mr. Dunn: It is possible to estimate only the broad order of magnitude, as there are fluctuations from year to year and within the year in the number of pupils entitled to a free school meal and the proportion who take up the entitlement. At the time of the October 1984 school meals census in England an estimated breakdown of the main categories of entitlement would have been as follows (to the nearest 10,000):

	Number
(a) Pupils whose parents were in receipt of supplementary benefit	680,000
(b) Pupils whose parents were in receipt of family income supplement	170,000
(c) Other pupils	300,000
	1,150,000

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table giving pupil-teacher ratios in Tameside for (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Dunn: In January 1985, the latest date for which information is available, the pupil-teacher ratio within maintained primary schools in Tameside was 23·3; the corresponding ratio within maintained secondary schools was 15·7.

Universities (Clinical Academics)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what reply he intends to give to the request from the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals for additional funds to enable the universities to apply to clinical academics the 1985 pay award for National Health Service doctors and dentists.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend will publish his reply when it is sent.

16 to 18-year-olds

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of 16 to 18-year-olds in each English region stay on at school.

Mr. Dunn: In January 1985 the average staying-on rates for 16 to 18-year-olds in maintained secondary schools for each region were:

Region	*Percentages
North	13·4
Yorkshire and Humberside	14·1
North West	13·5
East Midlands	13·7
West Midlands	13·3
East Anglia	13·7
Greater London	18·1
Other South East	17·6
South West	13·5
England	15·0

* The percentages are calculated by comparing the total number of pupils aged 16, 17 or 18 years in maintained schools in January 1985 with the total number of 15-year-olds one, two and three years earlier in these schools.

School Leavers (Qualifications)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of children in each English region leave school without qualifications.

Mr. Dunn: The percentage of leavers from maintained secondary schools with no graded result in GCE or CSE examinations in 1983-84 were:

Region	Percentage
North	9·8
Yorkshire and Humberside	10·8
North West	12·3
East Midlands	7·8
West Midlands	12·0
East Anglia	8·2
Greater London	14·2
Other South East	6·6
South West	7·0
England	9·9

Departmental Staff

Mr. Christopher Hawkins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many staff in his Department have been required to leave their employment since 1979 (a) to enable the Department to meet financial targets and (b) because their jobs were redundant.

Sir Keith Joseph: Nobody has been required to leave to enable the Department to meet its financial targets. Two part-time cleaners and a personal secretary have been made redundant.

Schoolchildren (Work Experience)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information is available to his Department in respect of the numbers of schoolchildren injured whilst taking part in work experience placements in any year;

(2) what representations he has received about the exclusion of schoolchildren on work experience placements from the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: None. We are, however, currently reviewing the legal, health and safety aspects of work experience for young people, taking account of requests from a number of LEAs for further guidance in this area.

Schoolchildren (Special Needs)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report the number of places in special schools for children of compulsory school age with special needs (a) in each local education authority in England, (b) for all local education authorities in England, (c) for privately run special schools in England and (d) the total of such places (i) for all such children and (ii) expressed in those categories used as classification by his Department in each of the last 10 years, and the percentage change involved in each case.

Mr. Dunn: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the capital borrowing of the Inner London education authority in each of the last three years.

Mr. Chris Patten: Borrowing by the Inner London education authority for the capital account (including advances from the Consolidated Loans Fund) for the last three years for which figures are available was:

	£ million
1981-82	6·179
1982-83	13·734
1983-84	14·191

Source: Returns from the Greater London council.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list for each of the London boroughs in the Inner London education authority area the proportion of Inner London education authority rates income which came from each borough in each of the last three years.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Inner London education authority levies a rate precept on the inner London boroughs; thus the proportion of its rate income coming from each inner London borough is the ratio of the rateable value of each borough to the total inner London rateable value. The figures are for the last three outturn years.

Inner London Borough	Percentage of Inner London Education Authority rate income
	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
City of London	21·9	22·1	22·1
Camden	9·7	9·6	9·8
Greenwich	2·9	2·9	2·8
Hackney	3·3	3·3	3·2
Hammersmith	3·0	3·0	3·0
Islington	4·7	4·6	4·6
Kensington and Chelsea	6·2	6·2	6·1
Lambeth	5·1	5·1	5·1
Lewisham	3·0	3·0	3·0
Southwark	5·0	5·0	5·1
Tower Hamlets	4·0	4·0	4·0
Wandsworth	3·8	3·7	3·7
Westminster	27·5	27·6	27·5

Figures may not add to 100 per cent. due to rounding.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of inner London education authority income was derived from (a) direct Government grants and (b) rate precepts from the London boroughs in each of the last three years.

Mr. Chris Patten: The figures are for the last three years for which outturn information is available. They are taken from returns made by the authority. The total income is taken to be: rate income; income from Government grants (including pooling adjustments); and income from fees and other charges including charges for the education of pupils belonging to other authorities.

Percentage income from:

	Government grants	Rate precept	Other income
1981-82	7·8	82·8	9·4
1982-83	7·5	83·7	8·8
1983-84	6·9	84·7	8·4

Local Authorities (Further Education)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total capital expenditure authorisation for 1986-87 bid for by local education authorities for the advanced further education sector.

Mr. Chris Patten: £110·4 million in England.

Student-Academic Staff Ratios

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what he expects to be the average student-academic staff ratio for the university sector.

Mr. Chris Patten: In December 1983, the latest year for which information is available, the student-staff ratio in universities in Great Britain was 10·2. This ratio is defined as the full-time equivalent of undergraduate and postgraduate students divided by full-time academic staff funded wholly from university funds.

Academic staff student ratios for future years will depend on individual universities decisions on staffing levels within the resources available to them.

Universities and Polytechnics (Mergers)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will indicate the involvement of his Department in promoting or assisting with discussions concerning mergers of polytechnics and universities with special reference to City of London polytechnic and City university and North Staffordshire polytechnic and the University of Keele.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend is interested in any proposals for mergers between publicly funded institutions of higher education which promise educational and financial benefits. He stands ready to assist in the discussion of such proposals.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make additional funds available to new institutions arising from the merger of the City of London polytechnic and City university and North Staffordshire polytechnic and the University of Keele.

Mr. Chris Patten: Any proposed merger of higher education institutions would have to be considered in terms of the educational and financial benefits which it offered. The need for additional funding of a transitional nature to facilitate mergers agreed to be desirable would be a matter for the funding bodies concerned.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on the extension of tenure to academic staff employed in a new university arising from a merger of the City of London polytechnic and City university and North Staffordshire polytechnic and the University of Keele.

Mr. Chris Patten: In any proposed merger of higher education institutions the terms of employment of the academic staff would be considered in the light of the circumstances of the institutions concerned.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

UNESCO

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received subsequent to his announcement of the withdrawal of the United Kingdom from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation; of what nature they have been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: No representations have been received from overseas Governments since the confirmation of withdrawal of British membership of UNESCO, although several have issued statements. Members of the public have written both in favour and against the decision to withdraw.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the transfer or redirection of resources to all organisations, other than United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation, as outlined in his statement of 5 December, together with the respective sums and total.

Mr. Raison: The redirection of resources is under consideration. As I said in my statement of 5 December 1985, at columns 448-49, details will be given to the House in due course.

PRIME MINISTER

European Community (Reform)

Q18. Mr. Dykes asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her participation in the recent Luxembourg summit meeting of Heads of Government to discuss the reform of European Economic Community procedures.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made to the House on 5 December at columns 429-39.

Neasden Hospital

Q78. Mr. Pavitt asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Neasden hospital.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Football League Match (Visit)

Q85. Mr. John Carlisle asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to a Football League match before the end of the current season.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Scotland

Q88. Mr. Ewing asked the Prime Minister when she last paid an official visit to Scotland during the winter months.

The Prime Minister: In January 1983.

Disarmament

Q90. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on the progress of disarmament or arms control negotiations since the conclusion of the Geneva summit meeting.

The Prime Minister: As I told the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 25 November, at columns 391-92, we believe the Geneva summit has given an impetus to arms control negotiations in Geneva. We hope that when the United States/Soviet talks resume in January, the Soviet Union will get down to serious negotiations in order to reach the balanced and equitable agreements we believe are desirable. We believe the United States proposals tabled before the summit offer the basis for progress towards this objective. The United Kingdom will continue to give full support to the United States in the negotiations.

At the mutual and balanced force reductions talks in Vienna, a new Western proposal was tabled by the United Kingdom on 5 December. The conference on disarmament in Europe at Stockholm is expected to conclude its eigth session on 20 December, and the conference on disarmament in Geneva is currently in recess.

Fisheries

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what progress is being made in developing a multilaterally based fisheries and management regime in the south-west Atlantic.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West (Mr. Randall) on 6 December at column 385.

Engagements

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Investment Projects

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to ensure that major investment projects undertaken under the auspices of Government will be subject to an analysis showing the full effects of development on all English regions before any definitive decisions on them are taken.

The Prime Minister: The siting of investment projects funded by central Government is given careful consideration where there is a choice of location.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Minister if she will take all necessary steps to ensure that future Government annual public expenditure plans are broken down by reference to each English region.

The Prime Minister: No. The Government's expenditure plans are published by Department, function, economic category and spending authority. It would be prohibitively expensive to plan public spending by English region.

Decentralisation

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Minister whether she has any proposals for decentralising further parts of Government into the regions.

The Prime Minister: There are at present no plans for further decentralisation beyond those contained in the Government's dispersal programme announced on 26 July 1979.

Regional Policy

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Minister what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the implications of different rates of development as between the south-east and other regions for Government policies towards alleviating congestion and environmental damage; what plans the Government have to promote the prosperity of the north of England; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government continually assess all aspects of their policies. Many parts of the north are assisted areas and therefore benefit from regional assistance aimed at reducing disparities in employment opportunities.

British Atlantic Committee

Mr. Michie asked the Prime Minister how much Government money was allocated in each year from 1983 to the British Atlantic Committee.

The Prime Minister: The British Atlantic Committee received grants-in-aid of £45,000 in 1983-84 and £47,000 in 1984-85. There is a provision for a grant-in-aid of £49,000 in 1985-86.

Peace Through NATO

Mr. Michie asked the Prime Minister how much Government money was allocated in each year from 1983 to Peace Through NATO.

The Prime Minister: Peace Through NATO received grants-in-aid of £68,000 in 1983-84 and £71,500 in 1984-85. There is a provision for a grant-in-aid of £74,000 in 1985-86.

Mr. Michie asked the Prime Minister what was the cost to the Government, by year, of design, research and printing of the material supplied to Peace Through NATO for the following publications, listed separately, Arms Control and Disarmament Bulletin, the Ministry of Defence material pack, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office material pack and Ministry of Defence—North Atlantic Treaty Organisation films.

The Prime Minister: The publications and material referred to are supplied free of charge or on free loan to a wide range of organisations and individuals including Peace Through NATO. It is not possible to identify the cost of items supplied to individual organisations.

Mr. Michie asked the Prime Minister how much material was supplied by the Government to Peace Through NATO in each year from 1983; how much Peace Through NATO paid for the material; and which organisations were given these publications for distribution.

The Prime Minister: Peace Through NATO receives a wide range of material issued by the Government on arms control, disarmament and defence issues. The Government do not charge for this material which is freely available on request. Others receiving such items include Members of the House, interested individuals, and a wide range of non-governmental organisations.

Armed Forces (Publicity)

Mr. Michie asked the Prime Minister how much material was produced in the years 1983 to 1985 for publicity purposes for the armed forces; and how much was the cost in each year.

The Prime Minister: Total expenditure from the defence public relations budget on written publicity material for the armed forces amounted to £87,400 in 1983-84 and £121,200 in 1984-85. Among the major items produced in these years were the following:

Item	Amount (£)
Leaflets for Her Majesty's Ships	*46,700
	†38,200
Posters for Beating the Retreat	†5,500
Exercise Lionheart booklet	†14,600

* 1983-84.
† 1984-85.

Central Office of Information

Mr. Michie asked the Prime Minister how much material was produced on defence, arms control and foreign affairs by the Central Office of Information in the years 1983 to 1985; to which organisations it was sent; and how much it cost each year.

The Prime Minister: The information is as follows:

Ocean Drilling Programme

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with the co-ordination between the Departments of Energy, Environment and Trade and Industry over seeking resources to permit full United Kingdom membership in the ocean drilling programme; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 11 December at column 627 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Bus Services

Mr. Parris asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about ministerial responsibility for local bus services under the Transport Act 1985.

The Prime Minister: Ministerial responsibility in Great Britain for overall Government policy towards the bus industry, for the appointment of traffic commissioners, for driver and bus licensing, and for administering the fuel duty rebate system will remain with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. He will also continue to have ministerial responsibility for taxis and hire cars in England and Wales and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will continue to be responsible for this in Scotland.

For the new functions created by the Transport Act 1985, I have decided that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will be responsible in relation to the operation of the new registration system for local services, the privatisation of the National Bus Company, the establishment of a disabled persons transport advisory committee and the administration of transitional rural bus grants. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Transport will be responsible in Scotland, Wales and England respectively for the determination of traffic regulation conditions appeals; the establishment and oversight of new local authority and PTE bus companies; the issuing of regulations governing the procedure for tendering for subsidised services; and the determination of applications related to concessionary fares and related matters including the issue of regulations. The administration of the new system of rural innovation grants in Scotland and Wales under section 108 of the new Act will also fall to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales respectively.

Public Money (Allocation)

Mr. Marlow asked the Prime Minister what is the total overall identifiable allocation of public money made by the Government since 1979 to (a) Edinburgh, (b) Bristol, (c) Lambeth, (d) Newcastle, (e) Hammersmith, (f) Cardiff, (g) Haringey, (h) Southampton, (i) Leicester, (j) Leeds, (k) Wandsworth, (l) Belfast and (m) Northampton (i) in total, (ii) per person, (iii) per unemployed person, (iv) per unemployed person aged under 21 years and (v) per retirement pensioner, in each named district.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 28 November 1985, c. 624]: The total amount of money allocated by the Government to these areas is very large. It includes social security payments; funding for hospitals, GPs and other health services; aid for employment and training measures; grants to companies, voluntary bodies and other institutions and individuals; and support for the arts.

The extent of these funds is so great, and the number of people and institutions to whom they are allocated is so large, that they cannot be identified without disproportionate cost. There would also be considerable technical problems in attempting to identify them.

However, there is readily available information about the relatively small proportion of total Government spending that takes the form of grants and subsidies paid to local authorities. These include rate support grant, housing subsidies, housing benefit, specific revenue grants and capital grants.

The information is given in the tables which are explained in the notes. Belfast has been excluded because, owing to the different structure of local government in Northern Ireland, comparable data in respect of that city are not available.

Unemployment statistics by local authority areas are not available prior to 1983-84.

Attention is drawn to the discontinuities which result from the change in the rate support grant arrangements for England and Wales in 1981-82 and the introduction of housing benefit payments by DHSS in 1982-83.

Notes to the tables
Table 1

(a) The figures included for rate support grant for the English authorities and Cardiff are affected by the change which occurred in 1981-82 when block grant and domestic rate relief grant superseded the needs, resources and domestic elements. The figures prior to 1981-82 are not on a comparable basis.

(b) Up to 1982-83 the figures include rent and rate rebates grants paid by the DOE. The 1982-83 figures also include some housing benefits paid by the DHSS. Thereafter, all housing benefits were paid by DHSS.

(c) The figures also include housing subsidies, specific revenue grants and capital grants. Capital grants are not available for English authorities for 1984-85 and 1985-86 and they are excluded from the totals for these years. The figures in brackets show the amounts of capital grants included in the English authority figures up to 1983-84.

(d) The figures include grants and subsidies made to local government only and do not include those made to persons, companies or other organisations. Information on the latter is not readily available. The figures would be very much greater if such payments could be included. Grants made to upper tier authorities within whose areas the towns and boroughs listed are situated are also excluded.

(e) The figures for Edinburgh and Cardiff have been provided by the Scottish and Welsh Offices respectively.

Table 2

The figures are based on population estimates obtained from OPCS for the English authorities and Cardiff and from the General Register Office (Scotland) for Edinburgh. 1984-85 figures have been used as estimates for 1985-86.

Table 3

The figures are based on unemployment data from the Department of Employment. No figures are available before 1983-84. Figures for unemployed persons under 20 have been used in place of those for persons under 21, which are not available. These figures can only be supplied for 1984-85 and 1985-86.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Steel Industry

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what information he has on the current maximum steel making capacity of both the public and private sectors in the United Kingdom;

(2) what information he has on the current percentage of capacity in use in the United Kingdom steel industry;

(3) what information he has on the current production for export of the United Kingdom steel industry;

(4) what information he has on the current production for home consumption of the United Kingdom steel industry; and what information he has on the estimate of steel tonnages to be used in each of the proposed channel tunnel or bridge schemes in each of the years of construction.

Mr. Butcher: The following is the available information:

United Kingdom crude steel production
Million tonnes

	1985
Maximum possible production as at 1 January 1985*	23·7
Estimated annual production†	15·8
Capacity utilisation	67 per cent.

* Source: "ECSC Investment in the Community coalmining and iron and steel industries".

† Based on the figures for January to October 1985.

Finished steel products
Million tonnes

	January to September 1985
United Kingdom producers deliveries to the United Kingdom home market	6·8
United Kingdom producers exports	3·0
Other exports from United Kingdom	0·6
Total United Kingdom exports	3·6

Estimates of steel tonnages for the Channel crossings were included in the confidential proposals submitted to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport on 31 October 1985 by the four promoters of a fixed Channel link and these proposals are now being assessed.

Regional Aid

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans for reviewing regional aid budgets; and whether he will take steps to introduce a development agency for the north of England.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list, at 1985 prices, the amount of regional grants paid to Yorkshire and Humberside under (a) section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 and (b) under part II of the Industrial Development Act 1982 for the financial years 1979-80 to 1983-84 inclusive.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 10 December 1985, c. 558]: The information requested is as follows:

Expenditure at 1985 prices

£'000

	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
Regional Development Grants	34,129	51,750	57,129	41,253	25,537
Regional Selective Assistance	10,800	8,823	8,618	11,796	9,559

Note: Current price expenditure has been converted to 1985 prices by use of an estimated GDP deflator.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the amount of regional assistance to be allocated to Yorkshire and Humberside during the 1985-86 financial year.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 10 December 1985, c. 558]: Estimates of regional assistance are only allocated on a national basis. However, expenditure during the first six months of this financial year in the Yorkshire and Humberside region was £9 million. On this basis, expenditure for 1985-86 is estimated to be £18 million.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the average of gross domestic product per head for the United Kingdom and for each English region.

Mr. Butcher: Data on gross domestic product per head for the United Kingdom and the English regions for the years 1975 to 1984 are published in the article "Regional Accounts 1984" (Economic Trends, November 1985) a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Institutional Investment

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will consider commissioning a study into the investment practices of the financial institutions, so as to ascertain their effects on the various English regions.

Mr. Howard: The recent review of regional policy revealed no evidence to suggest that the investment practices of the financial institutions were contributing to the problems of the various English regions. In the circumstances I do not consider it necessary to commission such a study.

Regional Policy

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list for each constituency in the north-west region which lie within the assisted areas the total offered under the new regional industrial policy.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Misleading Pricing

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals Her Majesty's Government have for further controls regarding misleading price comparisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: As indicated in the statement to this House by my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Fletcher) on 4 March, the Government intend, as soon as parliamentary time is available, to introduce legislation replacing section 11 of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 and the Price Marking (Bargain Offers) Order 1979, as amended, by a new general prohibition on misleading price indications. Much of the necessary supporting detail, including paragraphs on misleading price comparisons, will be contained in a statutory code of practice. Consultation on the drafting of such a code is currently being undertaken by my Department with the trade, consumer organisations, enforcement authorities and the Office of Fair Trading.

BT (Shareholders' Vouchers)

Mr. Woodcock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the application of the BT shareholder telephone voucher arrangements to businesses.

Mr. Pattie: Vouchers have been issued to over half a million British Telecom shareholders. The scheme is working well. Under the BT prospectus, companies, partnerships, firms, trusts and associations were not eligible to apply for telephone vouchers and individual investors could use vouchers only against their own BT telephone bills or the bills of their spouses. Accordingly, BT and the Post Office were instructed to reject all vouchers submitted against bills in business names. I have received a small number of complaints about this from individual investors who are sole traders on the grounds that they are personally and solely liable to British Telecom for their bills, in a manner distinct, for example, from partnerships. Having reviewed the position, I accept that, under the terms of the prospectus, vouchers should not have been rejected in these particular circumstances. I am therefore giving revised instructions to BT and the Post Office in this respect.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bolshevik Revolution (Compensation Claims)

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have any plans for a new initiative on behalf of claimants for compensation for assets seized in Russia at the time of the Bolshevik revolution in 1917; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have no new initiative in mind at present. We believe we should persist with the discussions with the Soviet Union about these claims.

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the number of claims received from British citizens for compensation for property in Russia seized at the time of the Bolshevik revolution in 1917; and what is the total value of the claims.

Mr. Eggar: Some 50,000 private claims were registered between 1918 and the early 1950s. The total value of those claims was earlier set at £400 million.

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in discussions with the Soviet Union, Her Majesty's Government have attempted, since 1979, to reach a negotiated settlement of claims by British citizens for compensation for assets seized in Russia in 1917.

Mr. Eggar: Yes. We have continued to hold meetings with the Soviet Union at irregular intervals which have been directed towards a settlement both of United Kingdom claims against the Soviet Union and of Soviet claims against us.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment (Definition)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General if he will define unemployment as used to produce (a) the conventional unemployment figures and (b) the labour force survey figures; and if he will list those categories of persons who are included in (a) but not in (b) and those who are included in (b) but not in (a).

Mr. Alan Clark: The information was published in the October 1985 issue of Employment Gazette, at page 393.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General how many jobs have been lost since 1977 in the three northern regions (the north, north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside); what proportion of the job losses in England over the same period the job losses in the northern regions represent; and what are the corresponding figures for the south-east region.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employment at different dates.

The net changes in the size of the civilian employed labour force for the areas specified between June 1977 and September 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, are as follows:

	Number
North	− 211,000
North-West	− 183,000
Yorkshire and Humberside	− 186,000
South-East	+ 386,000
England	− 300,000

The net decrease in the civilian employed labour force was the result of increases in some regions, including the south-east, and decreases in others including the northern region.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General if he will indicate for each English region the change in total employment as a proportion of all jobs between June 1977 and September 1984.

Mr. Alan Clark: The changes in the size of the civilian employed labour force for the areas and dates specified are contained in the following table:

Percentage changes in the size of the civilian employed labour force between June 1977 and September 1984

	Per cent
South-East	3
East Anglia	9
South-West	4
West Midlands	− 9
East Midlands	− 5
Yorkshire and Humberside	− 9
North-West	− 7
North	− 16

The civilian employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment and the self employed in each of the standard regions.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General how many manufacturing jobs have been lost in each of the regions of England since June 1977 to the latest available date, showing the proportion of people employed in the manufacturing sector for each region.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employment at different dates.

The following tables show the net changes in the numbers of employees in employment in the manufacturing industries between June 1977 and September 1985, and the proportion of employees employed in September 1985 who were employed in manufacturing industries.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General what was the unemployment rate in 1981 and 1984 in each English region and in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The rates are adjusted for discontinuities and relate to unemployed claimants, seasonally adjusted school leavers for the English regions and the United Kingdom for October 1981 and October 1984.

	October 1981 Per cent.	October 1984 Per cent.

North	14·0	17·8
United Kingdom	10·2	12·8

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General what is the proportion of unemployed in each English region who have been continuously unemployed for more than 12 months.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. 10 October 1985 is the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available. The proportions of claimants who have been unemployed for over 12 months in the English regions were as follows:

	per cent.
South-East	36·3
East Anglia	34·8
South-West	34·2
West Midlands	47·0
East Midlands	40·4
Yorkshire and Humberside	41·8

North	45·7

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General what is the ratio of registered unemployed people to notified vacancies in each English region; and what are the ratios for the three northern regions (north, north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside) and the south-east.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following is the available information. Figures are given showing the numbers of unemployed claimants in the regions of England as at 14 November 1985. Also shown are the numbers of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres in the regions (including community programme) as at 8 November, and the ratios of the unemployed to these vacancies. Vacancies notified to jobcentres are estimated to be about one third of all vacancies in the economy as a whole.

Region	Unemployed claimants	Unfilled Vacancies	Ratio
South-East	779,842	68,428	11·4

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General (1) what was the seasonally adjusted fall in unemployment in November;

(2) what was the seasonally adjusted fall in unemployment in September.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The seasonally adjusted level of unemployment in the United Kingdom (excluding school leavers) fell by 3,800 in September, and by 8,100 in November.

Earnings

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General what are the average gross weekly earnings of men in full-time employment for the United Kingdom and for each English region.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest available information relates to full-time male employees on adult rates in April 1985 in each English region and in Great Britain and is published in table 12 of "New Earnings Survey 1985", part A, a copy of which is in the Library.

Regions (Overseas Promotion)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General whether, in the light of the Government's commitment to spread the benefit of tourism throughout the United Kingdom, he will make proposals for promoting overseas the regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The British Tourist Authority, through its many marketing and advertising schemes, already encourages our overseas tourists to visit places outside London. The board has been asked to give even greater emphasis to this aspect of its marketing effort in the future. We have, of course, already announced the provision of an additional £150,000 to the BTA towards the new British travel centre which will have a key role to play in this aspect.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General how many chairmen and how many members of industrial tribunals there are in each region within the United Kingdom; and how many of such persons in each region are women, of Afro-Caribbean origin and of Asian origin, respectively.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is as follows:

	Total number of members	Women members	Total number of Chairmen	Women Chairmen
England and Wales Regional Office of Industrial Tribunals
Birmingham	172	44	14	—
Bristol	164	28	14	—

Cardiff	130	26	7	—
Leeds	143	22	12	1

Nottingham	87	23	10	—
Sheffield	85	14	12	—
Southampton	140	28	11	—
Scotland	212	31	25	2

In Great Britain there are about 25 members of Afro-Caribbean or Asian origin. I do not consider it appropriate to publish a regional breakdown of these figures. We have no information about the ethnic origins of chairmen of industrial tribunals.

Questions relating to industrial tribunals in Northern Ireland are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Manpower Services Commission

Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General what is the annual salary of each member of the Manpower Services Commission; and what expenses were paid to each member in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Members of the commission are currently paid an annual salary of £673 plus £67·30 for each day worked. Expenses paid to commissioners from 1 April 1984 to 31 March 1985 were as follows:

Miss S. Elkin (resigned January 1985)	50·65
Dr. M. R. Green	307·38
Mr. W. H. Keys	190·30
Mr. J. A. Lawton	808·70
Mr. W. Longden	2,439·56
Sir Norman Payne	196·35

The remaining commissioners received no expenses payments during this period. The salary of the chairman is £52,750 per annum. Expenses of £793 were paid to the chairman during the period 1 April 1984 to 31 March 1985.

Race Relations

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, East of 9 December, he will provide information on the level of under-representation in particular work, the particular racial groups involved and geographical locations in such form as the information is available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Ionising Radiation Regulations

Mr. Roger King asked the Paymaster General why copies of the Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985 and the associated code of practice are not available at the offices of Her Majesty's Stationery Office, Broad street, Birmingham; if he will take steps to ensure that an adequate supply of copies are available before the regulations come into effect on 1 January 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Due to exceptional demand, the regulations and associated code of practice have had to be reprinted. They will both be available from the Birmingham office of HMSO before 1 January 1986.

National Freight Company (Fire)

Mr. Caborn asked the Paymaster General when the report of the Health and Safety Executive into the fire at the warehouse of the National Freight Company in Sheffield on 14 December will be published.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand that the Health and Safety Executive will be publishing the report on Monday 16 December. I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Library.

EC Social Fund

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing the total amount of money paid to Britain under the European Economic Community Social Fund in each year from 1979 to the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will list the figures (a) in cash terms, (b) in real terms at 1985 prices and (c) as a proportion of the total European Economic Community budget.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 10 December 1985, c. 580]: The information requested is given in the table:

Year	Social fund payments—Great Britain Actual £ million	Real terms at 1985 prices £ million	Actual payments as proportion of EEC budget Per cent.
1979	66·2	39·2	0·79
1980	76·9	55·7	0·87
1981	111·9	90·2	1·30
1982	112·9	97·9	1·11
1983	69·6	63·1	0·5
1984	243·7	231·6	*

* Budget details not yet available.

The EEC budget operates within a calendar year and the figures given refer to payments received from January to December each year.

The dip in receipts experienced in 1983 is due to EEC budgetary difficulties which slowed down the level of payments, some of which were carried over into the following year. In 1984, new social fund rules were introduced which for the first time allow advance payments to be made automatically to all approved schemes for that year. This, coupled to the payments carried over from 1983, explains the wide variance between the two years.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mink Farm (Isle of Wight)

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when a decision is likely to be made on an application to operate a mink farm at Porchfield on the Isle of Wight;

(2) whether a valid licence presently exists for the operation of a mink farm on any part of the Isle of Wight.

Mrs. Fenner: A licence to keep mink at Porchfield, Isle of Wight, was issued on 3 December 1985.

Slaughterhouses (Stunning Equipment)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to introduce legislation to require a monthly check of stunning equipment by slaughterhouse authorities.

Mrs. Fenner: The law already requires stunning instruments to be in proper repair. In our response to the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on the welfare of red meat animals at the time of slaughter the Government have proposed to give guidance to local authorities that this provision should be enforced by means of monthly checks.

Hinckley Point

Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a report of the radioactive contamination detected following the site incident at Hinckley point nuclear power station on 29 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: No increase in radioactivity has been detected off-site following the incident. I do not, therefore, intend to publish a report.

Battery Hen Cages

Mr. Frank Field asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the Government's attitude to the proposed changes in European Economic Community regulations on the size of battery hen cages.

Mrs. Fenner: We attach importance to reaching Communitywide agreement on a new directive laying down minimum welfare standards for laying hens in battery cages.

As the House was informed yesterday, this issue was further examined by the Council of Agriculture Ministers on 9/10 December, but no conclusions were reached. Discussions are expected to resume on 19 December.

Sheepmeat (Exports to France)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether, in replying to the hon. Member for Tiverton on 9 December that the best means to return France to her treaty obligations concerning her illegal ban on British sheepmeat exports is to draw the French action to the attention of the European Community Commission and to write to the French Minister of Agriculture, he means that this is more rapidly efficacious than imposing an immediate ban on the import of French turkeys into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: As I made clear in my earlier reply to my hon. Friend, it may be doubted whether the best means to return France to adherance to her treaty obligations is for Britain herself to act illegally.

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total staff of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service as at 1 April in each of the operating departments.

Mrs. Fenner: The total staff of ADAS as at 1 April 1985 was as follows:

	Number
Central Unit	11
Agriculture Service	1,619
Agricultural Science Service	1,141
Land and Water Service	593
State Veterinary Service	1,422
	4,786

Research and Development

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he proposes to announce the savings in programmes within his responsibility referred to in his statement on 28 November.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1985, c. 269.]: A contribution of £1 million is to be made from the programmes for which I am responsible. The cash limit for Class III, Vote 4 (Other Agricultural and Food Services and Support from the Fishing Industry) is being reduced by £650,000 from £145,333,000 to £144,683,000 and extra receipts of £350,000 arising from increased sales of land on that Vote will be surrendered to the Consolidated Fund. Separate announcements are being made about the remaining contribution of £4·3 million which is being found by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Government Subvention (Cost)

21. Mr. Cyril Smith asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate the cost in the present fiscal year and for five fiscal years hence of Her Majesty's Government's subvention to Ulster.

Dr. Boyson: The subvention for 1985-86 is estimated to be £1,468 million. Estimates are not available for future years because a number of the figures which form part of the calculation can only be forecast accurately on an in-year basis.

Security

22. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the present state of cross-border co-operation on security.

Mr. Scott: Co-operation between the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Garda Siochana at a working level is good. I am confident, however, that co-operation in security matters at all levels between the Republic of Ireland and the United Kingdom will be enhanced by the recent agreement. As the joint communiqué issued after the meeting on 15 November between the Prime Minister and the Taoiseach made clear, this will be one of the subjects on which the Intergovernmental Conference will concentrate at its initial meetings. I draw the hon. Gentleman's attention to the statement issued after yesterday's meeting, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

United States Aid

23. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what level of United States aid has been promised to Northern Ireland in the wake of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: The Government of the United Kingdom have not received any formal offers of financial support from the Government of the United States of America for Northern Ireland in response to the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement. But the President has said that he will be working closely with Congress in a bipartisan effort to find tangible ways for the United States to lend practical support to this important agreement. I welcome this response, but I cannot anticipate what the outcome will be.

Assembly

24. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Mr. Tom King: The Assembly's responsibilities are to consider how a widely acceptable Northern Ireland Administration could be formed and, meanwhile, to scrutinise the work of the Northern Ireland Departments. It has suspended its consultative activities and set up a committee to examine the Anglo-Irish Agreement. If this suspension continues for long, questions about the Assembly's continuance will inevitably arise, and it will, in any event, be necessary to review the allocation of staff to it.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

25. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many representations he has received on the Anglo-Irish Agreement; and how many of those received have alleged that the Irish Government have been given a major and substantial role in the day-to-day running of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) earlier today.

27. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, if he will make a statement about the workings of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference.

Mr. Tom King: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question by the Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) earlier today.

28. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will reconsider his decision not to publish the agendas of intergovernmental councils.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question by the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Ross) earlier today.

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the text of the assurances circulated to the Royal Ulster Constabulary and other members of the public service concerning the effects of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, of 9 December 1985, c. 444]: On 15 November 1985, I issued a message about the Anglo-Irish Agreement to all civil servants in the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments. The Chief Constable also issued a statement on the agreement on 29 November, which has been published. I am arranging for a copy of my statement to be placed in the Library.

Flags and Emblems Act 1954

26. Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce legislation to repeal the Flags and Emblems Act 1954.

Mr. Scott: We shall want to give careful consideration to this question. No decisions have yet been taken.

Navan Fort

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received relating to the implications for the archaeological heritage of the possible development of the Navan fort site in County Armagh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: A planning application for an extension to an existing quarry, which lies adjacent to Navan Fort, generated widespread interest and a substantial number of representations were received relating to the implications for the archaeological heritage of the site. The Planning Appeals Commission has held a public inquiry to consider the application and is expected to report early in the new year.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Tom King: I meet the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary regularly. Our meetings are confidential.

Prescriptions

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for the financial years 1983-84 and 1984-85, what were (a) the costs of producing and distributing literature about exemption from prescription charges, (b) the costs of inspection for fraud in claiming exemption from prescription charges and (c) the cost of administering the sale of pre-payment certificates.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for each quarter of the calendar year 1984, the first three quarters of 1985 and for the financial years 1983-84 and 1984-85, what was (a) the number of prescriptions dispensed, (b) the percentage of prescriptions exempt from charges, (c) the costs of prescriptions (i) the payments by patients (including pre-payment certification), (ii) the payments from public funds, (iii) the total costs, (iv) the average gross costs per prescription and (d) the number and type of pre-payment certificate and (e) revenue from the sale of pre-payment certificates.

Mr. Needham: The information requested on prescriptions dispensed by chemist contractors and appliance suppliers is as follows:

New University of Ulster

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his current estimate of the increased capital costs and increased revenue costs, respectively, of the merger between the university of Ulster and Ulster polytechnic to form the new university of Ulster.

Mr. Scott: The merger between the new university of Ulster and the Ulster polytechnic to form the university of Ulster involved no additional capital costs. The current increased revenue cost is estimated to be approximately £900,000.

Anglo-Irish Summit (Security)

Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much it cost to secure Hillsborough castle on the occasion of the Anglo-Irish summit on 15 November.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1985, c. 45]: Precise details are not readily available. However, the cost of policing this event has been estimated at £154,000.

SCOTLAND

Nursery Places

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the numbers of day care places and nursery places provided by Scottish local authorities in each year since 1978-79; and what proportion of the under-five years population in Scotland these numbers represented in each year.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is as follows:

Notes:
(1) The numbers of places and pupils relate to September in each year. The number of pupils is known to rise during the session due to staggered intakes.
(2) The numbers of pupils include full-time and part-time places.

Milk

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the figures for the average household consumption of liquid milk in Scotland in each of the last six years for which figures are available.

Mr. John Mackay: Estimates of average household consumption of liquid milk are obtained from the national food survey conducted by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The information set out in the table takes account of whole white milk, semi-skimmed and skimmed milk, including supplies provided in schools and by the welfare milk scheme. Liquid milk consumed by catering, manufacturing or institutional outlets is excluded.

1980	4·37
1981	4·20

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the average household consumption of liquid milk in Scotland over the last six years for which figures are available, differentiating between higher and lower income families.

Mr. John Mackay: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained, partly on an estimated basis, only at a disproportionate cost.

Population Statistics

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the figures for the number of children aged under five years in Scotland in each of the past five years for which figures are available; and what is his Department's estimate of the proportion of these children in each year who are (a) first-born children and (b) members of large families.

Mr. John MacKay: The Registrar General's estimates of the population aged under five at 30 June in the years 1980-84 are as follows. From a variety of sources, the Registrar General has estimated that, in those years, 40 to 42 per cent. of children under five were first born, 7 to 9 per cent. were in families with four or more children and about 2 per cent. were in families with five or more children.

Note:
There is a discontinuity in the series between 1980 and 1981. The 1981-84 figures have been rebased on the final results from the 1981 census of population.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how many local authority dwellings in each district in Scotland at 31 March were (a) built pre-1940 of non-traditional construction and require comprehensive modernisation, (b) built pre-1940 of traditional construction and require comprehensive modernisation, (c) built post-1939 of non-traditional construction and require comprehensive modernisation and (d) built post-1939 of traditional construction and require comprehensive modernisation.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested at (a), (b) and (d) is provided in the tabel below for 31 March 1984. The details requested at (c) are not held centrally. However, the local housing authorities' estimates of the numbers of dwellings of non-traditional construction built in the immediate post-war period (up to 1955) have been provided.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, for each quarter of the calendar year 1984, the first three quarters of 1985 and for the financial years 1983-84 and 1984-85, what was (a) the number of prescriptions dispensed, (b) the percentage of prescriptions exempt from charges, (c) the costs of prescriptions (i) the payments by patients (excluding pre-payment certificates), (ii) the payments from public funds, (iii) the total costs, (iv) the average gross costs per prescription, (d) the number and type of pre-payment certificate and (e) the revenue from sale of pre-payment certificates.

Mr. John MacKay: The information available on NHS prescriptions dispensed by chemist contractors and appliance suppliers in Scotland is given in the table:

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, for the financial years 1983-84 and 1984-85, for Scotland, what were (a) the costs of producing and distributing literature about exemption from prescription charges, (b) the costs of inspection for fraud in claiming exemption from prescription charges and (c) the cost of administering the sale of pre-payment certificates.

Mr. John MacKay: The detailed procedures relating to these prescription charge arrangements in Scotland are undertaken mainly by health boards and the information requested on costs is not readily available.

Farmers (Exceptional Weather Aid)

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much he is contributing towards the £5·3 million savings announced by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in his statement of 28 November, Official Report, column 1033.

Mr. Younger: Expenditure on Votes within my responsibility will be reduced by a total of £2 million, reflecting expected savings, as follows:

Vote		Reduction £ thousand
XV,1	(Agricultural Support, Scotland)	250
XV,2	(Agricultural Services and Fisheries Scotland)	550
XV,6	(Roads, Transport and Environmental Services, Scotland)	1,114
XV,9	(New Towns, Scotland)	86
		2,000

Corresponding reductions are being made in the cash limits for: Vote XV, 2 from £67,003 million to £66,453 million and for Vote XV, 6 from £147·467 million to £146·353 million.

Agricultural Research and Development

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish the follow-up to the consultation paper "A Strategy for Agricultural Research and Development."

Mr. Younger: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland has today published a paper entitled "Strategy for Agricultural Research and Development." It reports the outcome of the consultation process, outlines future strategy and the implications for the present organisation of research and development in the Scottish agricultural research institutes and the Scottish agricultural colleges, and sets out proposals for improved co-ordination and management of Research and Development in Scotland and its effective integration and co-ordination with similar work throughout the United Kingdom.

Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the outturn revenue spending of each area health board in Scotland for each year from 1979-80 to 1984-85 and the budgeted revenue spending for 1985-86, all expressed in constant 1985-86 prices on the basis of the cost and price factors relevant to the National Health Service, along with indices for each year for each Board's spending taking 1979-80 as 100.

Mr. Younger [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1985, c. 53]: The table gives current expenditure on hospital and community health services by each health board in each year since 1979-80 at 1985-86 prices as measured by the gross domestic product deflator, along with the indices requested. No separate record is maintained of pay and price movements within the NHS in Scotland. When measured by a National Health Service pay and price index maintained for England by the Department of Health and Social Security, expenditure on hospital and community health services in Scotland between 1979-80 and 1984-85 has increased by 6·5 per cent. It would not be appropriate to measure movement in the expenditure of individual health boards on hospital services by reference to the index for national pay and price movements in England, because the composition of individual health boards' expenditure may differ substantially from the national average.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing Health Service expenditure in Scotland for each year since 1979 in real terms, adjusted for (a) the gross domestic product deflator and (b) the medical price index.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 6 December 1985, c. 383]: The information requested is as follows:

The figures in column (b) have been constructed by reference to the National Health Service pay and price index maintained for England by the Department of Health and Social Security.

Childhood Cancer

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether Her Majesty's Government are carrying out or intend to carry out any investigations into the incidence of childhood cancers in the areas around (a) Holy loch and (b) Rosyth.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 9 December 1985, c. 459]: I am advised that there is no established connection between nuclear plants and the incidence of cancers in the surrounding population. Regular monitoring is carried out on environmental levels of radiation in the vicinity of nuclear establishments. There are a number of detailed studies currently in progress into the incidence of cancers in the United Kingdom. These include studies of areas both around and remote from nuclear establishments. The results of these studies will be considered by the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment as they become available. In the meantime COMARE will consider any other relevant information put to it relating to the incidence of childhood cancers in the area around Rosyth and Holy loch.

The establishment of COMARE was announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the then Minister for Health on 25 July with the objective of offering Government independent medical and scientific advice on the health effects of natural and man-made radiation in the environment.

Capital Investment

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the gross capital investment in (i) schools and (ii) higher and further education in 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81, 1984-85 and 1985-86 and planned for 1986-87 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1984-85 prices.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 11 December]: Information is not available in the form requested. The following table gives the information which is available on (a) local authority capital expenditure on schools and further education and (b) central Government capital expenditure on central institutions, colleges of education and grant-aided special schools in Scotland in the years specified.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the gross capital investment in 1. housing and 2. local environmental service in 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81 and 1984-85 then 1985-86 and plan for 1986-87 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) 1984-85 prices.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his reply, 11 December]: The information is as follows:

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of reactors at nuclear power stations in Scotland showing the number of gas circulators or blowers at each reactor, and whether these have any relevant features of design and construction in common with the faulty gas circulator that led to a site incident being declared at Hinckley Point nuclear power station on 29 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Site	Operator	Reactor Type	Number of reactors	Number of gas circulators per reactor
Hunterston A	SSEB	Magnox	2	8
Hunterston B	SSEB	AGR	2	8
Torness*	SSEB	AGR	2	8
Chapelcross	BNFL	Magnox	4	4
Dounreay	UKAEA	Prototype Fast Reactor	1	—

* Under construction.

The gas circulators at Hunterston B are of a similar design to those at Hinckley Point B. Those at Hunterston A and Chapelcross are of an entirely different design and those at Torness have substantially different design features.

The SSEB will be maintaining close contact with the CEGB and Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate about the incident at Hinckley Point B and will take account of any lessons to be learned.

The Nuclear Installations Inspectorate is satisfied that, it is safe to continue to operate nuclear reactors with the type of gas circulator in use at Hinckley Point B and Hunterston B.

ENERGY

Advertising

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for Energy what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament over each of the last 10 years, respectively; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Peter Walker: Advertising expenditure by my Department, by agency and campaign, in each of the last five years was:

Advertising Agency	Campaign	Amount spent with agency
1980-81
Young and Rubicam	Energy Conservation	2,750,000

Figures for the period 1975 to 1980 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

NCB (Subsidiaries)

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, when he next meets the chairman of the National Coal Board, he will raise with him the extent to which the National Coal Board's published accounts accurately record the trading activities of subsidiaries owned wholly or in part by the board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The published accounts of the National Coal Board are prepared in accordance with section 31 of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946 and are audited by external auditors appointed by the Secretary of State, who have certified that the statements give a true and fair view of the state of affairs of the board, and of the board and its subsidiaries taken as a single undertaking, and of the results and source and application of funds for the year.

Redundant Mineworkers Payments Scheme

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he makes of the problems of enforcing compulsory redundancies in the coal mines if the redundant mineworkers benefit scheme is not amended to cover those mineworkers who failed to pay contributions for 12 months; and if he is now able to announce prospects of legislation to assist all those mineworkers concerned.

Mr. David Hunt: The National Coal Board fully maintains its policy of not making redundant any man who wishes to stay in the industry.

My right hon. Friend has already made it clear that no decisions have been made on the details of any scheme to succeed the current redundant mineworkers payments scheme. As my right hon. Friend advised the right hon. Member in the House on 25 November, he will make a statement when conclusions have been reached.

Landward Petroleum Licences

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has considered the applications he received in September 1985 for landward petroleum licences in the first onshore round; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have today announced the conditional award of 20 new-style exploration licences for blocks in England and Scotland which until now have been covered by old style exploration licences. The new style licences will allow companies to proceed to the exploration drilling stage. However, the licences do not give an automatic right to drill exploration wells. Licensees' precise plans are subject to planning permission and to my consent, which will not be given unless the operator provides evidence that planning permission has been obtained.

I will make an announcement about the applications received in the round for currently unlicensed areas as soon as possible next year.

Details of the awards made today have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Hinckley Point

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will explain the circumstances in which potassium iodate tablets were taken by personnel at Hinckley Point nuclear power station on 29 November; what was the maximum level of individual exposures anticipated at that time; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the maximum individual effective dose equivalent commitment in milli-sieverts of any person as a result of the site incident at Hinckley Point nuclear power station on 29 November; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list and describe the calculated total radioactive inventory of the gas, including any fissile particles and debris, released from reactor 3 at Hinckley Point nuclear power station during and subsequent to the site incident on 29 November; what was the calculated collective effective dose equivalent commitment in man-sieverts arising from this incident; and what proportions were attributable to (a) personnel on the site and (b) members of the public outside the site;

(4) what were the quantities of carbon dioxide gas coolant released from reactor 3 at Hinckley Point nuclear power station during and subsequent to the site incident on

29 November (a) as an unfiltered escape and (b) as deliberate releases, stating the degree to which these were filtered to remove fissile particles and debris; and if he will list and describe the radioactive inventory of the gas in the reactor immediately prior to the incident;

(5) if he will estimate the approximate number of days in a year on which fissile products from damaged nulear fuel elements are present in the carbon dioxide gas coolant of (a) a typical Magnox power reactor and (b) a typical advanced gas-cooled reactor; and if he will describe the typical length of delay before a damaged fuel element is withdrawn from a reactor;

(6) if he will publish a list showing, for each type of nuclear power reactor in commercial use, and for each type of nuclear fuel element, the typical rate of failure of fuel element integrity under normal operating conditions in a reactor;

(7) if he will estimate the approximate daily cost of reactor 3 at Hinckley Point nuclear power station being shut down following the site incident on 29 November; and if he will make a statement;

(8) what were the number of days in the last year on which fissile products from damaged nuclear fuel elements were present in the carbon dioxide gas coolant of each of the four reactors at Hinckley Point nuclear power station; and if he will make a statement;

(9) if he will describe the measures undertaken, in progress, or planned to inspect and test gas circulators on reactor 3 and reactor 4 at Hinckley Point nuclear power station following the site incident on 29 November, stating when such work is likely to be completed; if he will describe the precautionary measures taken before such inspection and testing is properly completed; and if he will make a statement;

(10) if he will publish a list of reactors at nuclear power stations showing the number of gas circulators or blowers at each reactor and whether these have any relevant features of design and construction in common with the faulty gas circulator that led to a site incident being declared at Hinckley Point nuclear power station on 29 November; and if he will make a statement;

(11) if he will describe the circumstances in which some minor fault or faults in a gas circulator on reactor 3 at Hinckley Point nuclear power station led to a site incident being declared on 29 November; and whether he is satisfied at present that reactors with such gas circulators are safe for continued operation.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is not available at present. I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) when he expects the Central Electricity Generating board of inquiry into the site incident at Hinckley Point nuclear power station on 29 November to make a report; whether this report will be published; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate to make a report on the site incident at Hinckley Point nuclear power station on 29 November; whether this report will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The CEGB expects shortly to complete its inquiries into the incident at Hinckley Point, and will announce its conclusions. Details of the incident will also be given by the Health and Safety Executive in its report for the fourth quarter of 1985, which will be published in due course. The Nuclear Installations Inspectorate has allowed the board to restart reactor No. 3 at the station. This was returned to service yesterday.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many times since June 1983 he has held meetings with (a) chairmen or chairwomen of local authority social services committees, (b) directors of social services departments, (c) chairmen or chairwomen of health authorities and (d) general managers of health authorities in their own areas.

Mr. Hayhoe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services and ministerial colleagues have had six meetings with large groups of social services chairmen and directors and there have been two specific meetings with social services chairmen and directors in their areas. Apart from regular meetings held centrally with health authority chairmen, there have been 50 ministerial meetings (including 12 by my right hon. Friend) with them in their areas. Ministers have also met chairmen, directors and general managers on numerous other occasions in the course of normal ministerial visits to health and personal social services facilities in their areas.

Child Abuse

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the outcome of the special effort to prevent child abuse referred to in his National Health Service annual report 1985.

Mr. Whitney: Efforts in recent years have focused on guidance to promote better co-operation between the agencies concerned with the prevention of child abuse, and there have been consequent improvements in the liaison and co-ordination of the agencies with responsibility locally. There is more to be done, and the Government have in hand a considerable further programme of work, to help prevent child abuse cases and improve their handling when they occur, including a review of existing guidance.

Local Authority Social Services

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to establish an inspectorate to monitor the provision of social services by local authorities.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 29 October at column 422.

Social Workers

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to extend the training of social workers responsible in child care cases, especially in legal knowledge and application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work recently decided to review the coverage of child care and child abuse, including knowledge of the relevant legislation, in existing qualifying and post-qualifying training courses. The council's earlier resolution that social work qualifying training should be extended from two to three years is the subject of consultations with Government Departments, universities and colleges and other interests as to the action and resources that would be required to implement it.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the current hospital waiting lists by region.

Mr. Whitney: The requested information is given in table 1 of the booklet "Hospital In-Patient Waiting List at 31 March 1985, England National and Regional Summaries", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the present length of waiting lists in the Wolverhampton health authority for trauma and orthopaedic surgery, ear surgery, nose surgery and throat surgery, gynaecology and ophthalmology; and how these compare with those of Coventry, Mid-Staffordshire, Central Nottinghamshire, Rugby and Sutton and Merton.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is given in the table.

Dental Services

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting list time for (a) consultation and (b) treatment for orthodontic cases by a consultant in the hospital service; and what is the average cost of (i) consultation and (ii) treatment for orthodontic cases by a consultant in this service.

Mr. Whitney: Information on waiting times in the orthodontic specialty is not available from the sample information which is held centrally. Information on average costs is not available in precisely the form requested. However, for orthodontic cases for 1983 the estimated average cost for an inpatient case was of the order of £600 at 1984-85 prices.

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average fee given for (a) orthodontic diagnosis, advice and study models in the general dental services and (b) an average case of orthodontic treatment also in the general dental services.

Mr. Hayhoe: The fee paid for an orthodontic case assessment and treatment plan is currently £6. A separate fee is not normally paid for study models but where such a fee is paid it is £6·20 (£3·20 for duplicate models). The average fee paid for orthodontic treatment provided for adults and children involving appliances of all kinds and completed in 1984 was £119·64.

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what were the numbers of estimates scheduled for payment by the Dental Estimates Board in the month of October; and what were the corresponding figures for the years 1981 to 1984, inclusive;

(2) what were the numbers of estimates scheduled for payment by the Dental Estimates Board per dentist in each of the months from January to October, inclusive; and what were the corresponding figures for the years 1981 to 1984, inclusive.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested is given in the tables:

NHS (Capital Programmes)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which major capital programmes have been completed within the National Health Service during the last six years; and which regions of the United Kingdom have benefited from them as a result.

Mr. Whitney: Following is a list of major hospital schemes in England which have been completed during the past six years. The information relates to the completion of the building and engineering contract in each case. Final commissioning of some of the later projects may not yet be complete and the hon. Member may wish to contact the appropriate regional health authority chairman for details in particular cases.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total spending on the payment of pensions each year since 1979-80, the weekly payments to pensioners and the number of people over 60 years and 65 years who have claimed the retirement pension in each year during the same period.

Mr. Major: The information requested is shown in the table:

Year ended 5 April	Total spending on pensions* (£ million)	Number of new claims to retirement pension	Average † weekly payments to pensioners (£)
1979/80	8,816	804,014	21·70‡

† Average weekly payments to pensioners including payable additional component, graduated pension, increments, age addition, invalidity addition, attendance allowance but excluding increases for dependants, graduated pension only and non-contributory retirement pension.

‡ Average at 30 November of the previous year.

‖ Average at 30 September.

¶ Average at 31 March.

Each average rate takes into account the uprating prior to the end of the tax year.

Drugs (Parallel Imports)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the medicines inspectorate is taking any steps to prevent the practice of parallel importing of drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: It would not be appropriate for the medicines inspectorate to act to prevent parallel importing of drugs. A United Kingdom scheme for the licensing of parallel imported medicinal products was introduced on 16 May 1984. To date over 2,100 applications for parallel import product licences have been received and about 75 per cent. of these have been processed resulting in the grant of 700 product licences for parallel imports.

It is not an offence to import and hold in store medicinal products from the European Community which have been licensed in a Community country. An offence is committed if such products are marketed in the United Kingdom without a product licence under the Medicines Act 1968.

A close watch is kept for alleged unlicensed medicines and the medicines inspectorate plays its part in this. All reports of alleged breaches are followed up. Enforcement proceedings are considered if there is prima facie evidence that the terms of the Medicines Act or of EC legislation have been breached.

Drugs and Appliances

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to introduce the stock order for drugs and appliances now available in Scotland in doctors' practices in England, information about which has been sent to him by the hon. Member for Brent, South.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have no plans at present to introduce such a scheme.

Hospitals

Mrs. Reneé Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown of the hospitals in which there have been installed new beds, new operating theatres, new X-ray rooms, accident and emergency departments and new outpatient departments from National Health Service capital spending in the last five years.

Mr. Whitney: The following table lists all new hospital building schemes each costing £2 million or more completed in the last five years which have provided some or all of the following facilities: new beds, new X-ray rooms, operating theatres, accident and emergency departments and outpatients departments.

Population Statistics

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage of the population in each English region living in households of social class I or II.

Mr. Whitney: The following information is available from the 1981 census of population.

Percentage of the population in households with head in Social Class I or II

Region	Percentage
North	18·1
Yorkshire and Humberside	20·2
East Midlands	21·9
East Anglia	24·1
South-East	28·0
South-West	24·6
West Midlands	21·2
North-West	20·9
England	23·8

Notes:
1. Social classes I and II comprise mainly professional and managerial occupations.
2. Only economically active heads of household have been assigned a social class. Comparable figures for households in other social classes, and for households where the head is not economically active, are shown in the 1981 census publication "Key Statistics for Local Authorities" (Table 5).

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the changes in population between 1961 and 1983 for the south-east outside Greater London, the English regions and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested has been taken from table 2.1 of Regional Trends 20 (1985) and is as follows:

Area	Resident population at 30 June		Change
	1961	1983	1961-83

United Kingdom	52,807,000	56,376,800	+3,569,800

Some additional information for intervening years will be found in Population Trends —tables 2 and 3.

Mentally Handicapped Children

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children have been admitted for (a) long-term care and (b) short-term care of less than three months duration, to mental handicap hospitals in the last full year; and if he will name the hospitals and their locations.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not collected centrally in precisely the form requested. The data that are readily available are given in the table. Some children had more than one admission and subsequent discharge during the year and are represented more than once in the figures. Six of the children admitted during 1984, all with a length of stay of less than three months, died during the year.

Nicorette

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now make available on National Health Service prescription nicorette and other such substitutes.

Mr. Whitney: No.

Child Abuse Officers

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many local authorities have child abuse officers.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Nursing (Flammable Material)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what assessment he has made of the fire risks arising from flammable materials used in nursing and in nurses' uniforms; what steps he takes to promote non-flammable materials for nurses' uniform dresses; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received regarding the flammability of nurses' uniform dresses; if he has received any representations on the strength and flexibility of the materials used in nurses' uniforms; if any research has been done on the impact of material for nurses' uniforms on back pain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Following the fire at Treliske hospital in 1983 the Department commissioned flammability tests at the Shirley institute, Manchester on a range of dresses made from a variety of materials and including a number of nurses' uniform dresses, and the report was placed in the Library. The report demonstrated that dresses made from 100 per cent. polyester had superior flammability properties to those of other materials.

A working group conducted a range of tests on dresses of various materials and I am arranging for copies of its report to be placed in the Library. The trials and tests demonstrated that there were no substantial differences except that dresses made from flame retardant polyester had superior flammability characteristics. The report has been considered by the Department and the Health Service Supply Council and following consultations within the National Health Service it was concluded that there were no grounds for changing the material of the present nurses' uniform dress. Copies of the report and of the Department's conclusions have been sent to the Royal College of Nursing.

The Department has not undertaken any research on the impact of the material of nurses' uniforms on back pain. However the Royal College of Nursing has made representations about the design of current dresses and restrictions on movement. Some small changes in design have been made. The northern regional health authority as the centre of responsibility for National Health Service purchase of textile products is, in conjunction with the Department, considering further and more wide-ranging design aspects.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will institute an inquiry into the professional qualifications of speech therapists; if he will publish in the Official Report the length of training and minimum qualifications required for a fully trained speech therapist; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I am satisfied with the present statutory arrangement whereby, in order to obtain employment in the National Health Service, speech therapists are required as a minimum to hold a certificate issued by the College of Speech Therapists certifying that they have successfully attended a degree course recognised by the college. Undergraduate courses are either three or four years in length. In addition there is one postgraduate course of two years' duration for graduates from other disciplines wishing to qualify as speech therapists.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) for the financial years 1983-84 and 1984-85, for England, what were (a) the costs of producing and distributing literature about exemption from prescription charges, (b) the costs of inspection for fraud in claiming exemption from prescription charges and (c) the cost of administering the sale of pre-payment certificates;

(2) for each quarter of the calendar year 1984, the first three quarters of 1985 and for the financial years 1983-84 and 1984-85, for England, what were (a) the number of prescriptions dispensed, (b) the percentage of prescriptions exempt from charges, (c) the costs of prescriptions: (i) the payments by patients (excluding pre-payment certificates), (ii) the payments from public funds, (iii) the total costs and (iv) the average gross per prescription, (d) the number and type of pre-payment certificates and (e) the revenue from sale of pre-payment certificates.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Trauma (Research)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Eccles on 3 December, Official Report, column 211, if he will now indicate what research is being funded by his Department into the effects of trauma on patients who have surgery performed upon them in National Health hospitals; if he will give his estimate of the number of people who suffer from trauma following industrial injuries, accidents in the home, as well as road accidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many health authorities now run fully computerised systems for identifying women in the high risk category for cervical cancer.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 6 December 1985, c. 401-2]: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 9 December 1985 at columns 490-1.

AIDS

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department was first aware that the acquired immune deficiency syndrome was a sexually communicable disease; and what action was then taken to seek to combat the dangers.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 9 December 1985, c. 494]: The possibility that AIDS could be sexually transmitted was suggested following the first reports concerning the disease received from America in 1981. Following the isolation of the causative virus in America and France during 1983, it was confirmed that the condition was caused by an infection which was blood-borne and also sexually transmissible.

In 1982, the communicable disease surveillance centre set up a national surveillance scheme for AIDS cases in the United Kingdom. As medical knowledge of the disease has developed, a number of steps have been taken to control its spread. These measures were set out in my predecessor's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) on 20 February at columns 498-500 and in my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) on 2 December at columns 1-2.

Childhood Cancers

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether Her Majesty's Government are carrying out, or intend to carry out, any investigations into the incidence of childhood cancers in the areas around (a) Aldermaston and (b) Burghfield.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 9 December 1985, c. 495]: I am advised that there is no established connection between nuclear plants and the incidence of cancers in the surrounding population. Regular monitoring is carried out on environmental levels of radiation in the vicinity of nuclear establishments. There are a number of detailed studies currently in progress into the incidence of cancers in the United Kingdom. These include studies of areas both around and remote from nuclear establishments. The results of these will be considered by the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment as they become available.

In the meantime COMARE will consider any other relevant information put to it relating to the incidence of childhood cancers in the areas around Aldermaston and Burghfield. The establishment of COMARE was announced by my right hon. and learned Friend on 25 July at column 771 with the objective of offering Government independent medical and scientific advice on the health effects of natural and man-made radiation in the environment.

Acheson Report

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the recommendations of the Acheson report have been implemented.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 9 December 1985, c. 496.]: Many of the 115 recommendations of the Acheson report on primary health care in Inner London were directed at the wide range of bodies with responsibilities or interests in the primary health care field. These were asked to give the report urgent consideration as a basis for local action, but it would not be feasible to mount an exercise to monitor local implementation. Some recommendations raised more general issues, in relation to the future provision of services, which will be considered in the context of the Green Paper on primary health care; guidance on deputising services has already been issued. To promote action nationally on the Acheson report recommendations, the Government announced in 1983 a £9 million package, much of which has been passed to the relevant regional health authorities for projects that would benefit primary health care services locally. Other parts of this package are being used centrally to fund schemes and projects on the lines recommended by this report. These include more training opportunities for health visitors and district nurses and, for general practitioners in inner cities, enhanced premises improvement grants, funding for the improvement and monitoring of minimum standards in those premises, architectural advice on premises, additional incentives to form group practices, and training aids. Support has been provided for five academic departments of general practice, to enhance liaison between those departments and the local practices. Central funds have also been made available to promote projects to explore different ways of organising primary health care provision based on small areas, improving the dissemination of information about primary health care in inner cities, enhancing collaboration between family practitioner committees and health authorities, and promoting experimental schemes to provide primary health care for the homeless and rootless.

THE ARTS

Film Industry

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister for the Arts how much money the British film industry received from the Government over the last six years.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1985, c. 337]: The British film industry is funded by venture capital; it is not a subsidised industry. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has been responsible for recycling funds from the distribution side of the industry to the production side under the provisions of the former Films Acts 1960 to 1980.

I am responsible for the British Film Institute, and its grant-in-aid over the last six years has been:

Year	£
1980-81	5,829,000
1981-82	6,520,000

CIVIL SERVICE

South Africa

Dr. McDonald asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many South African products, and in what quantities, and at what prices, are used in the preparation of meals in Civil Service canteens.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available as supplies for Civil Service canteens are not bought centrally.

Dr. McDonald asked the Minister for the Civil Service what representations he has received regarding the use of South African foods in Civil Service canteens; if he will list the correspondents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

The Council of Civil Service Unions wrote to me on 15 November 1985 suggesting a boycott of South African foods in Civil Service canteens. In my reply of 28 November, I explained that it was not the Government's policy to impose economic sanctions on South Africa, which would cover imports of food products, and that I could not therefore agree to the request.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Advertising

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament over each of the last 10 years, respectively; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Brooke: The Treasury has incurred expenditure on the employment of advertising agents on four occasions since 1980 for work in connection with privatisation: the sale of BP in 1983, the sales of Cable and Wireless in 1983 and 1985, and the sale of Britoil in 1985. The agents employed are as follows:

BP 1983 — St. James's Advertising & Street's Advertising

Cable and Wireless 1983 — Street's Financial Advertising

Britoil 1985—Dewe Rogerson Ltd
Cable and Wireless 1985—Collett Dickinson, Pearce and Partners Ltd

It is not the practice to disclose the value of individual contracts between the Government and their advisers.

I regret that information about years before 1980 cannot be provided without a disproportionate expenditure of time and resources.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total estimated revenue accrued from value added tax on building alterations; and if he will estimate how much of this relates to building works on voluntary schools.

Mr. Brooke: Businesses registered for value added tax are not required to make returns of the tax charged on particular supplies of goods or services, and information of this kind is therefore not directly available. However, estimates of personal sector expenditure on improvements to dwellings suggest that the yield from value added tax in the fiscal year 1984-85 was of the order of £300 million. Of this it is thought that some £3 million relates to building works on voluntary schools, but funding arrangements mean that 85 per cent. of this is borne by the Department of Education and Science.

Mr. Brian Moller-Butcher

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the estimated cost to the Crown of the recent case against Mr. Brian Moller-Butcher.

Mr. Brooke: The estimated cost of the investigation and legal expenses in the case of Mr. Brian Moller-Butcher is £14,000.

Deep Discount Securities

Mr. Stern asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether notional interest on deep discount securities is to be calculated on the basis of issue price, or cost price to the individual holder.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The discount on deep discount securities is treated as income accruing over the life of the security. It is calculated by reference to the issue price and the redemption value.

Cable and Wireless

Mrs. Currie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement about the sale of the Government's remaining ordinary shares in Cable and Wireless.

Mr. Moore: The sale has been successfully completed. About 220,000 applications were received from the general public, including employees and pensioners of Cable and Wireless plc, for a total of over 100 million shares. The public offer was therefore over two times subscribed.

In accordance with the Government's policy of encouraging wider share ownership, all applications for 200 shares or fewer are being met in full. Three quarters of the shares available to the public have been allocated to people who applied for 1,000 shares or fewer.

Details of allocations are as follows:

Number of shares applied for	Number of shares allocated
50	In full
100	In full
150	In full
200	In full
250-350	200
400-550	220
600	240
650	260
700	280
750-1,000	300
1,100 and above	30 per cent. of shares applied for

Independent Schools

Mr. Hancock asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated loss of revenue arising from the charitable status of independent schools.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

PAYE and National Insurance

Mrs. Currie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the result of the pilot scheme of co-operation between the Inland revenue and the Department of Health and Social Security over inspections of employers' pay-as-you-earn and national insurance records.

Mr. Moore: In July 1983 my predecessor announced a pilot scheme to test whether procedures could be introduced to reduce the number of separate visits to employers by officers of the Inland Revenue and the Department of Health and Social Security.

In the exercise, carried out in 1983-84, certain DHSS inspectors, when visiting employers about national insurance matters, also made a limited review of the operation of the pay-as-you-earn scheme. The results indicate that if these arrangements were undertaken nationally, they could lead to a substantial reduction in the number of duplicated visits made to employers each year.

Accordingly, the Government have decided to implement the new arrangements on a nationwide basis. They should be fully operational in the middle of 1986.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many customs officers were employed in drug detection duties over the past 12 months; and what number he estimates will be so engaged over the forthcoming year.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 11 December 1985]: The number of customs preventive officers, whose main priority is drugs detection, is as follows:

1 April	Number
1985	2,823
1986*	3,000
1987*	3,300

* Estimated.

In addition, the number of specialist drugs investigators is as follows:

1 April	Number
1985	212
1986*	262
1987*	297

* Estimated.

TRANSPORT

Car Registration Letter

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to change the date for the introduction of the annual letter for new car registrations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department is currently carrying out a detailed internal review of the impact of the August change in the year identification letter on the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre's system and costs. I also wish to take account of the views of the motor trade and the other main interests involved before dealing with any change.

Vehicle Statistics

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles per kilometre of surfaced road there are in each English region.

Mr. Ridley: The information is as follows:

Traffic flow on public roads by Department of Transport regions: 1982-84 average

	Vehicles kilometres per kilometre per day (rounded to nearest 500)
Northern	2,000
Yorkshire-Humberside	2,000
East Midlands	2,000
Eastern	2,500
South-Eastern	3,000
Greater London	5,000
South-West	1,500
West Midlands	2,500
North-West	2,500

Fixed Channel Link

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, before he announces any Government decisions on the construction of a fixed Channel link, he will produce a fully costed study indicating the benefits of a link to the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Ridley: The overall benefit of a link to the economy of the United Kingdom as a whole will be one of the matters discussed in the White Paper which the Government will issue when their decision is announced; it would be impossible to produce such a study earlier.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to seek the approval of the House for any agreement with the French Government on a fixed Channel link, before appropriate enabling legislation is introduced.

Mr. Ridley: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House.

Stansted Airport (Rail Link)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has now received submissions from British Rail and the British Airport Authority on the feasibility of providing a rail link to Stansted airport; and if he will make it his policy to publish the submissions before he makes any determination upon them.

Mr. Ridley: I have received British Rail's submission on the financial case for a rail link to Stansted. It is not our policy to publish documents which contain commercially confidential material.

Deutsche Touring Company

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will find out from European Economic Community sources whether the Deutsche Touring company, a wholly owned subsidiary of the German State Railways, possesses a licence registered with the European Economic Community for the bus journey from Ostend to Frankfurt.

Mr. David Mitchell: The decision whether to authorise a service between Ostend and Frankfurt is a matter for the competent authorities in Belgium and the Federal Republic of Germany under EEC regulation 517/72. Deutsche Touring is a partner in an authorised service between London and Munich on which passengers may be picked up and set down at Ostend and Frankfurt. It is not allowed to operate a separate service between these cities.

Bus Licensing

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether European Economic Community rules permit the German authorities licensing bus companies to discriminate against United Kingdom firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: EEC regulation 517/72 provides no grounds for discrimination against an applicant on the basis of the member state in which he is established.

Bus Operators (Controls)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether the United Kingdom operates any restrictions on British bus operators from taking on contracts from German tour or travel operators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The United Kingdom operates no such restrictions but the bus operator must comply with the legislation relevant to the type of service being provided.

Bus Link (Ostend-Frankfurt)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will initiate discussions with the British Airways International Company about the implications for Southend airport of the refusal of a nationalised German company to operate a bus link from Ostend to Frankfurt which is an integral part of a major regular service from London to Frankfurt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The implications of this decision are a commercial matter for those concerned.

Taxi Dispute (Heathrow)

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of the British Airports Authority, he will raise with him the current dispute between the authority and licensed taxi drivers at Heathrow; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of the British Airports Authority, he will raise with him the surcharge levied by the British Airports Authority on taxi drivers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets the chairman of BAA regularly to discuss a variety of issues. The introduction of a charge for entry to the taxi feeder park at Heathrow is a matter for the BAA. The Government support the principle of the recovery of costs from those who benefit from the provision of facilities.

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the effect of the current dispute between licensed taxi drivers and the British Airports Authority on (a) road safety and (b) traffic flow on those roads near Heathrow for which he is responsible.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am advised that neither the police nor our agent authority have observed any changes either in road safety or traffic flows.

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the effect of the current dispute between licensed taxi drivers and the British Airports Authority on (a) the maintenance of public order and (b) the uninterrupted movement of passengers and vehicles at Heathrow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department have received any representations on these aspects of the dispute.

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what account he takes of charges imposed by the British Airports Authority on taxi drivers when setting the fare structure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have taken account of these charges but decided that it was unnecessary to provide for a surcharge on fares from Heathrow airport. I will, however, review the situation if, in the longer term, these charges affect the supply of taxis at Heathrow.

Flags of Convenience

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what additional United Kingdom shipping tonnage is now operating under flags of convenience compared with 1970, 1975 and 1980.

Mr. Ridley: The information is not available in the form requested. However, it has been estimated that, in 1984, shipping registered outside the United Kingdom but beneficially owned by United Kingdom residents amounted to about 3 million gross registered tonnes. Estimates are not available for earlier years.

A40 (Swakeleys Road Junction)

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the effects of the opening of the M25 on congestion at the Swakeleys road junction with Uxbridge Circus on the A40; what plans he has to expedite planned works at this junction; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Since the M25 opened, daily traffic on the A40 at Uxbridge Circus has increased by about 5 per cent. mainly off-peak. Draft proposals for an underpass at this junction were published on 5 December and the speed with which the scheme proceeds will depend upon the nature and weight of objections received, and whether a public inquiry proves necessary.

Roads

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek means to expedite statutory processes connected with urgent major road improvements; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment are considering ways of speeding up the preconstruction procedures for all national road schemes in the light of the Civil Engineering EDC's report "A Fairer and Faster Route to Major Road Construction".

ENVIRONMENT

Advertising

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament over each of the last 10 years, respectively; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Figures are available for the past five financial years only. To go back further would involve disproportionate costs.

The following table lists names of the agencies employed by my Department, the subject of the campaigns and the amount spent through the agency on each campaign.

Agency	Campaign	Expenditure £'s

Lambeth Council (Housing Subsidies)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current level of housing subsidies to Lambeth council.

Sir George Young: On its first advance claim for 1985-86, Lambeth LBC estimated its entitlement to housing subsidy as £36·8 million. On its second advance claim form, the council estimated its entitlement as £42 million. Pending a satisfactory explanation of the reason for the increase, payments of subsidy are continuing on the basis of the first advance claim form. Payments will be subject to adjustment in any case when the audited final claim for the year has been received.

Unused Land

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much unused land for disposal is recorded in the Land Registry; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: At the end of October just under 100,000 acres of land were recorded on the registers of unused and underused land. At the time of registration, the owners of about 44 per cent. of the land now on the registers stated that it was their intention to dispose of it.

House Prices

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the average change in house prices over the last year in each English region and in the United Kingdom.

Sir George Young: The percentage increases in dwelling prices between the years ending September 1984 and September 1985, are as follows:

Increase in dwelling prices between October 1983 to September 1984 and October 1984 to September 1985

	Percentage
North	5
Yorkshire and Humberside	5
East Midlands	7
East Anglia	11
Greater London	14
South East (excluding Greater London)	11
South West	8
West Midlands	6
North West	5
United Kingdom	9

Source: Sample survey of building society mortgages completed for house purchase: indices adjusted to allow for changes in the mix of dwellings purchased, excluding sales to sitting tenants.

The sample is not large enough to provide reliable regional quarterly figures, but shows a price rise in the United Kingdom as a whole of 8 per cent. between the third quarter 1984 and the third quarter 1985.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the average price of a three-bedroomed detached house and a terraced house in each English region and in the United Kingdom.

Sir George Young: The available information on the average prices of detached and terrace houses in 1984 is as follows:

Average dwelling price: £

	Detached houses	Terrace houses
North	39,400	16,700
Yorkshire and Humberside	38,700	15,200
East Midlands	37,500	15,900
East Anglia	42,000	20,500
Greater London	77,500	38,900
South East (excluding Greater London)	60,800	28,600
South West	46,900	23,000
West Midlands	40,400	16,200
North West	43,700	16,000
United Kingdom	46,800	22,000

Local Authorities (Economic Development)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to introduce legislation to give local authorities further statutory powers to promote economic development in their areas.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to do so. The Government have, however, asked the Widdicombe inquiry, as part of its terms of reference, to clarify the limits and conditions governing local authorities' use of their discretionary spending powers, particularly under section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972 and section 83 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973. These powers are widely used for economic development. We shall consider the position in the light of the inquiry's eventual recommendations.

Football Grounds (Closed circuit Television)

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many football grounds in Great Britain are in possession of closed circuit television; and what proportion these are of the total.

Mr. Tracey: 27 grounds in the Football League and the Scottish Football League now have closed circuit television systems. This represents 21 per cent. of the total number of grounds in the two leagues. The aim of the football authorities is to have CCTV at all clubs in divisions 1 and 2 in England and the premier division in Scotland as quickly as possible.

Trinity and St. Matthias Estates, Salford

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have taken place between his Department and Salford city council concerning proposals for the redevelopment of public housing in the Trinity and St. Matthias estate areas of Salford; and whether he is satisfied that the residents of the area have so far been adequately informed and consulted about any proposals for the redevelopment of their homes.

Sir George Young: Salford City Council has informed my officials of various proposals which the city is considering for the Trinity and St. Matthias estate area. Chapter II of the Housing Act 1980 imposes on local housing authorities a continuing duty to consult their tenants on matters of housing management which will substantially affect them.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has received an application for financial assistance under the urban development grant scheme for the redevelopment of public housing in the Trinity and St. Matthias areas of Salford.

Sir George Young: No.

Urban Programme Grant

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in what way his Department's offer of urban development grant for the provision of dwellings for sale by Barratts Urban Construction (Northern) Ltd. on part of the Spencerbeck housing estate owned by Langbaurgh borough council satisfies the criterion laid down in his Department's guidance notes for the urban development scheme, that projects aided by urban development grant should make a demonstrable contribution to meeting the special social needs of inner urban areas.

Sir George Young: The project comprises the refurbishment of part of an estate which had become difficult-to-let and which exhibited physical and environmental problems. It will provide 137 homes for sale and widen tenure choice in the area.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the application by Salford city council for urban development grant for the conversion by Barratt Urban Renewal (Northern) Ltd. of vandalised dwellings to provide flats and houses for sale in St Stephen's street, Salford.

Sir George Young: All applications for urban development grant are treated as commercially confidential.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much is being currently spent on urban regeneration projects in (a) Sheffield, (b) Bristol, (c) Brighton, (d) Leicester, (e) Coventry, (f) Portsmouth and (g) Southampton.

Sir George Young: Many agencies, public and private, are involved in urban regeneration. Figures for the urban programme, for which my Department is responsible are:

Authority	Programme Allocation 1985-86 £000	Urban Development Grant Scheme Approvals £000	Traditional Urban Programme total Approvals £000	TOTAL £000
Programme Authorities
Coventry	4,300	499	—	4,799
Leicester	5,430	250	—	5,680
Sheffield	4,010	370	—	4,380
Traditional Urban Programme
Brighton	—	—	165·2	165·2
Bristol	—	—	707·0	707·0
Portsmouth	—	—	249·4	249·4
Southampton	—	—	138·4	138·4

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the estimated percentage of expenditure met by rate support grant, based on each authority spending at grant-related expenditure in 1986-87 and (b) the projected rate of change in that percentage between 1985-86 and 1986-87, assuming that balances remain unchanged, for the metropolitan district councils of (i) Manchester, (ii) Liverpool, (iii) Sheffield, (iv) Newcastle, (v) Leeds and (vi) Birmingham.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend hopes to announce his decisions on the rate support grant settlement for 1986-87 before the Christmas recess.

32 Monmouth Road, Paddington (Purchase Application)

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will investigate the right-to-buy application made in November 1983 for the purchase of 32 Monmouth road, Paddington, W2, by the Monmouth Road Co-operative Ltd.; on how many occasions the application has been referred to his Department for legal advice; and when he expects the application to be approved.

Sir George Young: The applications by the three tenants of 32 Monmouth road to buy their flats have not been straightforward because of the conditions under which the co-operative obtained the property from the GLC, but at my hon. Friend's request, and following correspondence from one of the tenants involved, my Department has been investigating the applications. It has now been agreed between the Department and the GLC, which is the mortgagee of the property, that there is no legal obstacle to a formal offer under the right to buy. Further discussions will still be needed on the financial implications for the co-operative.

Disabled Persons Act 1981

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in measures to enable him to implement section 6 of the Disabled Persons Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My Department consulted in 1982 on proposals for implementing section 6, but the response indicated that new building regulations, applied and enforced by local authorities, would be a more effective alternative. After further consultation, new building regulations came into operation on 1 August 1985 requiring that new offices, shops, single-storey factories, educational and public buildings should be accessible to disabled people.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on research being undertaken into the use of lead for safe isolation and disposal of high level radioactive waste.

Mrs. Rumbold: Research is being undertaken into the suitability of lead as an infilling material in containers for heat-generating wastes or spent fuel in the European Community programme of research and in Sweden. The UK is kept informed of the results, but we are undertaking no research of our own since it is policy to store such radioactive waste for at least fifty years prior to disposal.

Property Services Agency (Health Screening)

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements currently exist for health screening within the Property Services Agency for staff in Greater London and Chessington; and what changes in the existing arrangements have been proposed.

Sir George Young: There are no standing arrangements for health screening within PSA for staff in Greater London and Chessington. It is, however, proposed to mount an experiment early next year in which BUPA will provide free talks on health education to PSA staff in Greater London and Chessington and, if wanted, health checks for men and women staff at their own expense, but at a substantial discount. An announcement to the staff to this effect will be made on 10 January.

DEFENCE

Exercise Brave Defender

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation base at Stornoway was used for any purpose during the Brave Defender defence exercise.

Mr. Stanley: A headquarters, for exercise purposes only, was set up within RAF Stornoway during Brave Defender.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence what part of the Brave Defender defence exercise took place in the Western Isles; and who participated.

Mr. Stanley: Exercise activity in the Western Isles took place between 7 and 11 September when the ground defence of a number of exercise key points was practised. Members of the Regular Army, the Royal Air Force, and the Home Service Force took part.

Devonport Dockyard

Miss Fookes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria he will use in assessing the bid announced by the management of Her Majesty's dockyard, Devonport on Monday 10 December for the contract to undertake dockyard services at Devonport.

Mr. Heseltine: As the House knows, companies continue to show a growing interest in the future management of the dockyards. Additionally the managing director of Devonport dockyard, Mr. David Johnston, with a small team of managers at the dockyard, including serving royal naval officers as well as civil servants, have now formed a company, Devonport Dockyard Ltd., and have put together an outline plan to bid in competition with other companies for the contract to manage Devonport dockyard.

The management's proposal is fully in line with our overall policy of promoting competition and seeking increased efficiency in the way the dockyards are run. It has been made clear to the management team that its bid will have to compete on exactly the same terms as that of any other company, and that the criteria which will be used by my Department to evaluate the Devonport management response to the invitation to tender will be no different from those which will apply to other bidders. Such an assurance has been given to all those companies which continue to show an interest in managing the dockyards.

Before agreeing that the team should proceed with this initiative I considered the question of possible conflict of interest. However, I am satisfied that there is a broad identity of interest for those concerned, both as managers of the dockyard and as potential bidders for the contract. In both capacities, for example, they have a commitment to supporting the Fleet, to increased efficiency and to the future well-being of the work force. I have, however, made it clear to the managing director that work on developing his team's bid will not be allowed to conflict with his prime responsibility for the operation of the dockyard up to 1 April 1987, nor with the requirement to make information available to other interested companies. Assurances have been given to companies on these matters and we shall be keeping the arrangements under close review.

The Government welcome this new interest and regard it as a strong sign of personal commitment by local management to a secure and promising future for the dockyard.

Defence Contracts (Naval Officers)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether serving naval officers have previously been given permission to bid for Ministry of Defence contracts, or to form companies to make such bids.

Mr. Lee: There are no similar precedents involving serving naval officers. Those serving naval officers who are members of the management team at Devonport dockyard, which has formed a company to tender for the contract to run the dockyard would, of course, be required to retire from the Royal Navy were the team to secure the contract and were the officers to remain in the company.

Rosyth Dockyard

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if serving naval officers and serving civil servants are to be permitted to form private companies to bid for the commercial franchise for running Her Majesty's royal dockyard at Rosyth.

Mr. Lee: If a request were to be made by the management at Rosyth dockyard to bid for the contract to manage the dockyard, it would, of course, be considered on its merits in exactly the same way as was the request by the management team at Devonport dockyard.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence which private contractors or their representatives visited Her Majesty's Rosyth dockyard on 9 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: None of the firms which have expressed an interest in the Government's plans for the commercial management of Rosyth dockyard made visits on 9 December. However, as part of a separate exercise, PA Management Consultants began on that day a study aimed at developing new management systems to improve efficiency, productivity and competitiveness within the dockyard.

Foxhunting

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Defence which Army horses have been used for foxhunting; if he will name the regiments, officers and hunts concerned; and if he will institute an inquiry.

Mr. Lee: Each winter a number of Army horses from the Household Cavalry, Kings' Troop RHA and the Guards Division, all based in London, are sent to the RAVC training centre at Melton Mowbray for exercising and training. As part of this training, and also to improve equestrian standards, some horses are ridden in hunts. Last winter — 1984-85 — 42 horses, 19 officers and 25 soldiers participated in the hunting. The officers and soldiers are all volunteers. The hunts involved were the Belvoir, Quorn and Cottesmore. All payments to the hunts were from non-public funds.

NATO (Expenditure)

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the percentage increase in the defence spending of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation states over the period since 1979.

Mr. Stanley: The real increases in the defence spending of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation states over the period 1979-84 are as follows:

	Percentage
Belgium	5·1
Canada	28·6
Denmark	0·9
France	12·6
Germany	6·9
Greece	16·2
Italy	16·4
Luxembourg	36·2
Netherlands	12·6

Note: The figures are United Kingdom estimates based on NATO definition of defence spending. In the case of France the figures are indicative only. Iceland does not appropriate funds for defence. Spain was not a member of the alliance before 1982. Care is needed in making direct comparisons as different deflators are used by countries to calculate real growth.

9 and 14 Signals Regiments

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many former members of 9 Signals Regiment have been subjected to interrogation since 3 February 1984;

(2) how many service men currently serving with 9 Signals Regiment have been subjected to interrogation since 3 February 1984;

(3) how many service men currently serving with 14 Signals Regiment have been subjected to interrogation since 3 February 1984.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his answer, 4 December 1985, c. 278]: Some 300 people provided statements of evidence as part of the investigation into the alleged breaches of the Official Secrets Acts at 9 Signals Regiment that were the subject of legal proceedings this year. A larger number were interviewed but did not subsequently provide statements. It would not be possible to establish in respect of each and every person interviewed the unit in which they were serving at the time of their interview and the unit in which they are currently serving except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many former members of 14 Signals Regiment have been subjected to interrogation by military or civil police since 3 February 1984.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his answer, 10 December 1985, c. 594]: It would not be possible to establish in respect of each and every person interviewed whether they were former members of 14 Signals Regiment except at disproportionate cost.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Young Persons (Tobacco Sales)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of reports to procurators fiscal, prosecutions, convictions, and the average fine imposed for such convictions, for offences under section 18 of the Children and Young Persons (Scotland) Act 1937 in each of the last 10 years.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: There are no available statistics in relation to contraventions of section 18 of the Children and Young Persons (Scotland) Act 1937.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

UNESCO

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the answer of 5 December, Official Report, column 450, he will list the further actions which would need to be carried through by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation for Her Majesty's Government to consider rejoining the organisation.

Mr. Raison: Before considering rejoining UNESCO we would need to be convinced that the organisation had adopted thoroughgoing and comprehensive reforms and that all member states and the secretariat were once again fully committed to working towards its constitutional aims and objectives.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens presently work for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation; what effect United Kingdom withdrawal will have on their employment; and what action he has taken to safeguard their interests.

Mr. Raison: About 225 British citizens are currently employed by UNESCO. The withdrawal of Britain from membership of the organisation will not affect their terms of employment as international civil servants.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what effect United Kingdom withdrawal from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation will have on British citizens who are United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation scholarship holders and on overseas United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation scholarship holders within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Raison: At the moment there are no British citizens who are UNESCO scholarship holders. I know of no reason why the interests of UNESCO scholars at present at British institutions should be affected by our withdrawal. It is for UNESCO to decide its future policy on sending UNESCO scholars to Britain.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify which of the reforms mentioned in his letter to the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organisation of 5 December 1984 have not been implemented or tackled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: I refer the hon. Member to my statement to the House on 22 November at columns 517-25.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all representations received by Her Majesty's Government which (a) approved and (b) disapproved of the United Kingdom's decision to withdraw from UNESCO, specifying, in each case, the country from which the representation came.

Mr. Raison: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 12 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Murphy) at column 707.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the conditions under which Her Majesty's Government would be prepared to rejoin UNESCO have been transmitted to UNESCO; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: No. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 11 December.

PRIME MINISTER

Military Nuclear Installations (Cancer)

Mr. Harris asked the Prime Minister what research is already available and what research has been commissioned into the relative incidence of cancers in the vicinity of military nuclear installations; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I understand that the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys is sponsoring a study to compare the incidence and mortality of certain malignancies in areas around nuclear establishments with those in control areas. Other studies of the incidence of cancer in various parts of the country are also being undertaken, including one by the Royal Berkshire hospital.

Earlier this year the Government established a committee on the medical aspects of radiation in the environment. This committee was established for the specific purpose of offering the Government independent medical and scientific advice on the health effects of natural and man-made radiation in the environment. The committee will be able to advise whether, in the light of the current studies, further research into particular issues is necessary.

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Prime Minister how many workplace nurseries are operated by Government Departments; how many children use these nurseries; and what is the average total subsidy from public funds per child.

The Prime Minister: There are no workplace nurseries at present operated by Government Departments.

Research and Development.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Prime Minister whether she will publish the factual material assembled for the 1985 annual review of Government funded research and development.

The Prime Minister: The annual review of Government funded R & D, announced in the Government's response (Cmnd. 8591) to the House of Lords Select Committee report "Science and Government", has now completed its third cycle. As in previous years, Departments' R & D plans were submitted for review by Government under the guidance of the Interdepartmental Committee of Chief Scientists, and for comment by the Advisory Council on Applied Research and Development (ACARD), which provides independent advice.

The factual material assembled for the 1985 review, with some commentary, will again be published by the Government in order to inform the debate on this important topic. It will be published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office on Monday 16 December, and I am arranging to have copies placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Dogs

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many dog licences were purchased in Northern Ireland in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984; and what is the latest figure for 1985.

Dr. Boyson: The available information is as follows:—

	Number of licences purchased	Number of dogs licensed
1 April 1980 to 31 March 1981	36,971	50,776
1 April 1981 to 31 March 1982	32,867	45,259
1 April 1982 to 31 March 1983	35,230	48,686
1 April 1983 to 18 December 1983	24,892	33,936
19 December 1985 to 31 December 1984	84,137	*86,673
1 January 1985 to 30 September 1985	60,383	*62,619

* Licences issued since 19 December 1983 include block licences which are available in certain circumstances to people who keep three or more dogs is not known, but for statistical purposes is estimated at the minimum o three per block licence.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many dogs have been destroyed in Northern Ireland since 1 January 1985;

(2) how many dogs were destroyed in Northern Ireland during each of the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, and 1984.

Dr. Boyson: The available information is as follows:

Year	Number of dogs humanely destroyed
1980	Not available
1981	9,580
1982	10,510
1983	11,100
1984	12,228
1 January to 30 June 1985	1,836 by USPCA
1 January to 30 September 1985	7,403 by district councils

Up to 18 December 1983 the Ulster Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals dealt with stray dogs as agents of the Northern Ireland police authority; from 19 December 1983 responsibilitity has rested with district councils under the terms of the Dogs (Northern Ireland) Order 1983.

The figures include not only stray dogs but also dogs which were either unwanted or which had to be put down by reason of infirmity of disease. Homes are found for about 25 per cent. of the stray and unwanted dogs dealt with by the USPCA and district councils.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cost of collecting the dog licence in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: The information requested is not available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has in relation to parents of children taking part in the assisted places scheme as to whether they are (a) separated or divorced, (b) unemployed, (c) retired, (d) disabled or (e) manual workers.

Mr. Dunn: Such information is not collected by the Department.

Overseas Students

Mr. Barry Jones: asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many overseas students pursue studies for further degrees, M.Sc. and Ph.D. through University College, Wales, Aberystwyth and Welsh Plant Breeding Station, Aberystwyth and in which broad areas of work; how this compares with 1979-80; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The number of students paying overseas fees at the Welsh Plant Breeding Station were as follows:

	Number
1979-80
Ph.D. developmental genetics	1
Ph.D. herbage breeding	1
Ph.D. plant pathology	1
M.Sc. plant breeding	5
1984-85
Ph.D. grass breeding	1
Ph.D. agriculture	1
M.Sc. plant breeding	7

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what account was taken by the national advisory body for higher education of the European Economic Community directive requiring freedom to practise throughout the European Economic Community for professionals when it decided to restrict entry to the architectural profession; what savings will be made by this step; and what loss of revenue will be incurred as a result of deterring foreign students from coming to the United Kingdom to study architecture.

Mr. Walden: (i) The directive was drawn to the attention of NAB in representations from a variety of sources during its consideration of architecture intakes.

(ii) Assuming the reduction in part II intakes to architecture courses recommended by NAB and the UGC is implemented from 1989, there would be a minimum saving on mandatory awards to part II students of roughly £600,000 at current grant level.

(iii) None. Provision for overseas students wishing to study architecture is not at issue.

Education Expenditure (Comparisons)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide figures for the United Kingdom for the proportion of the gross domestic or gross national product spent on education comparable with those of other European countries referred to in his Department's publication "Selected National Education Systems".

Sir Keith Joseph: The information is as follows:

Country	Financial year beginning in	Expenditure on education as a percentage of gross national product
France	1980	*5·1
Germany, Federal Republic of	1980	4·7
Italy	1979	5·0
Netherlands	1981	†7·9
United Kingdom	1981	5·4

Medical Research Council

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what machinery is available in his Department to monitor the administrative work of the Medical Research Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The Medical Research Council is one of a number of bodies which have royal charters and are sponsored by the Department. The Department's relationship with the council is along the lines set out in the Cabinet Office (MPO) and Her Majesty's Treasury Publication "Non-Departmental Public Bodies: A Guide for Departments", a copy of which is in the Library. Monitoring functions are mainly discharged through the Department's science branch.

Agriculture and Food Research Council

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if the Agriculture and Food Research Council through the Welsh Plant Breeding Station at Aberystwyth is considering investigating alternatives to current grassland and animal farming systems in the wetter western portions of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proportion of the combined budget of the new animal and grassland research institute will be spent at the Welsh Plant Breeding Station Aberystwyth; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will ensure that the Welsh Plant Breeding Station, Aberystwyth will remain active in the research on oat breeding and related research; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if forage breeding and the related genetic expertise will form an important part of the Agriculture and Food Research Council's grassland research programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: I understand that the Agricultural and Food Research Council (AFRC) is committed to a strong research programme at the Welsh Plant Breeding Station (WPBS) related to the needs of livestock and grassland enterprises in the wetter west of Britain. Within this broad remit the precise content and balance of the research programme at the WPBS will be determined by the director of animal production and grassland research in the light of a number of factors including the level of his institute's grant-in-aid from the science budget through the AFRC, the commissioning needs of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and industrial and scientific advice available to him.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what will be the grades of the new posts of the director of research and of site directors of the new animal and grassland reseach insitutue of the Agriculture and Food Research Council; what will be the preferred specialisations of the successful candidates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: No decision has yet been taken about the grade of the new post of director of the AFRC's animal production and grassland research institute. I understand that the successful candidate will be chosen on the basis of proven leadership ability in the relevant scientific discipline. I also understand that the management of sites within the new institute, including the grades of the heads of sites, will be a matter on which the director, when appointed, will be invited to make proposals.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what esimate he has of the Agriculture and Food Research Council's long-term commitment to its breeding programmes on various crops at its institutes under the reorganisation programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The Agricultural and Food Research Council's document "Forward Policy", which was published in October 1985, explained that crop breeding together with crop production and crop protection research will be a component of the research programmes of the council's new arable crops and horticultural research institutes. I understand that the AFRC is considering ways of increasing industrial funding of its plant breeding programmes.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how the cuts in expenditure announced by the Agriculture and Food Research Council in September conform with the views of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food priorities board in relation to the Welsh Plant Breeding Station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: I understand that the reductions announced in September reflected reductions in work commissioned by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food from April 1986. They include some reductions in strategic work on crop physiology and grass cytogenetics and carried out with funds from the science budget. These changes in programmes are consistent with the interim advice given to my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by the priorities board for research and development in agriculture and food.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on the length of appointments at the Welsh Plant Breeding Station, Aberystwyth.

Mr. Walden: Although their employer is the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth, I understand that the staff of the Welsh Plant Breeding Station are appointed on the standard terms and conditions of service of the Agricultural and Food Research Service. For staff on permanent appointments the normal retirement age is 60. In addition, fixed-term appointments are made from time to time to meet short-term requirements.

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has redetermined the expenditure level for the Inner London education authority for the financial year 1986-87.

Sir Keith Joseph: In September I determined the expenditure level for the new ILEA for 1986-87 under the Rates Act at £902 million. The Inner London interim education authority subsequently applied to me for a redetermination of the expenditure level at £1,025 million. I have today informed the interim authority that I have redetermined the expenditure level at £915 million.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Licensed Premises (Exclusions)

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of people excluded from licensed premises for each of the years since the Licensed Premises Exclusion of Certain Persons Act 1980 has been in force.

Mr. Mellor: Records available to me show no orders made under the Licensed Premises (Exclusion of Certain Persons) Act 1980 in the period 30 June to 31 December 1980, 52 in 1981, 146 in 1982, 165 in 1983, and 198 in 1984. Corresponding information for subsequent years is not being collected centrally because the figures are thought to be incomplete.

Strip Searches

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons and in what circumstances male and female prisoners are strip-searched in Her Majesty's prisons; and what contribution such searches make to prison security.

Mr. Mellor: The following information relates to prisons in England and Wales. Responsibility for prisons in Scotland and Northern Ireland rests with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Strip searching is a routine but essential security procedure whose purpose is to detect small items of contraband, in particular weapons and drugs, which can be easily concealed about the body and cannot be detected by other methods of searching. The justification for this method of searching, distasteful though it is to staff and prisoners alike, is that staff do discover items such as drugs, razors, plastic knives sharpened into daggers, and scissors which would not otherwise be detected; and the knowledge that these searches take place undoubtedly has a deterrent effect.

Rule 39 of the prison rules 1964 provides that every prisoner, male and female and including those on remand, shall be searched on reception into prison and thereafter as the governor thinks necessary. Standing instructions provide that the search on reception should be a strip search, and other times at which prisoners may be strip searched include before and after court appearances, before and after visits, at the time of cell changes and during wing and cell searches.

National Drugs Unit

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the police officers to be seconded to the national drugs unit under the command of Mr. Colin Hewitt are to remain on the strength of their existing forces.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Metropolitan Police (Bullets)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Metropolitan Police have available for use any soft-nosed bullets, or bullets specifically designed to break up when passing within or through the target.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The round available to the metropolitan police is a semi-jacketed soft-nosed round which has been tested extensively and is not designed to break up on contact with human tissue.

Immigration Regulations (Detainees)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) why the hon. Member for Leyton has not yet received a substantive reply to his question tabled for priority written answer on 18 November relating to the latest available information on persons detained under immigration regulations; and when the hon. Member can expect to receive a substantive reply;

(2) if he will list all people held in detention under immigration regulations as of 10 December, where they are detained and the date they were first held.

Mr. Waddington: I wrote to the hon. Member on 5 December giving the information he had requested about those detained for over seven days on 19 November. For the reasons explained in that letter information about all those detained on 10 December is not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Remanded Persons

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were remanded in prison for medical reports in each of the last five years; and what proportion in each category eventually received a custodial sentence.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of persons remanded in custody awaiting trial, both male and female, at the latest date available.

Mr. Mellor: On 31 October 1985, about 7,860 untried males and 310 untried females were in prison department establishments in England and Wales. Information on how many were awaiting commencement of their trial is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of persons remanded in custody awaiting trial, at (a) Risley remand centre and (b) Brockhill remand centre at 31 December 1984, 30 June 1985 and the latest date available.

Mr. Mellor: The readily availble information is given in the table below. Information on how many were awaiting commencement of their trial is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Untried population of Risley and Brockhill remand centres
*Number of persons

	31 December 1984	30 June 1985	31 October 1985
Risley remand centre†	690	715	770
Brockhill remand centre	195	205	195

* Rounded estimates.
† Males and females.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will express the number of remands in custody for (a) indictable and (b) all offences excluding driving offences, as a percentage of the total number of persons charged with offences in each category, using figures for the latest available 12 months period.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the number of persons remanded and the type of remand is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", chapter 8 of the issue for 1984. In 1984, seven per cent. of those proceeded against at magistrates' courts for indictable offences and four per cent. of those proceeded against for indictable or non-motoring summary offences had been remanded in custody. Of those tried at the Crown court in 1984, 23 per cent. had been remanded in custody either on committal for trial or during proceedings at the Crown court.

Custodial Sentences

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he gives to magistrates on the exercise of their sentencing powers with particular regard to the imposition on adult males of custodial sentences for indictable offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The sentence to be passed in any particular case is a matter for the courts, subject to the requirements of statute. But the Department takes opportunities to draw to the attention of the magistrates' courts relevant guidance of the Court of Appeal, including guidance on the use of custody, and to emphasise the value of using non-custodial measures wherever possible. A general guide to sentencing powers and principles is provided in the handbook "The Sentence of the Court", a new edition of which will be published shortly.

Sentencing

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what extent, and by what means his Department monitors (a) the implementation by magistrates of guidance on sentencing and (b) the consistency of sentencing patterns in different parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: In compiling the published criminal statistics, the Department collects details of the sentences imposed in each petty sessions area. Consistency of practice is one of the factors we have in mind in analysing this information, though variations in the use of different sentences will in some measure be attributable to differences in local circumstances.

Mohammed Fasih

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the hon. Member for Stretford can expect a reply to his letter to the Minister of State, dated 29 August concerning Mohammed Fasih (F177119/2);

(2) when Mr. Mohammed Fasih was interviewed; when he first applied for political asylum; and if he will indicate the reasons for the delay in reaching a decision in this case.

Mr. Waddington: Mr. Fasih applied for asylum in August 1983, and was interviewed in respect of his application on 14 December 1983. It was necessary to make further inquiries about the information provided by Mr. Fasih in support of his application and this together with the general pressures on the Home Office refugee unit resulted in the long delay in dealing with the case, which I very much regret.

I shall write to the hon. Member very shortly with my right hon. Friend's decision on Mr. Fasih's application.

Political Asylum

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long on average an applicant for political asylum can expect to wait (a) before receiving a decision after an interview and (b) before an application for interview is granted.

Mr. Waddington: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. Interviews of applicants for asylum may be conducted throughout the country; the waiting time for such interviews at the Public Inquiry office at Croydon is currently about 12 weeks.

As regards the overall time taken to decide asylum applications, I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 18 November at column 10.

Young Persons (Tobacco Sales)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing the number of prosecutions, convictions, and the average fine imposed for such convictions, for offences under section 7 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: The information readily available to me, which may be incomplete, is published annually under offence classification 144 in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables", in the issue for 1984 in vol 1, table S1.1—for proceedings in magistrates' courts—and vol 4, table 4.4(B)—for amounts of fine. Amounts of fine have been published only from 1983.

Drug-dealing Offences

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to reform section 27 of the Misuse of Drugs Act to allow forfeiture orders for all drug-dealing offences.

Mr. Mellor: Legislation will be introduced very shortly to provide new powers for depriving convicted drug traffickers of the proceeds of their offences. These proposals are designed to remedy the deficiencies in section 27 of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 revealed by the "Operation Julie" case.

Probation Service

Mr. Charles Wardle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received the report of the working group reviewing the role of the probation service in prison establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The report of the working group has been presented to the Prison Board which broadly endorsed the principles of prisoner throughcare and shared working recommended by the working group. The report's implications are now being studied by my Department and, following consultation with the staff associations concerned, we intend to issue in the new year a joint circular to prison governors and chief probation officers on how the report's recommendations may be carried forward. Copies of the report are being sent to prison governors, chief probation officers and the relevant trade unions, and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Coroners (Supporting Staff)

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it is proposed to implement recommendations 92 and 93, supporting staff for coroners, of the Brodrick committee on death certification and coroners, Cmnd. 4810.

Mr. Hurd: The organisation and methods branch of the Home Office has reviewed the work of the coroner's officer. It is intended that its report should be circulated shortly and a copy placed in the Library. This supports the conclusions of the Brodrick committee that the work of the coroners' officers should be carried out by civilians. We shall therefore suggest that civilian staff from the police service should be appointed to fill these posts in place of police officers.

Controlled Drugs

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is now able to announce the Government's response to the report of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs on the security of controlled drugs.

Mr. Hurd: Yes. The Government very much welcome this report and are grateful to the council for the thorough manner in which it carried out its review of this important topic.

Work on the report began in 1981, prompted by growing concern over the theft of controlled drugs. The report, which was published in November 1983, examined the adequacy of the security arrangements for the production, carriage, storage and supply of licit controlled drugs, concentrating mainly on those most at risk, including manufacturers, wholesalers, community pharmacists, practitioners and hospitals.

The report made a number of recommendations for improving security. The Government have examined these very carefully in the light of widespread consultations with trade and professional organisations and of its other priorities within the overall strategy for tackling drug misuse. As a result of the report we shall be taking action to: (i) encourage the police to make greater use of their powers to exempt pharmacies from present statutory arrangements were adequate non-standard security precautions are taken; (ii) issue revised guidelines to NHS hospitals; (iii) carry out a review by the Home Office drugs inspectorate of the security arrangements at premises of persons and organisations licensed to possess, supply or manufacture controlled drugs; (iv) implement a range of detailed recommendations in the report.

The report also recommended that, for retail pharmacies and dispensing practices, the existing detailed statutory security requirements should be replaced by flexible guidelines adaptable to the needs of individual premises but subject to police agreement and, if necessary, to Home Office arbitration and enforcement; and that enforceable new guidelines on security should be issued to hospitals and the transporters of controlled drugs. In considering these recommendations, the Government have taken account of the change in circumstances since the preparation of the report, in particular that the threat to licit stocks now appears less severe. We have concluded that we would not be justified in giving priority at present to full implementation of these recommendations. However, we urge all doctors and pharmacists, when assessing the adequacy of their security arrangements, to take account of the advisory council's recommendations, and we shall continue to keep under close review the risk of theft or diversion from licit stocks.

Fourth Television Channel, Wales

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has concluded his review of the operation of the fourth television channel in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: On 23 August, we announced the establishment of this review and that I would be consulting the broadcasting organisations most directly concerned with the operation of the channel. I also indicated that I would be glad to receive the views of any other groups or individuals in Wales.

During the past three months we have received letters and submissions from 83 individuals and from 56 organisations in Wales. Of these, 110 favoured the continuation of the present arrangements and 29 expressed some degree of dissatisfaction with them. All the broadcasting organisations who submitted evidence favoured the present arrangements. Many organisations argued that the fourth channel in Wales had brought tangible benefits to Wales in terms of employment, cultural enrichment, the expansion of an independent production industry, and in strengthening the base of the Welsh language.

I have therefore concluded from the evidence of these submissions and the advice of the broadcasters that there is no widespread desire for change and that the continuation of the present arrangements for the channel is in the best interests of Wales and the Welsh language.

SCOTLAND

Child Leukaemia (Rosyth)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the incidence of child leukaemia in the vicinity of Rosyth naval base.

Mr. George Younger: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 12 December.

Tobacco-Related Disease

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the numbers of people under the age of 20 years in Scotland who use tobacco and the numbers of those people who show evidence of tobacco-related diseases.

Mr. John MacKay: Sample surveys conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys indicate that in Scotland about 187,000 people under the age of 20 smoke cigarettes. We have no information about the use of other tobacco products by this age group. There are no centrally held data to show how many of these persons are affected by tobacco-related diseases; but the adverse health effects of smoking are cumulative and would not begin to appear in the early years of smoking.

Controlled Drugs (Report)

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Government's response in Scotland to the report of the advisory council on the misuse of drugs on the security of controlled drugs.

Mr. George Younger: The Government very much welcome this report and we are grateful to the council for its thorough review of this important topic.

The Government have had widespread consultations with trade and professional organisations on the report's recommendations. There have been a number of developments since the report was published which have implications for the security of controlled drugs. In particular, since the threat to licit stocks of controlled drugs is not so severe at present as was feared likely several years ago, we have decided that we would not be justified in implementing in full the recommendations relating to the replacement of the existing statutory storage requirements on retail pharmacies and the issue of new enforceable guidelines to hospitals and the transporters of controlled drugs.

We shall however encourage community pharmacists and dispensing doctors to review their security arrangements in consultation with the police and to improve them wherever necessary, having regard to the council's recommendations. The police have power to exempt pharmacies from the present basic statutory arrangements where they have approved alternative security precautions. Many pharmacists are expected to be able to qualify for this exemption on the basis of the improved security procedures which they have already introduced. We wish to encourage full co-operation between the police and pharmacists in the possible use of these exemption procedures to effect better security of controlled drugs.

A range of procedural recommendations will also be commended to community pharmacists to prevent the diversion from their premises of licit supplies of controlled drugs for illegal use.

We shall also keep under review the adequacy of security arrangements in hospitals. In 1984 a circular was issued to health boards requesting security programmes to improve the effectiveness of these procedures. A recent review indicates that the security of drugs in pharmacies in NHS hospitals is currently sound. We shall continue to monitor the situation and additional advice on procedural aspects of drug security will, as appropriate, be issued.

Finally, the Home Office drugs inspectorate will carry out a review of the security arrangements at premises of persons and organisations licensed to possess, supply or manufacture controlled drugs.

Housing Association (Glasgow)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many housing association houses have been sold in Glasgow; and what is the total for each individual housing association.

Mr. Ancram: There were 601 sales of complete dwellings by housing associations in Glasgow City district up to 30 September 1985. Three of these sales were to sitting tenants; the remainder were sales of vacant properties, dwellings improved specifically for sale and houses sold by co-ownership societies to their members. The numbers sold by each housing association are listed below:

Arts Council

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report all the contributions made by the Scottish Arts Council to organisations or projects in the Shettleston constituency over the last five years.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to reply.

The Scottish Arts Council does not allocate its funds in terms of constituencies, but it gives extensive support to the arts in central Glasgow which benefit the neighbouring districts, including Shettleston, by providing productions close at hand including in some cases touring productions. Within the hon. Member's constituency, Mr. Oscar Marzaroli has received a grant of £1,500 for his film "Glasgow, the Changing City" and an artist-in-residence project has been jointly supported with the Scottish Development Agency.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. John Fraser asked the Paymaster General when he expects to be able to tell how many unemployed people in Lambeth are black.

Mr. Alan Clark: The collection of ethnic minority unemployment statistics was discontinued in August 1982 following the introduction of voluntary registration for employment at jobcentres. At present there are no immediate plans to introduce ethnic monitoring in Lambeth. The Department of Employment is to undertake pilot tests early in the new year to assess the feasibility of resuming the collection of these statistics.

The pilot tests will take place in the unemployment benefit offices in Stockton, Thornton Heath and Toxteth for a period of two weeks from Monday 6 January 1986. The benefit office staff will make a visual assessment of the ethnic origin of unemployed people and classify them under one of three broad categories: Afro-Caribbean, Asian and others. Participation will be voluntary. There will be a category for all those not wishing to be classified. Posters will be prominiently displayed to ensure that individuals are aware that an assessment of their ethnic origin is being made.

Mr. Wheeler asked the Paymaster General how many (i) employed and (ii) self-employed people there are in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Greater London; what information he has as to comparable figures for other European Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: In June 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, the number of employees in employment in the United Kingdom was estimated to be 21,292,000. In Greater London the figure was 3,466,000.

Details are not available from the Department's statistics on the number of self-employed in Greater London, but the provisional estimate of the number of self-employed in the United Kingdom in June 1985 was 2,620,000.

Figures on the number of employees and self-employed in other European Community countries are given on pages 125 and 124 of "Employment and Unemployment 1985", published by the statistical office of the European Communities, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Ron Leighton asked the Paymaster General if he will list the number of jobs lost in the London borough of Newham since 1979 analysed by the standard industrial classification.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job losses and job gains is not available from the Department's statistics. Net changes in employment can be given but, for areas smaller than regions, only for those dates when censuses of employment are taken.

The available information for the local authority district of Newham is from the June 1978 and the following September 1981 census of employment and is as follows. net changes between 1981 and 1984 will become available following publication of the September 1984 census in the spring of 1986.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, East of 9 December, he will provide information on the level of under-representation in particular work, the particular racial groups involved and geographical locations in such form as the information is available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1985]: Successive research studies have shown that people from the ethnic minorities are substantially under-represented in higher level occupations. In particular, a comprehensive survey of employment undertaken in 1982 for the Policy Studies Institute study "Black and White Britain" showed that the percentage of people in work classified as professional employers or managers were as follows:

	White	West Indian	Asian
Men	22	7	14
Women	9	1	7

This pattern is confirmed by the results of the EC labour force survey.

Against this general background, positive action initiatives under sections 37 and 38 of the Race Relations Act 1976 are based on judgments on the local level of under-representation in each individual case. In the case of section 37 this judgment is made by the training body concerned in the first instance. Action under section 38 is a matter for employers. No information is collected on the number of initiatives taken under this provision.

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Paymaster General if he will list the official engagements of the right hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer), then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of Employment, for 30 May 1984.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State's official engagements that day were as follows:

Approximately 11.30 am
Visit to water transfer station, Abbeystead, Lancashire.
Approximately 1 pm
Private meeting with the Reverend Lawrence Davies and local residents, Church Hall, St. Michael's on Wyre.
Approximately 2.15 pm
Visit to Royal Lancaster infirmary, Lancaster.

Accidents at Work

Mr. Hoyle asked the Paymaster General if he will give the total number of accidents at work and the total number of claims for compensation in the United Kingdom for the latest 12-month period for which figures are available; and if he will give such equivalent information as is available for areas most nearly corresponding to the towns and cities of Widnes, Bolton, Blackburn, Burnley, Norwich, Derby, Plymouth and Exeter, respectively.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The total reported number of people suffering a major injury or death as a result of work activity in the United Kingdom for 1984 was 19,899 (provisional figure).

The number of claims for industrial injury benefit over the period April 1982 to March 1983 was 345,000 for the United Kingdom.

This information is not available for the towns and cities referred to in the question.

TRANSPORT

Road Signs

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many road signs on the M1, M62, and A1, outside west Yorkshire, refer to Bradford; if he will ensure that Bradford is included on suitable new signs erected on these roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: There are no advance direction signs on the M1, M62 and A1 outside west Yorkshire which refer to Bradford.

The existing direction signs comply with departmental practice in terms of the destinations mentioned. The number of names on any one sign must be limited in the interests of road safety. If extra names are placed on new signs, it becomes necessary to add the same names to existing signs closer to the destination thus adding substantially to the cost of signing.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to publish specific road accident figures for the Christmas and new year period.

Mrs. Chalker: The Department's annual statistical report, "Road Accidents, Great Britain", covers accidents in the December period, including the holiday periods and the weeks preceding Christmas. The last such analysis, covering December 1984, is contained in the 1984 edition, pages 28 and 29, a copy of which is in the Library. The 1985 figures will appear in the next edition, to be published in the autumn of 1986. This will also include detailed figures for all public holidays.

Leeds

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Transport when his proposed study of Leed's road system will begin its work; and who will be on the study team.

Mrs. Chalker: I have yet to decide who will carry out the study of traffic problems in and around Leeds, but I shall write to my hon. Friend when I have decided on the terms of reference and the persons chosen to carry it out. I expect the study to begin early in 1986.

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in view of his rejection of both the western and eastern motorway links round the city of Leeds, he will impose a time limit on the deliberations of his study into the city's road traffic system.

Mrs. Chalker: I cannot yet say whether it would be right to impose a time limit on the study, but I am anxious to reach conclusions as soon as possible in order to end local uncertainty about our intentions.

M1 Lighting

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport why lights on the M1 south of Rotherthorpe service station, near junction 15, are unlit for a stretch of 400 yards.

Mrs. Chalker: The short section of temporary motorway lighting just south of Rotherthorpe service area was erected to illuminate a crossover for contraflow working during 1984. It was switched off shortly after completion of road works.

It will be removed when permanent lighting is installed to this section of M1, anticipated in 1986.

Motorway Delays

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has covering incidents of delays of 30 minutes over normal travelling time on the motorway system in 1985; and if he will list these in the Official Report.

Mrs. Chalker: The information on traffic delays available to the Department is held locally by out 36 motorway agent authorities. This information, which is in various forms and not necessarily comprehensive, could only be collated and listed in the Official Report at disproportionate cost. Should the hon. Member require information about delay at a specific location, perhaps he would write to me.

Air Agreements

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the bilateral liberalised air agreements he has made in 1985 and the agreements he hopes to make in 1986.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I shall answer this question shortly.

ENERGY

Sizewell Inquiry

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of his working time the inspector in charge of the Sizewell inquiry is required to spend on that inquiry; and if he is permitted to take on consultancy and other work during the time when his report is awaited.

Mr. Goodlad: The inspector was advised before his appointment that he could expect inquiry business to take much, if not all, of his time.

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much the inspector in charge of the Sizewell inquiry is being paid for his services.

Mr. Goodlad: Payment to the inspector is a confidential matter between the inspector and the Secretary of State for Energy. It is not customary to disclose such details.

Nuclear Safeguards

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions nuclear material has been withdrawn from safeguards under the tripartite safeguards agreement, Cmnd. 6730, March 1977; and in what proportion of the total number of such cases of withdrawal the material has been used (a) in nuclear warhead manufacture, (b) in the fabrication of submarine propulsion fuel, (c) for research purposes in a materials testing reactor and subsequently returned to safeguards within the civil stockpile and (d) sent to another sovereign state.

Mr. Goodlad: Details of withdrawals of material from safeguards under the tripartite safeguards agreement are supplied to the IAEA and Euratom on a strictly confidential basis. It would not be in the public interest to publish this information.

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he can now update his estimate of 5 July, Official Report, column 307, regarding the date of delivery of the main recommendations of the inspector in charge of the Sizewell inquiry; and to what the change in date is attributable.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's reply to the written quesion of the hon. Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 19 November, at column 101.

Plutonium

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether the United Kingdom has ever transferred plutonium to France for intended use in (a) Phoenix or (b) Super-Phoenix fast-breeder reactors.

Mr. Goodlad: Since 1968 there have been occasional transfers of plutonium from the United Kingdom to France for research on and production of fast-breeder reactor fuel. All the material was subject to international safeguards which provide for the plutonium to be used for peaceful purposes.

European Fast Reactor Collaboration

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the extent to which nuclear material supplied to France by the United Kingdom under the inter-governmental memorandum of understanding on European fast reactor collaboration could have been obtained by the French Government from French domestic sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: None. I expect transfers of nuclear material between partners in the collaboration to occur whenever required for the purposes of the collaboration and appropriate under the terms of the inter-governmental memorandum of understanding.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture and Food Research Council

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he proposes to advise the Agriculture and Food Research Council that it should invest in research on a broader range of crops; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline his policy concerning the effect of the European Economic Community common agricultural policy on the more extensive systems for poorer land; and if he has considered alternative crops and systems for the less productive areas of the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Telephones

Mr. Harrison asked the Lord Privy Seal what details or information is recorded on the number of faulty calls arising from the alteration of the new telephone system within the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Biffen: All faults reported by users of the Palace of Westminster telephone system are logged and analysed. The communications staff use this information to guide them towards any part of the telephone system which might require special investigation.

Mr. Harrison asked the Lord Privy Seal what was the overall cost on an annual basis of telephone alterations within the Palace of Westminster for the years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985, respectively.

Mr. Biffen: The cost of telephone alterations within the Palace of Westminster for the years 1979-85 are as follows:

1979	32,000
1980	42,825
1981	17,407
1982	32,013
1983	24,637
1984	103,090
1985*	984,016

* To 30 November 1985.

Notes

(1) The 1984 figure includes the cost of relocation of the Members' Message Bureau.

(2) The 1985 figure includes the cost of provision of the new Palace of Westminster telephone exchange.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax Payments

Mr. Dubs asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average annual income tax payment by persons (a) on the pay-as-you-earn scheme and (b) those outside the scheme.

Mr. Moore: It is estimated that the average income tax liability in 1985-86 for taxpayers of working age is (a) about £1,900 for those whose main source of income is subject to pay-as-you-earn and (b) about £2,250 for those whose main source of income is outside PAYE. These averages are for tax units, that is after aggregating income for married couples.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Inland Revenue will make it its policy when it uses electoral registers in machine readable form to disclose the fact that it is doing so to the Data Protection Registrar.

Mr. Moore: I confirm that the Inland Revenue will comply fully with the requirements of the Data Protection Act.

Mutual Organisations (Recognition)

Mr. Wilson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the policy of the Bank of England towards granting recognition under the Banking Act to mutual organisations.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Trustee Savings Bank

Mr. Wilson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current position regarding progress towards recognition of the Trustee Savings Bank under the Banking Act.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Securities (Taxation)

Mr. Wood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the Inland Revenue's practice regarding the tax treatment on sale and repurchase agreements in securities.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Proposals will be brought forward in next year's Finance Bill to provide that section 469 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970 will be treated as never having applied to sale and repurchase transactions involving overseas Government stocks denominated in foreign currency or Eurobonds provided that both parties to the transaction are dealers in securities.

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Maples asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council on 9 December.

Mr. Brooke: I represented the United Kingdom at this Council.

The Council had a further discussion of the Commission's annual economic report for 1985-86. The report was generally welcomed, although we and some other member states made it clear that we do not agree with every word in it. The report, as amended by some changes mainly to the country chapters in part 2, was adopted by the Council.

The Council continued its consideration of indirect tax harmonisation in the context of the internal market, it agreed in principle to the setting up of a high level group to consider the subject in greater depth.

The Council examined a progress report from the EC's economic policy committee on labour markets and employment. Its conclusion that labour market flexibility is a crucial element in tackling the problem of unemployment was broadly endorsed.

There was discussion also of aspects of the system of commercial interest reference rates for export credits; of tax measures to encourage co-operation between undertakings in different member states; and of Community competition rules and insurance. Consideration of these issues will be taken forward at future Councils.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Assisted Status Scheme

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, if he will detail, for the Birkenhead area, the number of firms, and the size of the grants paid to each of them, under the new extended assisted status scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I can now update the information given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State in his letter of 27 November.

A total of £449,000 has been offered to firms in the Birkenhead constituency. Three firms have been offered a total of £155,000 under the regional selective assistance scheme. A further sum of £294,000 has been offered to nineteen firms under the new regional development grants scheme.

I regret I would have difficulty in supplying any itemised information to the hon. Member. Payments of grant above £5,000 are published in due course in "British Business" but it would undermine the commercial confidentiality of the scheme to make information available in advance of publication.

Tobacco Sales

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the number of cigarettes, cigars and individual packets of other tobacco products which have been sold through retail outlets in Great Britain in each of the last 10 years; and if he will estimate what proportion of those sales may have been made to young people under the age of 16 years.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Multi-Fibre Arrangement

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will insist, in considering the draft European Economic Community negotiating mandate for the multi-fibre arrangement renewal negotiations, that a new multi-fibre arrangement should include a social clause.

Mr. Channon: This is one possibility that will need to be considered by the Community in its consideration of the draft mandate.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will insist that the Council of Ministers does not at its meeting on 16 December finally approve the draft European Economic Community negotiating mandate for the multi-fibre arrangement negotiations but defers any decision until after Spain and Portugal have become full members of the European Economic Community and until the United States negotiating position has become clear.

Mr. Channon: There is no possibility that the Council of Ministers will approve the draft negotiated mandate at its meeting on 16 December.

Association of Accounting Technicians (Exhibition)

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to the Association of Accounting Technicians to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Howard: Arrangements have been made for such an exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall to take place from 13 January to 17 January 1986.

Regional Aid

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans for reviewing regional aid budgets; and whether he will take steps to introduce a development agency for the North of England.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1985, c. 716]: I have no plans to review the regional aid budget in respect of England. Nor do I propose to introduce a development agency for the North of England. Such an agency would only impose a further layer of bureaucracy in the region. The region already has various bodies involved in promotional and inward investment activities including the North of England development council. INWARD and the Yorkshire and Humberside development association all of which are in receipt of Government funds.

ENVIRONMENT

Black Arts Groups

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to assist the establishment of black arts groups for live and recorded music and dance in areas with large ethnic groups.

Sir George Young: The urban programme continues to provide financial support to projects which develop music and dance skills, including those meeting the needs of ethnic minorities. I also hope shortly to commission an external research study to examine ways of increasing the opportunities for young black people to enter the music business.

Retail Superstore Developments

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if his Department has undertaken studies to assess the impact of large retail superstore developments in terms of (a) changes in consumer spending in a locality and (b) changes in employment in existing smaller retail outlets in a locality; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether his Department has undertaken studies to compile statistical evidence concerning the employment creation potential of large retail superstore developments in (a) inner city locations, and (b) out of town or suburban locations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: No Departmental studies relating to the impact of large retail developments have been published since 1978; but a number of useful studies on impact and employment implications have been carried out by outside organisations and individuals.

Homes Insulation Scheme

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps during Energy Efficiency Year to widen the scope of the homes insulation scheme to allow for the inclusion of cavity walls and extend the qualification level to those householders currently with 1 in to 2 in loft insulation.

Sir George Young: The scope of the homes insulation scheme is kept under review. The scheme was extended only last year to make grants payable to householders to top up existing insulation of 30 mm or less. My right hon. Friend has no plans at present further to widen or extend the scheme.

Housing Investment Programme Allocation (Waltham Forest)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available to him about the capacity of the private sector in Waltham Forest to provide rented accommodation to meet local needs before he decides on the housing investment programme allocation for 1986-87.

Sir George Young: In making the allocation, my right hon. Friend has regard to the housing investment submission made by the borough council, which included an estimate of the size of the private rented sector in the 1990s, and a copy of which is in the Library. However, the long-term contribution from private rented accommodation would be affected by future national measures to increase the supply of such accommodation.

Rate Support Grant

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost to his Department of computer time devoted to the implementation or monitoring of policy in relation to rate support grant, including targets and penalties, and rate limitation in each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87; what proportion of this work was undertaken outside the United Kingdom; and what proportion of the total costs this represented.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The estimated cost to this Department of bought-in computer time devoted to rate support grant including targets and penalties, and rate limitation in each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87 is as follows:

Annual expenditure including VAT

	£'000
1981-82	606·4
1982-83	615·2
1983-84	606·6
1984-85	547·5
*1985-86	536·0
†1986-87	513·0

* Estimated outturn.
† Projected.

All this expenditure is now incurred with computer bureaux in the United Kingdom. The Department uses its own internal computing facilities to process and monitor statistical data on local authority financial matters. The MINIS 6 report shows that for 1984-85 total computing costs accounted for about 30 per cent. of all current expenditure in the local government and finance policy directorate.

Defective Dwellings (Designation)

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which have given him notice under section 12(6) of the Housing Defects Act 1984 of a designation of a class of defective dwellings; if he will give the class of dwelling in each case, and the qualifying defect involved; and whether he has prevented, or intends to prevent, the coming into operation of that designation by serving a notice under section 12(7).

Mr. John Patten: Dudley metropolitan borough council has designated, under section 12(6) of the Act, certain dwellings with steel slag, semi-raft foundations. My right hon. Friend did not exercise his powers under section 12(7) and the designation came into effect on 25 November 1985. Leicester City council and the London borough of Hounslow have submitted to my Department proposed local designations of Smith houses and Bison wall frame system houses respectively. Neither designation was, in our view, legally valid and, for the avoidance of doubt, my right hon. Friend exercised his powers under section 12(7) to prevent them coming into operation.

Urban Programme (Resources)

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will explain, in respect of each authority invited to bid for traditional urban programme resources in 1986-87, the reasons why it has been included, setting out the information in the format of table 3 of his Department's Census information note No. 2.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

Planning Controls

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, when Her Majesty's Government expects to introduce legislation on planning controls on the basis of the "Lifting the Burden" White Paper.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend expects to present a Bill including these provisions shortly.

Gipsy Sites

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department will put in hand the review of policy for the provision of gipsy sites recommended by the Environment Committee.

Mr. Tracey: A consultation letter and memorandum has today been issued to local authority associations and other interested bodies in England. Similar arrangements are being made by the Welsh Office to consult local authority and other interests in Wales. I have also written to a number of hon. Members who have shown a particularly close interest in this subject in recent months, including my hon. Friend. Copies of the documents are being placed in the Library and in the Vote Office. I am aware that the slow progress on site provision is to a large extent a reflection of some difficult problems that local authorities have had to face. However, I am very anxious that the opportunity should be taken by those consulted not only to give their views on the main difficulties experienced by them, but also to put forward constructive and workable suggestions for dealing with these problems so that the review we are undertaking may have a fruitful and positive outcome.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that those sections of the scientific services of the Greater London council whose function is largely, or wholly, related to the services of the London Fire Brigade are retained as a single coherent unit.

Mr. Tracey: This is a matter for the London fire and civil defence authority in consultation, as necessary, with other successor bodies.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Tests (Christmas Island)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Defence what procedure will be adopted regarding the Australian Royal Commission findings and report on the health problems of test veterans involved in the Christmas Island nuclear tests.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Australian Royal Commission was tasked by the Australian Government to inquire into the tests carried out in Australia. The Government are studying its report and will discuss with the Australian Government those recommendations which affect the United Kingdom.

The United Kingdom health study undertaken by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) is examining whether harm has been caused to participants in all the United Kingdom atmospheric nuclear weapon tests, including those in the Christmas and Malden islands area. The NRPB expects to complete its study by October 1986.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Defence what procedure will be adopted to seek to establish that there are no genetic effects arising among any of the civilian or military personnel who participated in the Christmas Island nuclear tests.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my predecessor, the right hon. Member for Bosworth, (Mr. Butler) on 31 October 1984 (at columns 1120-1121).

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received from the Australian Royal Commission on the health problems which some of the test veterans are suffering allegedly due to their participation in the nuclear tests in the Christmas Island area.

Mr. Norman Lamont: None. The Australian Royal Commission was appointed by and has presented its report to the Australian Government, not to the British Government. It was tasked to inquire into the United Kingdom tests carried out in Australia in the period from 1952-1964 and had no concern with the tests conducted by the United Kingdom in the Christmas Island area. One of the Royal Commission's tasks was to inquire whether the health of persons was or had been adversely affected. The United Kingdom Government are studying the report.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many public servants will be involved in the strategic defence initiative participation office.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This matter is still under consideration.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of setting up and operating the strategic defence initiative participation office in (a) the current financial year and (b) 1986-87.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The precise structure of this office is still under consideration and so I am unable to provide the information requested.

Devonport Dockyard

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will take steps to prevent the managing director of Her Majesty's Devonport dockyard using his Department's official notepaper, envelopes and internal post to publicise a private company which he and other senior managers have formed to tender for the contract to manage Devonport dockyard from 1 April 1987; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the extent to which the involvement of serving Royal Navy officers in a private company tendering for the contract to manage Devonport dockyard from 1 April 1987 is consistent with the terms of Queen's Regulations so long as those officers continue to occupy their present positions;

(3) if he will make a statement on the extent to which the actions of the managing director of Devonport dockyard and other senior civil service managers, in forming a private company for the purposes of tendering for the contract to manage the dockyard after 1 April 1987, are consistent with the regulations governing the ethical conduct of civil servants, so long as those persons continue to occupy their present positions.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall answer shortly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Fraud (Private Prosecutions)

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Attorney-General what factors the Director of Public Prosecutions takes into account in deciding whether to take over private prosecutions in cases of alleged fraud; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 28 October 1985 at column 297 in which he outlined the general policy of the director in deciding whether to take over private prosecutions. He has no differing policy as regards fraud cases. I understand that the hon. Member has in mind a particular case and, if he provides me with the details of that case, I shall write to him.

Building Societies

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Attorney-General if the Government have reached a decision on the extent to which they propose that building societies and other institutions should be permitted to offer conveyancing services to the public; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth) on 6 December 1985 at column 354.

Illegitimacy

Mrs. Peacock asked the Attorney-General what plans he has to introduce legislation aimed at removing the stigma of illegitimacy from the law.

The Solicitor-General: In its report No. 118 on illegitimacy, published in 1982, the Law Commission made a number of recommendations aimed at removing the legal disadvantages suffered by illegitimate children. These recommendations have been accepted by the Government and will be implemented when resources become available. It is not likely that this will be during the current Session.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

U.N. Agencies

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs of what United Nations agencies the United Kingdom is currently in membership; and whether he has any plans to reconsider these.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom is currently a member of the following United Nations inter-governmental agencies.

FAO, Food and Agriculture Organisation
GATT, General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade
ITC, International Trade Centre
IAEA, International Atomic Energy Agency
ICAO, International Civil Aviation Organisation
IFAD, International Fund for Agricultural Development
ILO, International Labour Organisation
IMO, International Maritime Organisation
IMF, International Monetary Fund
ITU, International Telecommunication Union
UNESCO, United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organisation
UNIDO, United Nations Industrial Development Organisation
UPOV, International Union for the Protection of New Varieties of Plants
UPU, Universal Postal Union
WHO, World Health Organisation
WIPO, World Intellectual Property Organisation
WMO, World Meteorological Organisation

We participate actively in the policy making of all United Nations agencies and seek, where necessary, to improve the management of the their programmes. Our continued membership is dependent on a conviction that the programmes are soundly based and offer good value for money. In the case of UNESCO this is no longer so and the United Kingdom's membership will cease from 31 December 1985.

Argentina (Football Match)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether visas will be granted to the Argentine football team for the proposed friendly match with Scotland; and if he will offer any form of assistance.

Mr. Eggar: There are no special restrictions on the granting of visas to Argentine sportsmen, applications are considered on their merits and in accordance with the immigration rules.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations in the United Nations, towards strengthening the enforcement of the drive against international traffic in cocaine and opium-based drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The primary objective of the United Nations commission on narcotic drugs and the United Nations fund for drug abuse control to which we have pledged £2·5 million this year is to strengthen international control on the production, trafficking and abuse of all illicit drugs, including cocaine and opium based drugs. We play an active and constructive role in the work of these bodies and have, at this year's United Nations General Assembly, co-sponsored resolutions which call for the drawing up of a third United Nations convention, to deal with all aspects of international drug trafficking, and the convening of a world conference on drugs in 1987. We will continue to encourage and support increased and concerted co-operation worldwide in efforts to control drug abuse and trafficking.

Libya

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will make a statement on relations with Libya.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 11 November at column 59.

British Embassy (Moscow)

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what will be the additional annual cost to public funds of replacing the 79 Soviet citizens working in the United Kingdom embassy and residences by United Kingdom citizens.

Mr. Eggar: The information required will take some time to obtain. I shall reply as soon as posible.

Falkland Islands-Chile (Air Link)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has recently considered for the establishment of air links between the Falkland Islands and Chile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None. But I understand that the Falkland Islands development corporation has had contacts with commercial civil aviation interests. In the context of developing the tourist potential of the islands.

Immigration

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applicants for entry clearance in Bangladesh from the re-applicants' queue are interviewed on average each week.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985, c. 422]: Thirty two.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many interviews are conducted in one day by an entry clearance officer at each post in the Indian sub-continent.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985 c. 422]: The information is as follows:

	Interviews
Dhaka	6
New Delhi	4·4
Bombay	5·25
Calcutta	5
Islamabad	4·2
Karachi	4

These are average figures, which refer to the numbers of applicants seen, and reflect the different categories of entry clearance applications that are lodged. Certain posts receive more multiple family applications, while others receive more applications from husbands, fiancés(e)s, visitors and students, where there is only one principal applicant.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applicants for entry clearance for settlement are interviewed on average each week at each post in the Indian sub-continent.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985, c. 422]: The information is as follows:

	Numbers
Dhaka	278	(including 6 husbands/fiancé(e)s who are not granted immediate settlement on arrival)
New Delhi	44	(including 27 as above)
Bombay	46	(including 15 as above)
Calcutta	3
Islamabad	209	(including 22 as above)
Karachi	7	(including 3 as above)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of applications for entry clearances for settlement in the Indian sub-continent is in the reapplications queue.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985, c. 422]: Thirty six per cent., including husbands and fiancé(e)s.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applicants in Bangladesh for entry clearance for settlement have been allocated to the reapplicants' queue.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985, c. 422]: As at 31 October—5,296.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any proposals for change to housing benefit regulations.

Mr. Newton: I have today sent for consultation to the Social Security Advisory Committee and the local authority associations draft regulations to exclude from eligibility for housing benefit people who are provided by local authorities with accommodation under the National Assistance Act 1948, the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968, or the National Health Service Act 1977.

Such provision has always been regarded as properly the responsibility of local authorities as part of their social services function. The Government do not regard it as appropriate for the housing benefit scheme to subsidise local authorities in the discharge of these responsibilities.

Legionnaires' Disease

Mr. Butler asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to prevent further outbreaks of Legionnaires' disease in hospitals and other public institutions, and in private buildings such as hotels to which the public has access; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: A circular on Legionnaires' disease and hospital water systems was issued to all health authorities in 1980, a copy of which is in the Library. Health authorities were reminded earlier this year of this guidance and the measures which should be taken to reduce the chances of an outbreak occurring.

It is hoped that the committee of inquiry into the outbreak of Legionnaires' disease in Stafford will also make recommendations on action necessary to reduce the danger of future outbreaks originating in other buildings and elsewhere in its final report, expected by the end of March 1986. My Department will be liaising with other Departments on the follow up action resulting from the Committee's report.

Management Consultants and Accountants

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total expenditure by his Department in 1979-80 and each succeeding year on management consultants or accountants and other firms undertaking similar work, at constant prices.

Mr. Fowler: Expenditure on external consultancies was:

	*£ thousand
1979-80	626
1980-81	502
1981-82	854
1982-83	1,437
1983-84	3,784
1984-85	7,726

* 1984-85 prices.

The substantial increase in recent years is mainly in connection with the several large computer projects being planed by my Department as part of the social security operational strategy.

Smoking

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the measures to implement Her Majesty's Government's plan to discourage teenagers from smoking.

Mr. Whitney: The Government are funding a £1 million campaign to test the effectiveness of media advertising in influencing teenagers against smoking. The campaign, based on extensive research, will run for 12 months in the Tyne-Tees and TV South television regions. It will be carefully evaluated.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria Her Majesty's Government will use to assess the effectiveness of the campaign to discourage smoking.

Mr. Whitney: The campaign will be evaluated by an independent research company using large-scale surveys of teenagers in the two pilot television regions and in two control regions. Factors to be used in gauging its effect will include movements in smoking prevalance and smoking behaviour, changes of attitude toward smoking and penetration of the advertising among the target audience.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to seek to restrict advertising and promotion of tobacco.

Mr. Whitney: Discussions about a new voluntary agreement governing the advertising and promotion of tobacco products are being held with the tobacco industry.

Vaccinations

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of doses of pertussis vaccine and triple vaccine currently held in stock by his Department; and what is the value of the stock.

Mr. Whitney: Supplies of these vaccines are obtained by the National Health Service through the normal trade distribution channels. The Department does not hold stocks.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, in each five-year period since 1964, what was the number of yellow card reports made to the Committee on Safety of Medicines regarding sudden death, within 48 hours after (a) vaccination against whooping cough and (b) other vaccinations; in each of these periods, how many vaccinations against whooping cough were carried out and what was the number of other non-whooping cough vaccinations; and what investigations were made by the Committee on Safety of Medicines as to the possibility of a causal relationship between vaccination and the reported deaths.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is set out in the table. The Committee on Safety of Medicines has a policy of examining clinical and pathological data relating to deaths reported as associated with whooping cough or other vaccines. In addition, the committee has considered the general issue of the safety of vaccination on a number of occasions since 1964. Its investigations have not lead the committee to attribute a causal relationship between vaccination and sudden death.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Committee on Safety of Medicines or the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation has had any discussions with the US authorities about the efficacy and safety of the whooping cough vaccine.

Mr. Whitney: Neither committee has had formal discussions with the United States health authorities about whooping cough vaccine, but they are kept informed of and take into account developments in the United States of America and other countries.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation has made with its investigation of the Japanese whooping cough vaccine; whether it has received the report of the World Health Organisation trials; whether any information is available to it as to whether the Japanese have found evidence of any deaths or side effects resulting from the vaccine since they started using it in 1981; when it plans to have completed its investigation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The joint committee has studied the published papers concerning the Japanese whooping cough vaccine. It noted that among the limited numbers of children to whom this vaccine was administered the incidence of serious neurological reaction and sudden infamt death syndrome (SIDS) was minimal. However, administration of this vaccine was limited mainly to children who were aged 2 years or older and who were therefore out of the age range when coincidental serious neurological disease or SIDS occur.

The World Health Organisation has not directly organised formal trials of new whooping cough vaccines. The trials of a Japanese vaccine in Sweden by the Swedish Government are still in progress and no results have been published.

The Committee on the Development of Vaccines and Immunological Products (CDVIP) of the Medical Research Council (MRC) at the beginning of 1985 set up a sub-committee to consider improved forms of whooping cough vaccine. Products from Japan, Canada and the Centre for Applied Microbiological Research of the Public Health Laboratory Service have been considered by this sub-committee. As soon as a suitable candidate vaccine is identified and sufficient supplies of this vaccine are assured, carefully conducted field trials on the vaccine will be mounted in this country.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of whooping cough vaccinations carried out in each year since 1964.

Mr. Whitney: The available information is set out in the table.

Vaccine Damage (Pension)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has made any estimate of the cost of providing a pension scheme comparable to the industrial injuries scheme for all those who have received vaccine damage payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Whooping Cough

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in the last four-year cycle, how many children entered hospital because of the severity of their whooping cough; and what was the estimated average annual cost of hospital treatment for these children.

Mr. Whitney: The estimated numbers for England are as follows, based on the hospital in-patient inquiry (a 10 per cent. sample of discharge records from National Health Service, non-psychiatric hospitals), a copy of which is in the Library:

Children under 15 with a Main Diagnosis of Whooping Cough

Year	Number
1980	2,280
1981	2,580
1982	5,800
1983	2,550

Information on the cost of treatment is not held centrally.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated annual cost of the whooping cough immunisation programme and of the publicity campaign that supports it.

Mr. Whitney: Information on the cost of immunisation programmes is not held centrally. The current whooping cough publicity campaign has been funded by a special Government grant to the Health Education Council of £483,000, to which the council has added £100,000 from its own funds. Information is not held centrally on the cost of local campaigns mounted by individual health authorities.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the death rate per hundred thousand and the number of deaths of children under one year old caused by whooping cough in the last four year period for which figures are available and for each preceding four year period as far back as 1955; and if he will give figures showing the average take up of whooping cough vaccination in each of the four year periods.

Mr. Whitney: The available information is shown in the table.

Infant Deaths

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many sudden infant deaths have been in each year since 1964; and if he will express these as a proportion of all infant deaths in each year.

Mr. Whitney: The term "sudden infant death syndrome" was not widely used before about 1971. In 1971, the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys introduced a special code to identify these sudden infant deaths also known as "cot deaths". Data before 1971 would therefore not be reliable, and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

The available information is given in the table. The figures relate to deaths of children under one year of age registered in England and Wales, where the term "sudden unexpected death in infancy" or "cot death" or a similar term was mentioned anywhere on the death certificate, regardless of whether it did or did not appear as the underlying cause of death. Infant deaths which may have been sudden and unexpected, but where no mention of "sudden" or "cot" death was made on the death certificate, cannot reliably be separately identified.

Sudden infant deaths: Numbers of mentions and as a percentage of all deaths under one year of age England and Wales 1971-1984

Year	Number of sudden infant death mentions	Percentage of all infant deaths
1971	489	3·56
1972	771	6·17
1973	922	8·08
1974	932	8·91
1975	912	9·61
1976	879	10·55
1977	911	11·62
1978	971	12·32
1979	1,079	13·19
1980	1,222	15·47
1981	1,265	18·02
1982	1,332	19·66
1983	1,315	20·61
1984	1,242	20·57

There is evidence that the use of the term sudden infant death has increased in recent years as a fashion of certification, rather than a reflection of increased frequency of this disease. This probably accounts for the rise in the number of mentions in the table. The percentage that these mentions form of all infant deaths has risen even more repidly due to the diminution in the number of deaths from other causes during the period 1971-1984.

Social Security Payments

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those social security payments which have been increased either not at all or only once since 1979; and where there has been one increase, if he will give the time that had elapsed since the previous increase and the size of the percentage increase that was made.

Mr. Newton: The following social security payments have not been increased since 1979:

Death Grant.
Maternity Grant.
Age addition to retirement pension (for over 80's).
Blind addition to supplementary benefit (for over 80's).
Christmas bonus.
Industrial death benefit (for relatives other than widows).
Death benefit under the pneumoconiosis, byssinosis and miscellaneous diseases scheme.

There are no social security payments which have been increased only once since 1979.

Vaccine Damage Payments

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children have now received the £20,000 vaccine damage payment.

Mr. Whitney: One award of £20,000 has been made and will be paid shortly.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for each year since 1979 (a) the number of vaccine damage payments made, (b) the real value of each payment based on 1979 prices, (c) the total cost to his Department of the payments made, in real terms based on 1979 prices, (d) the total cost to his Department of the payments scheme, including the cost of the payments and the administrative cost; and if he will give the figures in prices current at the time, in 1979 prices and in 1985 prices;

(2) what has been the total cost of the vaccine damage payments scheme since its inception; and if he will give separate figures for the cost of the payments and the administrative costs.

Mr. Whitney: The following table gives the information available. Information on cost could not be related to each of the payments concerned according to the date of payment except at disproportionate expense. Instead, the payments have been revalued by the average GDP deflator for that year.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications there have been for the £20,000 vaccine damage payment; and what is the forecast departmental expenditure for vaccine damage payments in the current financial year and the subsequent three years.

Mr. Whitney: Thirty-four claims were received in the period between 18 June, when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services announced the increase in the level of payment for successful new claims, and 18 November. It is estimated that payments will total £240,000 in the current financial year. The present estimates for expenditure in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 are £360,000, £420,000 and £450,000 respectively. However, the incidence of expenditure cannot be reliably predicted and the estimates will be subject to revision from time to time.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total number of applications for vaccine damage payments since the inception of the scheme in 1979; how many have been refused by his Department; how many have been rejected by tribunals; and how many have been successful.

Mr. Whitney: As at 8 November 1985, 3,139 claims had been received. An initial decision on 3,133 of these claims has been made by the Secretary of State, resulting in 397 awards and 2,736 disallowances. Of the 1,373 disallowances which have been reviewed by a vaccine damage tribunal, 415 cases resulted in an award and in the remaining 958 cases the disallowance was confirmed.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will categorise the number of rejected applications for vaccine damage payments according to the reason given for their rejection.

Mr. Whitney: Up to 8 November 1985, the latest date for which statistics are available, the information is given in the following table.

Claims for vaccine damage payments: disallowances

	Numbers
Disallowances on non-medical grounds	132
Disallowances on medical grounds
Disablement of 80 per cent. or more accepted but vaccination not accepted as cause	1,629
Disablement less than 80 per cent. and vaccination not accepted as cause.	227
Disablement less than 80 per cent. but vaccination accepted as cause	14
Disablement substantially less than 80 per cent., cause not fully investigated	319

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each of the last three years for which figures are available, the number of cases heard by each of the vaccine damage tribunals; and if he will give the percentage that was accepted by each tribunal in each year.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is as follows.

* Up to 8 November.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the reply, Official Report, 26 November, columns 545-6, he will categorise the vaccine damage payments made for a vaccination stated by the claimant to have included a pertussis element, according to the year in which the parents recalled that the child was vaccinated.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that this information is not readily available and could be extracted only at disproportionate expense.

Tobacco-related Diseases

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the numbers of people under the age of 20 years who use tobacco and the numbers of those people who show evidence of tobacco-related diseases.

Mr. Whitney: It is estimated that in Great Britain some 1,600,000 people under the age of 20 smoke cigarettes. The effects of smoking are cumulative and manifest themselves over time. No statistics are available on the numbers of people under 20 years old who show evidence of tobacco-related diseases.

Nursing Staff (Physical Attacks)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the incidences of serious physical attacks on National Health Service nursing staff for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not held centrally. The Government are concerned about the level of crime in public life generally and a working party of the Health Services Advisory Committee of which officers of my Department are members is currently looking into the question of violence in the National Health Service. They are conducting a survey in a sample of health districts.

I look forward to considering the working party's report which is expected early next year.

NHS Staff (Compensation)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now publish the outturn figures for 1984-85 for compensation payments to National Health Service staff in respect of redundancies and early retirements, in the manner described in the Government's reply to the First Report from the Social Services Committee of Session 1984-85, breaking down the figures to distinguish between competitive tendering and other cases.

Mr. Hayhoe: The out-turn figures for 1984-85 are as follows:

	Number of cases	Compensation cost £	Total cost including superannuation £
Competitive tendering
New cases	319	359,000	1,213,000
Continuing cases	Nil	Nil	Nil
Other cases
New cases	1,445	3,827,000	13,522,000
Continuing cases	5,576	11,915,000	24,972,000

NHS (Efficiency Scrutinies)

Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether more National Health Service efficiency scrutinies will be undertaken.

Mr. Whitney: Efficiency scrutinies, along the lines of those undertaken in Whitehall were successfully extended to the National Health Service in 1982. Nine studies have already been published and health authorities have been given advice and policy instructions on the implementation of scrutiny recommendations. The studies identified more efficient methods of working and show that many millions of pounds can be saved which can be re-directed to improving patient care.

Scrutinies play an important role in the general drive for achieving value for money in the National Health Service. In order to build on the success of the first programme of studies, I have agreed with regional health authority chairmen that more scrutinies should be undertaken.

Subjects for study already agreed are:

Study	Sponsoring region
Maximising revenue from private and amenity beds in the NHS	Mersey
Creditor payment arrangements (improving efficiency and reducing costs in the way health authorities pay their bills)	Wessex
Ways of maximising revenue and generating additional income for the NHS aids and appliances in the community	North Western
Improving efficiency in organisation, ordering and distribution	Oxford
Liaison between the NHS and the private sector of medicine	Yorkshire
The cost of telephone services in hospitals	Trent
Equipment maintenance contracts (getting value for money on the maintenance of Health Service equipment)	Yorkshire*
Inventory management of medical gas cylinders (improving existing arrangements and examining alternatives)	South Western
Printing and distribution/publications and stationery in the NHS	Mersey

* Assisted by Mersey.

Some of these scrutinies have begun—the remainder will start soon. Other potential subjects for study are being considered with a view to there being a rolling programme of scrutinies as part of the drive for greater efficiency and economy in the National Health Service.

Child Abuse

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of children who died as a result of injuries inflicted by parents in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.

The numbers of offences recorded as homicides in which the victim was the son or daughter of the suspect is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (table 4.4 of the issue for 1984, Cmnd. 9621). Of the 67 such offences in 1984, 65 of the children were aged under 16.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 88

SESSION 1985–86

2nd December—13th December 1985

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
